Conservative Members have raised matters of great concern to us. The hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw) used the words, "If 10 per cent. of what hon. Members say was true". After the debate, I shall happily give him documents containing details of the cases that have been brought to my attention so that he can look into them. The details are true. I am sure that we shall be happy to put right and deal with any of the hon. Gentleman's complaints about Conservative councils.

I have been pleased to have the opportunity to raise this matter. I thank all those hon. Members who took part in the debate.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved,

That this House continues to recognise the importance of local government as a vital part of the British democratic system.

Division (3 December)

2.29 pm

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. This matter arises out of lies that have been printed in the Wapping newspapers and one lie in particular that relates to yourself, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and to myself. We need to put the record straight.

This morning in The Sun and The Times—significantly only those two Murdoch newspapers — there was reference to a delayed Division at 7.30 pm on Wednesday. The Sun stated that I had been in the Lobby when the Deputy Serjeant at Arms, Major Peter Jennings, hurried over and turfed me out. The Sun referred to the "'Beast of Bolsover' Dennis Skinner", and said that Major Jennings turfed some of us out with his sword. I never saw the Deputy Serjeant at Arms.

The Sun also referred to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. It said:

"ignoring Deputy Speaker Harold Walker who was trying to start the Wednesday night discussion."

I have had a word with you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, as you know, and you have confirmed that you were not in the Chair on Wednesday night when that alleged incident took place.

Furthermore, in The Times newspaper, the other half of the Wapping press, it said that they—the people in the Lobby—

"succeeded in lopping 10 minutes off the Alliance's defence debate."

That suggests that that Division must have taken about 22, 23, or 24 minutes. The usual time is 12, 13, 14, or 15 minutes. I can see that my hon. Friends are nodding in agreement with that, confirming that that is the usual time for a Division to last.

Bearing these points in mind, I met the Deputy Serjeant at Arms this morning and asked him the following questions, which I would like to put on the record in case any of us, including you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, would like to take up the matter with the newspapers. It is important that this matter is put on the record.

I wrote:

"Dear Major Jennings,

I am enclosing cuttings from the "Sun" and the "Times" (5/12/86). I ask you to confirm in writing that you never saw me in the Voting Lobby.

I would like you to also confirm that you told me and Stan Orme in the Tea Room that you never saw me.

Will you also confirm that the Official Report shows that the Vote began at 7.32 p.m. and the next debate began at 7.47 p.m. despite a point of order having been raised in the Chamber before the debate took place which suggests that the total time of the division was 14 minutes only."

I have now received a reply from the Deputy Serjeant at Arms in which he says:

"Dear Mr. Skinner,

Many thanks for your letter of today's date.

I can confirm each of the points made in your letter. Since you did not see me either, you may care to know that I did not (of course) draw my sword!"

It is becoming a bit tiresome for newspapers like The Sun and The Times to be printing downright lies about what is happening in this place. The Deputy Serjeant at Arms has confirmed that he did not see me in the Lobby. The Sun newspaper suggested that you were in the Chair, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and you were not. The Times newspaper said that the Division lopped ten minutes off the subsequent Liberal debate and that was also untrue. The points have been confirmed by the Deputy Serjeant at Arms and it is high time that we made it clear to those newspapers that we expect them on occasions to make mistakes, but downright lies is another matter.

I can only conclude that perhaps the reason why these comments were printed in the first place is that they were tipped off by the dirty tricks department of the alliance parties.

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Few of us in the Chamber would be surprised at hearing that The Sun and The Times print lies. They have been doing that for a number of years. However, I have just been telephoned on precisely the same matter by another newspaper which said that it understood that I was also in the Lobby when the Serjeant at Arms drew his sword. I was not even in the House of Commons at the time. I was away from the House with, of course, the permission of the Whips. I should like to know, along the lines mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner), what action you propose to take.

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark and Bermondsey): Further to the point of order. I have no knowledge of where the information came from. I have asked my hon. Friend the Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace). We were the two tellers for our party at that vote. So that there can be no confusion, my clear recollection is that there was a discussion between the Clerk at the Table and the then sitting Deputy Speaker, not yourself, about what should be done about the delay that was regarded as going on in the Lobby. There was an order—I have not checked in the Official Report—by the then Deputy Speaker, that the Serjeant at Arms should inquire as to what was causing the delay. The Serjeant at Arms on duty began that exercise. Subsequent to that, the hon. Members remaining in the Lobby who were, to my recollection, all Labour Members, including the hon. Member who was mentioned—[HON. MEMBERS: "He was not there."] A group of Members, all Labour Members, had stayed in the Lobby. They then came out quickly. I would guess that there was a delay of some minutes, but it was certainly not as long as 10 minutes. There was the unusual occurrence of the Deputy Speaker in the Chair requesting the Serjeant at Arms to inquire as to what was causing the delay. The story is probably partially accurate and partially inaccurate——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. The hon. Gentleman is seeking to turn this into a matter of debate. We cannot have that. The matter has gone sufficiently far for me to express a view on it.

I should say to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) that I cannot know, nor do I think that it would be sensible for me to seek to find out, how the story came to be in the newspapers to which reference has been made. I am grateful to the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) for drawing it to my attention. I was unaware of the report in the newspapers until he mentioned it to me. Indeed, so far as there is a reference to myself, I shall have to reflect on that point to see whether there is any need for me to pursue it further. The hon. Gentleman has done the House a service by drawing it to our attention and I hope that the publishers will take full account of what he and others have said this afternoon.

Homelessness (Newham)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Peter Lloyd.]

2.37 pm

Mr. Ron Leighton (Newham, North-East): This Christmas will be a nightmare for hundreds of Newham people. While others gather around the hearth in the warmth of their homes, surrounded by the good cheer of the festive season, the hundreds of homeless people in Newham will endure a nerve-wracking time in miserable, unhygienic and often dangerous bed and breakfast accommodation. Government policy has led to a frightening and rapidly deepening crisis in the borough. If the Minister visits Newham, the housing conditions he will see will turn his stomach. It must concern everyone, including the Government. That is why I want to bring Newham's position to the attention of Parliament today.

Our housing stock is in a worse condition than that of any other London borough. The number of unsatisfactory dwellings—unfit, lacking basic amenities and in need of substantial repairs—is 46,923. That is higher than in any other London borough. Most of Newham's housing, 58 per cent., is in the private sector and most was built before the first world war. While the proportion of private properties which are unfit in London as a whole fell from 10 per cent. to 6 per cent. between 1979 and 1985, in Newham during the same period the proportion actually increased from 21 per cent. to 36 per cent. The Minister should readily recognise from that that Newham is different and that it is a special case where it is the Government's urgent duty to take action before there is a disaster. The shortage of dwellings is severe. I have been shocked and appalled by the horrifying increase in homelessness which is now an acute cause of pain and suffering and hangs like a pall of misery over hundreds of my constituents this Christmas.

Because the Government have not allowed councils to build more homes but have forced them to sell homes instead, often to people for whom private builders would have found it profitable to build houses, the inevitable has happened — homelessness has risen dramatically. Homelessness is worse in London than in the rest of the country, but it has grown faster in Newham than in the rest of London. Between 1981-82 and 1984-85, the number of households accepted as priority need homeless in London rose by 42 per cent., but over the same period the figure for Newham rocketed 128 per cent. Again the Minister will see that Newham has special needs and requires special treatment.

In 1985-86, of the 1,400 dwellings let by Newham council, excluding transfers between tenants, 810 or 58 per cent. went to priority need homeless. In the current year, the increase in homelessness has been so dramatic that projections based on the first six months, from April to September, show that homeless cases will take 1,100 dwellings or 79 per cent. of the total. Housing the homeless is rapidly reaching the stage at which it is taking up all available council house lettings so that there is no room for rehousing from the waiting list of more than 11,000 people. Indeed, "waiting list" is now an inaccurate description as most of those people will never be housed by the council however long they wait. Does the Minister appreciate the heartache and misery that that causes and that is brought to me whenever I hold a surgery?

The Government must take the major share of the blame for the crisis. Housing has borne the biggest and deepest cuts in public expenditure and this has been the result. Newham's housing investment programme allocation has been more than halved in real terms since the Government took office—from nearly £45 million in 1979-80 to £21·7 million in the current year. This has resulted in severe reductions in the building of new homes and in repairs and renovation of existing homes. If new building had been allowed to continue at the average completion rate achieved under the Labour Government between 1974 and 1979, Newham would have completed more than 2,000 additional new homes between 1979 and the end of the current financial year.

Our housing is the worst in London and, as more and more of it falls below acceptable standards, the pressure for decent housing increases while the level of council stock falls. The Government repeatedly talk about the right to buy, but this adds not one house to the housing stock. By reducing the number of houses for rent, it exacerbates the problem. As of 31 October 1986, 3,365 council homes had been lost to the public sector in Newham through the right to buy. Council homes are being sold at a rate of 400 a year—far more than the borough's limited resources allow it to build to replace them. Inevitably, they have been the better quality houses, leaving only the older stock for people dependent on the council for rehousing, so the quality as well as the quantity of homes available for the homeless is being reduced.

Another specific problem of the public sector in Newham is the 108 tower blocks of more than eight storeys. Many of those blocks are reaching an age at which their services, particularly their heating and lifts, must be renewed. Service renewal and remedial works constitute a major capital expenditure which amounted to some 15 per cent. of Newham's HIP allocation last year and is predicted to rise to some 25 per cent. this year. Perhaps the most poignant of Newham's special problems is the tragic, ill-fated Ronan Point, of which the Minister will know, and eight similar blocks. All those blocks have had to be emptied because they are unsafe. Even if it were possible to bring them back into use, it would cost some £65 million—far in excess of Newham's resources. A further three tower blocks are now being emptied. The findings in the dismantling of Ronan Point fully justify that, but it has led to the loss of 1,338 dwellings. The rehousing of those tenants, plus the loss of relets and rents from those blocks, has resulted in a dramatic worsening of Newham's housing plight. The Government must recognise that special factor.

Mr. Nigel Spearing (Newham, South): Is my hon. Friend aware that the dismantling of Ronan Point will be completed by January and that, on present evidence, the final evaluation in the scientific report will probably be that it will not be possible to rehouse people in blocks of the Ronan Point design — approximately six of the blocks—so some 600 flats are likely to be lost for ever?

Mr. Leighton: My hon. Friend makes a valuable point and I pay tribute to the way in which he has followed up the Ronan Point story over the years. The Government must recognise that special factor.

One of the commonest causes of homelessness is overcrowding. A family splits or friends are no longer willing to accommodate two households under one roof. That is especially the case with young marrieds, crushed in with relatives, who start to have children. In the whole of England and Wales only three local authorities have more overcrowding than Newham.

Unemployment is undoubtedly a major factor in causing family breakdowns. The additional stresses and strains caused by financial hardship, the loss of morale and other problems resulting from unemployment can undermine the endurance of people living in overcrowded and unfit accommodation. Since 1979 the jobless figures in Newham have risen by 300 per cent. In 1979 the figure was 6,000 but now it is nearly 20,000. The male unemployment rate is officially 21·3 per cent.

The cheapest house to buy locally costs £40,000 and the mortgage payments are well beyond the average wage. The supply of privately rented accommodation has virtually dried up and what little is left often consists of the poorest quality housing with the worst conditions and overcrowding. Indeed, poor conditions and lack of security of tenure will make over 200 households homeless from private rented accommodation in Newham in the current year.

The borough's age profile is changing and the numbers in the age group 16 to 29 are growing quickly, as are their housing needs. All these factors have led to an alarming rise in the number of households placed in bed and breakfast hotels—the council's last resort. That number is increasing at an accelerating rate. Between January and October of this year the number of Newham's hotel homeless rose by 180 per cent. Over Christmas 1984, Newham had one household in a hotel, but by January 1986 that number had risen to 107. Since then, the numbers have exploded, reaching 300 in early October this year. A total of 375 families in hotel accommodation is projected by next April.

Unless something is done now the crisis will quickly get worse. Already, bed and breakfast hotels across London are packed full and councils like Newham find it impossible to fulfil their statutory duty and are having to turn homeless families away.

The number of household nights in bed and breakfast accommodation has increased dramatically as each household has had to wait longer in such accommodation before being offered permanent housing. In 1981, the number of household nights was 588 and that increased to 25,863 in 1985. It is projected to be around an astonishing 100,000 in 1986. The cost of hotel charges to Newham council has risen from £26,500 in 1983-84 to an estimated £1·75 million this year. That is a burden the council can ill afford.

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): No doubt my hon. Friend is aware that it is projected that, next year, the borough could be spending about £3 million on charges for bed and breakfast. That figure, attracting the normal grant from Government, could sustain a building programme of around 2,000 units. Surely this is the economics of the madhouse.

Mr. Leighton: That is absolutely right and I am extremely grateful to my hon. Friend for underlining that point.

My hon. Friend will be aware that there are very few hotels in the east end of London. Therefore, only about 50 of the 300 households needing such accommodation can be placed in Newham; the other 250 have to be placed further afield, as far away as Paddington, Bayswater, Hounslow and Southend.

These constituents are, by definition, in "priority need". They are people who already have more than their fair share of problems. To be physically removed from friends and their communities together with the long journeys that that involves exacerbates their problems. Many of Newham's homeless have children, and 22 per cent. of the women are pregnant. Others are vulnerable because of old age, mental or physical disability. The conditions in bed and breakfast accommodation can have serious detrimental effects on their health and well being.

The dislocation involved makes the maintenance of contact with social workers, health visitors and doctors difficult. It is estimated that Newham will be forced to put over 1,200 children into bed and breakfast accommodation this year. Inevitably, their education will be disrupted and many will be kept away from school.

Ethnic minority households have particular problems as cultural and religious dietary needs are not catered for by these hotels. The lack of cooking facilities also causes difficulty. Often these damp, overcrowded conditions, diets of cold food and take-away meals cause stress and illness. Because of the acute shortage of suitable hotels, Newham has been forced to use sub-standard accommodation. That is not only a disgrace but a danger to the health and safety of the occupants.

I am not being an alarmist, and I am choosing my words carefully, but unless extra resources are forthcoming and Government restrictions relaxed, it is only a matter of time before the next major fire, or other disaster, causes the death or injury of families.

This recourse to bed and breakfast accommodation is a monstrosity which must be ended. Before 1979, it was virtually unheard of. Now it has become the badge, and main result, of Conservative housing policy. It is not only inhuman but, as my hon. Friend the Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) has just pointed out, it is an insane waste of money. It is extremely expensive and costs more than building new homes, or housing the homeless in almost any other way.

When answering a parliamentary question on 20 December 1985 the Minister for Social Security said that the cost of accommodating a family with two children in board and lodging in London would be £13,150 per annum but that the cost of providing them with proper council housing would be just £5,060—just half the cost of keeping people in the misery and squalor of bed and breakfast accommodation. Where is the sense, where is the financial prudence in that? It is economic and social lunacy.

Bed and breakfast is the most expensive and least desirable of solutions. When I appeal to the Government for more resources for housing in Newham, I am advocating not the waste of money but its more sensible use. Money spent on board and lodging for the homeless is money down the drain. Money spent on new houses and repairing old houses is good housekeeping.

There are clear, long term financial benefits in providing more council homes. The growth of DHSS board and lodging expenditure is to a large extent the consequence of cuts in the Department of the Environment's capital investment in housing. It is absurd to pay huge sums to offer minimum relief to the victims of homelessness, instead of investing in the solution to their real problem.

The Government could make other very real savings from expenditure on new building, for unemployed construction workers would then be taken off the dole and additional tax income would be paid to the Exchequer. We need urgently additional capital allocations. The Government's restrictions need to be relaxed. The Treasury's arguments against this do not stand up against the size of the potential savings.

I hope that the Minister's reply will be constructive and that he will offer hope to the people of Newham. I hope that he will not seek to pass the buck to the council, or seek to blame it. He cannot accuse it of being profligate. For example, management costs per dwelling in Newham in 1985-86 were £183. In Wandsworth they were more—£189. Maintenance costs per dwelling in neighbouring Redbridge for 1985-86 were £767, whereas in Newham they were less than half that—£292.

Nor does Newham have a large number of empty council dwellings, or voids. If empty tower block flats are discounted, Newham's void rate is 4·5 per cent.—less, for example, than in Wandsworth where it is 4·6 per cent. Most of these voids are being repaired and improved and will be available for letting, but the scale of this programme is dependent on finance, particularly next year's capital allocations.

What will Newham's housing investment programme be next year? It will be announced very shortly. The new proposals of 3 December show that while Barnet, Bromley, Hillingdon, Merton and Richmond upon Thames—all Conservative councils in wealthier parts of London—have had their allocations increased under these proposals, that for Newham is to be cut by £6 million. That is absolutely monstrous. It is the opposite of what common sense and humanity require. The Department's proposals will be disastrous.

I hope that this afternoon the Minister will take that point on board. Regrettably, Newham, like other boroughs, has rent arrears, but it would be absurd to attempt to blame the housing crisis on that fact. These arrears have partly been caused by staff shortages, by the change to decentralisation and by staff concentrating on the turn round of voids and on getting the repairs service working efficiently. The annual cost to the borough of arrears is £681,000, and energetic attempts are being made to tackle it.

A major cause of rent arrears is financial hardship. Newham is an area of great poverty. While the number on the poverty line nationally has doubled since 1979, in Newham it has increased by 150 per cent. It is not only that some rents have not been paid; mortgages also have not been paid. No one would say that people do not want to pay their mortgages. However, growing poverty is stopping them.

Figures given by the Minister's Department last week show that the number of people whose homes have been repossessed or who are more than six months in mortgage arrears had reached an all-time high. Nationally, they show that in June 1986, 20,020 families, and single people had their homes repossessed compared to 2,530 in December, 1979. The number of people six months or more in arrears with their mortgage reached 66,930 in June compared to 8,420 in December, 1979. The Minister may mention the £15 million that the Government are giving to the Housing Corporation. This is an interesting idea, but even with the private money this would attract, the extra homes built would still be fewer than the increase in homelessness that is envisaged, so that will not provide a solution to this cruel problem.

What does Newham need? It needs immediate emergency aid this winter to defray the £1·75 million burden that the mushrooming of bed and breakfast is costing. We need a concerted attack on the main problem. This means, first, the restoration of the cuts and a substantial increase in housing capital allocation—at least to meet the council's bid for £67 million for 1987-8 to allow additional new building. Secondly, we need an increase in revenue support through reinstatement of rate support grant and an end to selective rate limitation. Thirdly, the Government should immediately lift the restrictions on councils buying empty property in good condition in the private sector. This would be the quickest acting emergency measure. Fourthly, we need the lifting of restrictions on the spending of capital receipts from, for example, the sale of council houses. The council has that money but is not allowed by the Treasury to spend more than about 20 per cent. of it per annum. That is manifest nonsense.

Fifthly, the Government should look at what other aid can be given under the urban programme and, of course, give partnership status to the borough. I have argued for that before.

Our problems have reached such outrageous proportions that only a partnership will solve them. If emergency action is not taken, the harrowing housing crisis in Newham will not go away, but will fester. Further constraint would result in diseconomies and more money wasted because forcibly ignored repair and maintenance problems will turn into major rehabilitation projects as houses are left to decay until demolition becomes the only option and the bed and breakfast bill mounts.

The Minister must appreciate that this would result in intolerable conditions for the borough's residents in both public and private housing sectors, and in turn lead to despair, vandalism, disincentive to private investment, and the downward spiral of inner-city decay from which Newham is desperately trying to escape.

I ask the Government to help, not hinder us. A programme like the one that I have outlined would, over a period of years, remedy our crisis. I ask the Government for a constructive, co-operative response and not for a dose of those Victorian values which condemn thousands of Newham people to Dickensian conditions this Christmas.

2.58 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. Richard Tracey): The hon. Member for Newham, North-East (Mr. Leighton) has once again given me an opportunity to spell out that the Government fully recognise the problem of homelessness and are taking action on a number of fronts to deal with it nationally, and of course that includes London and Newham.

On 7 November my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction announced that the total resources for local authority capital spending on housing are being increased next year by £390 million over the 1986-87 plans. That is an 11 per cent. increase in real terms. He also announced that allocations to local authorities through the Government's urban housing renewal unit, henceforth to be known as Estate Action, are to be increased from £50 million this year to £75 million in 1987-88. In particular, he announced that the Housing Corporation is to receive an additional £20 million next year to generate £45 million to £50 million of additional private sector investment for priority work aimed at getting homeless families out of bed-and-breakfast hotels and at providing accommodation for young people moving to take up jobs in areas where there is a shortage of rented housing.

This year, in addition to a basic allocation of £430 million of housing investment resources, the London boroughs will benefit from an additional £14 million to £15 million of housing investment and urban programme money in support of projects developed in association with Estate Action to renovate estates and improve standards and effectiveness of management. In addition to the substantial borrowing power which the Government allocate to local authorities to enable them to maintain, improve and, where necessary, add to their housing stock, they are allowed to make use of capital receipts. In 1984-85 the London boroughs were able to supplement their HIP allocation to the tune of £280 million to produce an overall spending power of over £880 million.

In addition to local authority funding, the Housing Corporation also provides significant resources. In the current financial year national funding is £685 million, the same in cash terms as for last year. Funding is being focused on 80 housing stress areas, many of them in the inner cities, and including Newham and 20 other London boroughs. In 1985-86, Housing Corporation funding provided nearly 6,500 newly built and rehabilitated fair rent dwellings in London and the home counties. A significant proportion of those dwellings are reserved for those with special needs who might otherwise be homeless.

There is another side to the resource balance sheet—the efficiency and effectiveness with which existing resources are being used. Here I really must express concern about the still unacceptable level of voids in London and about the scale of rent arrears owing to the London boroughs. Although, thanks to the efforts of several inner London boroughs following the Department's circular of last year on empty dwellings, there has been a small net reduction in the number of local authority owned dwellings, there are still about 28,000 vacant local authority dwellings in London, more than 9,000 of which have been empty for more than a year. Nearly 6,000 empty local authority dwellings are available for letting. Efforts should be made to reduce that figure still further, through improved letting rates. At present 11,000 units are vacant, undergoing repair and improvement. Of the 9,000 long-term empties, 2,000 are awaiting demolition or sale to the private sector. Nearly 7,000 are awaiting repair or improvement.

As my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction said, the highest priority in the spending of housing resources should be on the maintenance and renovation of the existing stock. The task is not helped by the appalling rent arrears among the London boroughs. Arrears totalled £86 million at 1 April 1985 and provisional figures for 1986 suggest that they have risen still further. This effectively means that large amounts of much needed day-to-day maintenance and repairs funded from revenue have to be forgone, leading to a large backlog of major capital repairs, which, in turn, directs resources away from the critical task of bringing the empty units back into use.

Nor is the position helped by the fact, spelt out in the Audit Commission's report "Managing the Crisis in Council Housing", that many local authorities have fixed rent at levels that are simply insufficient to keep buildings in good repair. The commission's assessment of rents and housing costs for 1984-85 showed that, net of subsidies, interest on capital receipts and non-rent income, average gross rents charged by London boroughs were £7 per dwelling per week below the level required to cover interest charges and the costs of management, maintenance and repairs. These are fundamental criticisms of the way in which the local authority owned stock and housing resources are being managed, and I would urge London boroughs, including Newham, to get to work on bringing the empty units back into use as a first priority.

Hon. Members will understand that the Government are distinctly uneasy about the suggestions that we have received from representatives of the local authority associations that the way to deal with the problem of homelessness is through the acquisition of yet more property. In view of the evidence that the existing stock is still not being used effectively, and bearing in mind that municipalisation does not usually result in housing gain, we do not feel that it would be right at this juncture to permit another round of large-scale municipalisation. That said, we are in regular contact with the local authority representatives and we are keeping the position under review.

I remind hon. Members that, in addition to last year's 10 July circular setting out ways in which better management could reduce the number of empty dwellings and recommending a greater use of short-life schemes, we also relaxed the housing association grant regime to facilitate grant-aiding of short-life schemes. We grant-aid a London mobility scheme to enable people to be housed as and where accommodation is available, and in the current financial year we have increased to £500,000 the amount of grant which we make available to voluntary bodies concerned with homelessness.

We recognise, however, that there is a need to get homeless families out of bed-and-breakfast accommodation as quickly as possible, not only because we are concerned at the size of the bill to the public purse, with London authorities spending over £26 million on bed and breakfast, but because such accommodation is generally unsuitable for families with children. The Department's code of guidance to local authorities on this matter makes it clear that bed-and-breakfast accommodation is to be used only in the last resort. Now, the last resort is too often becoming commonplace. That should not be so.

In view of the immediacy of the problem, we have decided to make available, from this year's Estate Action resources, up to £4 million to help those local authorities with serious homelessness problems to bring back into use within the current financial year empty dwellings on their estates.

Newham was the first London borough to respond with a satisfactory bid to us for funds, and on 27 November my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction approved £250,000 of additional resources for a scheme on the Woodlands estate to bring back 23 empty flats into use to benefit homeless families. So, in total, this year Newham, on top of a basic HIP allocation of £21 million, has benefited from an additional £1·5 million of Estate Action resources. Newham was among the first of the London boroughs to be visited by the Estate

[Mr. Richard Tracey]

Action team with a view to identifying projects for support in 1987-88. Suitable schemes have been identified and the Department is expecting to receive formal bids shortly.

When we met representatives of the local authority associations in July this year, we pointed out that we are prepared to consider on their merits applications from local authorities to acquire properties suitable for use as hostels providing temporary accommodation for homeless families. To date, only a few authorities have come forward with proposals. Consent has nevertheless been given, within the last few months, to acquisitions which at any one time will afford temporary accommodation to at least 100 homeless people. I understand that Newham has run into some difficulty with its initial proposals, but I look forward to receiving an application soon.

Let no one say that the Government do not care about the plight of the homeless. Of course we do, and I have mentioned today some of the ways in which we are trying to help.

Ultimately, however, the responsibility for finding a solution lies with the local authorities. They have the powers and the resources to deal with the problem and they are free to determine their priorities according to their assessment of need. In fact, between 1980 and 1986, local authorities in London let homes to about 68,000 homeless families. The number of lettings to homeless families has increased under this Government from 12,700 in 1980 to nearly 18,500 in 1986.

I am pleased to say that many London authorities are taking their own initiatives to deal with the problem. Several have introduced incentive schemes to encourage those occupying council accommodation but who could afford, with a little assistance, to buy in the private sector to do so, thus releasing rented accommodation for those who have greater need of it. The Department is currently monitoring the effectiveness of——

Monday 24 November 1986

PRIME MINISTER

Security (Publications)

Mr. Alan Williams asked the Prime Minister what access Rupert Allason alias Nigel West has been given since 1979 to classified information relating to the security services.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on Friday 21 November, at column 359.

Westland plc

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister when she first knew that the Westland board meeting and press conference were to be held at 4 pm on 6 January.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 17 November at columns 49-50.

Sir Robert Armstrong

Mr. Kaufman asked the Prime Minister if she willl name the official or officials performing the duties of Sir Robert Armstrong during the latter's visit to Australia.

The Prime Minister: Responsibility for discharging the duties of Sir Robert Armstrong while he is in Australia rests where appropriate with the second permanent secretary at the Management and Personnel Office and the deputy secretaries within the Cabinet Office.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister if she will dismiss Sir Robert Armstrong on the grounds that he made statements to the Supreme court in New South Wales at variance with evidence previously submitted in affidavits sworn by him in the Australian courts.

The Prime Minister: No.

"Their Trade is Treachery"

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister why no interviews were conducted with members of the security services to confirm the sources of material in the book "Their Trade is Treachery" by Chapman Pincher during the two months beginning February to the end of March 1981 when the manuscript was in the possession of Her Majesty's Government.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on Friday 21 November at column 360.

Mr. Mordechai Vanunu

Mr. Marlow asked the Prime Minister whether information was passed from Her Majesty's Government sources to Israeli sources concerning the whereabouts of Mr. Mordechai Vanunu within the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: No.

Security Services

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Prime Minister if she will take steps to set up a team composed of an equal number of Privy Councillors and Back-Bench hon. Members from the House of Commons to whom the security services would be accountable.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister if she is satisfied with the vetting procedures applied in the recruitment of members of the security services; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Yes.

Mr. Peter Wright

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Prime Minister if, in the light of the statements made by Mr. Justice Powell in the Australian Courts, she will request the Attorney-General and other suitably qualified persons to give evidence on behalf of Her Majesty's Government in the case concerning the alleged breach of confidentiality by Mr. Wright and his publishers.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister if there have been any discussions between Her Majesty's Government and the United States Administration about any matters arising from the case brought by Her Majesty's Government against Mr. Peter Wright in Australia; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Any such discussions, if they have occurred, would be confidential.

Post-Chernobyl Review

Mr. Strang asked the Prime Minister (1) whether the Government's post-Chernobyl review of emergency plans and procedures for implementation in the event of nuclear fallout has taken into account the increased danger of those Magnox reactors that have exceeded the initial term for which they were licensed;

(2) whether she will state the terms of reference for the Government's post-Chernobyl review of emergency plans and procedures for implementation in the event of nuclear fallout;

(3) whether the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority was consulted in relation to the Government's post-Chernobyl review of emergency plans and procedures for implementation in the event of nuclear fallout;

(4) if the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate was consulted or will be consulted in relation to the Government's post-Chernobyl review of emergency plans and procedures for implementation in the event of threat from nuclear fallout;

(5) if she will list the outside bodies and persons that were contacted or will be contacted in relation to the Government's post-Chernobyl review of emergency plans and procedures for implementation in the event of threat from nuclear fallout;

(6) if she will state the date on which the Government's review of emergency plans and procedures for implementation in the event of threat from nuclear fallout started; when she expects it to be completed; and whether it will be published.

The Prime Minister: I hope it will be possible to announce the interim outcome of the Government's post-Chernobyl review shortly. Appropriate consultations are being carried out.

"Protect and Survive"

Mr. Strang asked the Prime Minister when she expects the film and other material of the revised and updated version of "Protect and Survive" to be completed; and when she expects it to be published.

The Prime Minister: New public information material, which replaces "Protect and Survive", will be issued next month.

AIDS

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Prime Minister if she will publish the names of the members of the Committee appointed under the Chairmanship of Viscount Whitelaw to consider matters relating to acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to my reply of 14 November 1984 to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) at columns 243 and 244.

Coal Industry

Mr. Ashton asked the Prime Minister, whether the other measures of privatisation she referred to on 18 November, Official Report, column 432, include privatisation of the coal industry; and whether she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government have privatised one-fifth of the state sector of industries which they inherited in 1979, and will have transferred a further one-fifth to the private sector by the end of this parliamentary session. We have also announced our intention to return most of the remainder to the private sector in the next Parliament.

However, there are no current plans for the privatisation of British Coal. The priority for the industry's management is to build on the enormous productivity gains that are now being achieved and to restore the industry to financial viability.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

VDE Mark

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he received a response from the German Ministry of Economics concerning the VDE mark; if he will publish such response in the Official Report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My officials contacted the Federal Economic Ministry in Bonn in July this year, and received a response in October. The response was that no requirement existed in the area of electrical lighting at Government level, or, as far as they were aware, at local or professional level, for the exclusive use of equipment bearing a VDE mark. My officials are investigating this further.

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the Government propose to bring an enforcement action against the West German Government under Article 170 of the Treaty of Rome in relation to the requirement to obtain approval by VDE; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No, as no such German Government requirement exists.

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will assess the impact in pounds sterling of the damage suffered to the British electrical manufacturing industry as a result of the imposition in West Germany of the requirement that electrical equipment complies with the VDE standard; whether he will estimate the effect of such impact on the employment situation in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. There is no German Government imposition of such a requirement. It is therefore impossible to make any assessment of any effects on United Kingdom industry in the German market.

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the extent to which the use in West Germany of the VDE mark creates an obstacle to international trade and the free movement of goods within the meaning of (a) the agreement on technical barriers to trade and (b) EEC treaty provisions, regulations or directives concerning the free movement of goods and services; what steps he has taken concerning the removal of such obstacles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I have made no such assessment. The use of the VDE mark is not a governmental requirement in West Germany, so it cannot be interpreted as an obstacle to trade with the terms of the question. However, I am aware that West German buyers do look for the VDE mark. Work is going on in the European Community to establish a Community policy for mutual recognition of certification and testing. This will aid products certified in one country to be sold to another without restriction.

Electrical Goods (West Germany)

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has at to (a) the mark placed on West German electrical goods denoting compliance with EEC Directive 73/23 and (b) the electrical specifications of such mark; what are the parallel specifications of the United Kingdom mark; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: In answer to the first part of the question, I have received notification in accordance with article 10 of EEC directive 73/23 (the low voltage directive) of the bodies recognised by the administrative authorities of the Federal Republic of Germany as being authorised to establish marks or certificates. The list of bodies is published in the administrative guidance to the United Kingdom Electrical Equipment (Safety) Regulations.

In answer to the second part, it is not an obligation for the administrative authorities of member states to supply this information in order to comply with the provisions of EEC directive 73/23. I am therefore not in a position to supply the parallel United Kingdom specifications.

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the degree of West Germany's compliance with EEC council directive 73/23 of 19 February on harmonisation of electrical equipment.

Mr. Giles Shaw: As far as the Government are aware, the Federal Republic of Germany complies with the provisions of EEC directive 73/23.

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from manufacturers during each of the last three years concerning restrictions on the use of (a) luminaires, (b) other domestic electrical equipment and (c) all other electrical equipment in West Germany; whether he will publish in the Official Report the content of such representations, indicating his response or any action taken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I am aware of no other representations except those by the hon. Member and the Lighting Industry Federation. These are being followed up.

Departmental Initiatives

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list initiatives by his Department which have been of benefit specifically to the north-east, north-west and Yorkshire and Humberside regions since 1979.

Mr. Giles Shaw: In recognition of the continuing problems in these three regions, my Department has designated many parts of them as assisted areas for the purposes of regional industrial policy. Companies within, or moving to, these areas may benefit from our various schemes of financial assistance.

Greek Cement

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the result of his Department's consultations with the United Kingdom's European Economic Community partners concerning the attempt to dump cement from Greece into the United Kingdom market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Representations have been made to the European Commission about the impact of Greek export subsidies by a number of member states. I understand that Ireland and Italy have in particular raised the question of the impact of subsidised exports of cement. The Commission and the Council will be discussing next month the future of these subsidies and the other protective measures authorised to help the Greek economy.

PCRL Radio Station

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why PCRL radio station in Handsworth has been raided on 30 occasions; and how many other such stations have been raided as frequently.

Mr. Butcher: The Radio Investigation Service has seized equipment used by PCRL on 30 occasions. The RIS has seized equipment from two other unlicensed broadcast stations on more than 30 occasions. Two further unlicensed broadcast stations were raided 20 times or more before they ceased broadcasting. Raids will continue in all cases until illegal broadcasting activity stops.

Counterfeiting

Mr. Oakes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he intends to introduce legislation to make the forgery of commercial packaging or the possession of dies and similar equipment to manufacture counterfeit goods a criminal offence;

(2) if he will introduce legislation expressly to forbid counterfeiting and to make it a criminal offence;

(3) what progress he has made in his discussions with industry on reform of the law relating to counterfeiting;

(4) if he will make a statement on his proposals to deal with counterfeiting.

Mr. Geoffrey Pattie: The Government are taking action at several levels to combat the threat which counterfeit goods pose to legitimate manufacturers in their domestic and foreign markets. It is the intention of the United Kingdom Presidency to help secure the adoption of the Community regulation on counterfeit goods at the Internal Market Council on 1 December 1986. The regulation would establish improved rules on a Community-wide basis for inhibiting the introduction of a counterfeit goods from non-Community countries into the Community market. The Government will also press for the adoption of a code on counterfeiting in the current GATT negotiations.

The newly-published Criminal Justice Bill contains important provisions which should extend the powers of the courts to order forfeiture of counterfeit goods and equipment used to manufacture them. The Government are also considering whether further changes in domestic law are desirable. Counterfeiting, in the sense of applying a false trade description to goods, and trading in such goods are already criminal offences under the Trade Descriptions Act 1968. However, I have had representations from industry that certain related activities, such as forging commercial packaging, should also be made criminal offences. The representations also point to alleged shortcomings in the enforcement of existing legislation. These representations are being carefully considered.

Mr. Oakes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cases have been brought under the Trade Descriptions Act 1968 against counterfeiters; and what was the average penalty imposed in each of the last five years.

Mr. Geoffrey Pattie: The information requested is not readily available in the form requested and to produce it in that form would involved disproportionate cost.

Gas Consumers Council

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the names of those persons he has appointed to the Gas Consumers Council.

Mr. Howard: The following have been appointed: Miss Sheila Black, OBE (chairman); Mr. A. D. Arnold, MBE; Mr. R. M. Carver; Col. W. A. Dalziel, CBE; Mr. M. J. S. Gibbons; Prof. G. J. Goodhardt; Cllr. J. C. Hanscomb, CBE; Mr. R. D. Hoskin, MBE; Mrs. P. K. R. Mann; Mrs. S. Shaw; Mrs. J. H. Stephenson; Mrs. V. K. Studholme.

A number of further appointments will be made shortly.

Shipbuilding (Aid)

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the recent European Economic Community discussions on aid to shipbuilding.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Hickmet) on 21 November 1986 at column 379.

British Telecom

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, in the case of the flotation of British Telecom shares, how many applicants for shares returned shares which they had been allocated because the applications had been made in false names; how many shares were involved; who were the applicants; and what action was taken against them.

Mr. Geoffrey Pattie: None. However, a number of cases of multiple applications involving false names have been investigated and successful prosecutions mounted. In one of these cases the profit from the shares was voluntarily surrendered; in another the Government recovered the shares when the individual concerned failed to pay the second instalment. An institution also of its own volition returned shares in respect of a number of applications which it had made on behalf of individual overseas clients because the institution itself considered that errors had been made in submitting the applications.

Business Improvement Scheme (West Yorkshire)

Mr. John Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many applications for business improvement scheme moneys are awaiting approval for projects in west Yorkshire; and what is the total value of these outstanding applications;

(2) how many applications for business improvement scheme moneys have been approved for projects in west Yorkshire; and what is the total value of these approved applications;

(3) if EEC moneys unused in a scheme under one European regional development fund heading are redirected to a scheme under another European regional development fund heading where the budget has been exhausted;

(4) how long on average it takes between approval of an application for business improvement scheme moneys for projects in west Yorkshire and payment of the grant.

Mr. Channon: The business improvement services package of 11 schemes of aid for small businesses (BIS) is mainly operated under three separate United Kingdom programmes agreed with the EC Commission and jointly financed with them under specific European regional development fund regulations. BIS in west Yorkshire is operated under one of these programmes, which covers areas affected by the decline in the textile and clothing industry. This programme provides for a maximum overall amount of expenditure, and for the allocation of this between infrastructure and industrial measures, and between the geographical areas in the United Kingdom covered by the relevant regulation. It is open to the United Kingdom Government to seek Commission agreement to transfer funds within the programme.

In west Yorkshire 1,257 applications for BIS have been approved at a total value of £11·8 million, and 38 further applications are awaiting approval at a total value of £0·9 million. When these have been approved the money allocated to BIS in west yorkshire will have been fully committed. The average time taken between initial approval in principle of a grant and payment against a claim from the applicant varies between up to six months and up to two years, depending upon the scheme in question. Applicants cannot claim payment until the approved work has been carried out.

Bankruptcies

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many bankruptcies have occurred in Wales in each year from 1979 to 1986; if he will specify the size of the firms concerned, showing those employing (a) less than 20 workers, (b) between 20 and 50 workers, (c) between 50 and 100 workers and (d) over 100 workers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I will reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

BSC (Ravenscraig and Dalzell Works)

Dr. Bray asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy not to accept cuts in plate or strip capacity at British Steel Corporation Ravenscraig and Dalzell works as part of the 11·9 million tonnes voluntary cuts in capacity which are to be proposed by Eurofer by 1 March 1987.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Decisions on the future of any works of the British Steel Corporation are subject to the strategy agreed with the Government and announced in August 1985. It will be for the corporation to consider, in the light of that strategy, what part it might play in the development of Eurofer's proposals for Europe as a whole.

Information Technology Staff (Training)

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the average number of days training per year given to professional information technology staff within his Department who are no longer trainees, in the most recent years available.

Mr. Butcher: Over the past two years to 31 March 1986 the average number of days formal training per year, excluding on-the-job training, given to staff working in the ADP specialism was about 10 weeks.

Rolls-Royce plc.

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about arrangements for employees to acquire shares in the offer for sale of Rolls-Royce plc.

Mr. Geoffrey Pattie: Special arrangements will be made for employees to acquire shares in the offer for sale. All United Kingdom employees of Rolls-Royce with at least 12 months service will be entitled to approximately £70 of free shares, plus approximately £2 of free shares for each year of service. Secondly, eligible employees who invest up to £150 in the offer will be entitled on a 2:1 basis to further free shares up to £300. Thirdly, eligible employees will be entitled to a discount of 10 per cent. on the offer price of any further shares purchased in the offer, subject to a maximum purchase value of £2,000.

In addition to these special arrangements, all eligible employees, irrespective of length of service, and pensioners of Rolls-Royce residing in the United Kingdom will be entitled to make priority applications at the offer price for up to 5 per cent. of the offered shares, subject to a maximum purchase per employee or pensioner of £10,000.

Insider Dealing

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has to how many cases of suspected insider dealing have been investigated by the Stock Exchange Council since 1980; how many of these cases were referred to his Department for further investigation; what was the total number of inspectors appointed by his Department to report on such cases; and what is the number of prosecutions brought arising from their report.

Mr. Howard: The Stock Exchange has referred about 100 cases of suspected insider dealing to my Department since the relevant legislation came into effect. The investigation of possible offences which my right hon. Friend is responsible for prosecuting is normally carried out by investigating officers who are members of the Department's staff. The power to appoint inspectors became available only on 15 November, since when there has been one appointment. To date, there have been nine prosecutions for insider dealing.

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, as part of the Government's plans to deal with insider dealing, he will bring forward legislation to require those who purchase shares to register the beneficial owner of the shares.

Mr. Howard: The registration of shares is a matter for the issuing company rather than the purchaser. I do not consider it necessary, for the purposes of pursuing insider dealing, to add to the means which the law already provides for discovering the beneficial ownership of shares. Apart from section 177 of the Financial Services Act, these include sections 442 and 444 of the Companies Act 1985, which give the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry powers to investigate the ownership of companies and to obtain information as to those interested in shares.

AE plc (Share Dealings)

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to receive the report of the inspectors appointed by him to inquire into the share dealing in AE plc by Mr. Collier.

Mr. Howard: When the inspectors report is a matter for them. I am sure that they will complete their investigations as quickly as possible.

Mr. I. Boesky (Share Dealings)

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he intends to appoint inspectors to report on information received by his Department from the Securities and Exchange Commission arising from its investigation into the dealing of Mr. Boesky; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I am always ready to appoint inspectors where there is a good reason to do so.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Peter Wright (Court Case)

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General if he has any plans to appear in person on behalf of Her Majesty's Government in the case currently being heard in Australia in relation to Mr. Peter Wright's book on the security services; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: No.

Security (Publications)

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General what discussions he has had with Mr. Chapman Pincher regarding the publication of matters relating to national security; on what dates; and at what locations.

The Attorney-General: It would be inappropriate for me to comment on matters which are or may be at issue in the proceedings concerning the Peter Wright case in Australia while those proceedings continue.

ENERGY

Coal Production

11. Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the most recent figures for coal production in the coal industry; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Current output in the coal industry has been maintained at broadly the same level as in 1985, with output per man shift reaching 3·55 tons in the week ending 1 November 1986 compared with 2·87 tons in the same week last year.

13. Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the latest productivity figures in the coal industry.

Mr. David Hunt: For the week ending 1 November average output per man shift was 3·55 tonnes. This is the sixth time the record has been broken in seven weeks and demonstrates the excellent team work by management and mineworkers throughout the coalfields. This is good news for British Coal and its customers.

24. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Energy what are the latest productivity figures for each area of British Coal.

Mr. David Hunt: British Coal's average deep-mined revenue output per man shift for the week ending 1 November was as follows:

	Tonnes
Scotland	2·44
North East	3·01
North Yorkshire	4·66
South Yorkshire	2·68
North Derbyshire	4·38
Nottingham	3·51
South Midlands	3·18
Kent	2·97
Western	3·68
South Wales	2·68

The figures for north Yorkshire, north Derbyshire, Kent and western areas represent weekly productivity records.

Home Heating

14. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Energy what advice his Department makes available to elderly people to try to ensure cost-effective heating of their homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department's Energy Efficiency Office is currently giving such advice through the biggest publicity campaign ever aimed at improving the energy efficiency of the domestic sector. The office publishes a full range of supporting literature, and elderly people are also helped through the 120 new Government-backed voluntary sector insulation projects which have started during Energy Efficiency Year.

Alternative Energy Sources

15. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he next proposes to have discussions with the European Community Council of Ministers about alternative sources of energy.

Mr. David Hunt: Alternative sources of energy are on the agenda at the Council of Energy Ministers on Wednesday 26 November. I will represent the United Kingdom at this meeting. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is the current President of the Council.

Power Station Construction

16. Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many new power stations have been ordered by the Central Electricity Generating Board since May 1979.

Mr. Goodlad: As far as major new stations are concerned, the board placed an order for Heysham II in 1981.

Northern Region

19. Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will estimate the number of jobs directly and indirectly dependent in the northern region on the nuclear industry.

Mr. Goodlad: There are some 24,000 people directly employed by the nuclear industry in the north of England. A much larger number are employed in the construction, manufacturing and service industries which support them. Well over 100,000 jobs depend directly or indirectly on the industry over the country as a whole. United Kingdom also benefits from the important contribution which nuclear power makes to the cheapening of our electricity supplies.

Substitute Natural Gas

20. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Energy what role his Department will have, following the privatisation of British Gas, in the development of substitute natural gas.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: This will continue to be a matter for the commercial judgment of British Gas.

Wind Energy

22. Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about his Department's efforts to promote wind energy.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department is supporting a comprehensive research and development programme aimed at exploiting the United Kingdom wind resource for electricity generation. This programme which, since 1979, has cost some £17 million, has largely been directed to the development of large wind turbines for the UK grid operation and includes major projects on Orkney and at Carmarthen bay.

North Sea (Exploration and Development)

23. Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement detailing any further initiatives he may be considering to stimulate North sea oil exploration and development work.

30. Mr. Rowlands asked the Secretary of State for Energy what estimate his Department has of job prospects of North sea oil developments, on and offshore.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The Government are concerned that worthwhile onshore and offshore oil and gas activity continues. Already this year I have approved 12 projects worth over £2 billion. In March I awarded 75 new onshore exploration licences. I am proceeding with the tenth round of offshore licensing, and I hope to announce awards by next summer. The projects I have approved and work flowing from new onshore and offshore licences will provide continuing job prospects in this vital sector of the economy.

Opencast Mining (Manchester)

25. Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will list the opencast mining projects currently being considered by British Coal in Greater Manchester.

Mr. David Hunt: I understand that British Coal has applied for planning permission for Garnet and Lomax opencast sites in the Greater Manchester area. It has also applied for planning permission for a coal disposal point at Aldreds. Future applications are a matter, in the first instance, for British Coal.

British Coal Enterprise Ltd.

26. Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest number of jobs created by British Coal Enterprise Ltd.

Mr. David Hunt: By the end of October, British Coal Enterprise Ltd. had assisted in the creation of 11,776 new job opportunities.

Industrial Gas Prices

27. Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he proposes to take to reduce the price of industrial gas for United Kingdom manufacturers to the levels enjoyed by our European competitors.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Contract gas prices are a matter for commercial negotiation between British Gas and its customers taking account of market pressures from competing fuels.

Energy Efficiency Year

28. Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on progress made so far during energy efficiency year.

Mr. David Hunt: Energy Efficiency Year continues to make a strong impact. Some 1,300 events have already taken place supporting and promoting our initiatives in every sector of the community.

In industry and commerce, the Energy Efficiency Office's schemes and programmes are now leading to savings worth over £500 million a year. Around 7,500 energy efficiency surveys under our survey scheme have identified savings worth £250 million. Two hundred and fifty projects under our energy efficiency demonstration scheme have stimulated savings worth more than £120 million a year. Monitoring and targeting systems have been completed in 15 sectors and are being implemented at some 200 major energy-using sites. Every £1 spent on M & T by Government is identifying savings of over £40 a year; 313 voluntary insulation projects have been established and over 200,000 homes insulated, creating some 5,000 job opportunities.

Energy Conservation and Efficiency

29. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the amount of money saved in 1985 by local authorities and industry adopting energy conservation policies; how this will compare with the projected figures for 1986; and if he will make a statement.

50. Mr. William Powell asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the aggregate annual savings generated by energy efficiency schemes undertaken by industry and commerce; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: It is estimated that energy efficiency measures undertaken by industry and commerce are currently leading to savings of over £500 million a year. A comparable figure is not available for local authorities. However, they have responded positively to the Audit Commission report of 1985, which identified savings of at least £135 million a year for local authorities in England and Wales.

Nuclear Energy

31. Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Energy what recent representations he has received about the future of nuclear energy in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Goodlad: I have received many representations about various aspects of civil nuclear power, including its safety and its economic and strategic importance.

Combined Heat and Power, Leicester

32. Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the latest situation regarding the proposals of the combined heat and power consortium in Leicester.

Mr. David Hunt: I understand the Leicester Combined Heat and Power Consortium expects to make available the results of its studies shortly.

Sizewell B (Report)

33. Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has received the report of the public inquiry into the proposed Sizewell B pressurised water reactor.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn) on 6 November at column 548.

Electricity Demand

34. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the expected change in the demand for electricity between 1988 and 1990.

Mr. Goodlad: The sales forecast for England and Wales adopted by the Electricity Council in October 1986 includes unit requirements on the Central Electricity Generating Board of 240·5 terawatt hours in 1987-88 and 249·0 hours in 1989-90, an increase of 3·5 per cent.

Area Electricity Boards (External Audit)

35. Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to seek to introduce competition for external audit work for area electricity boards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend has decided to introduce competition into the appointment of auditors to the Electricity Supply Industry (England and Wales). The process will start with the appointment of auditors to the Electricity Council and the South Western Electricity Board for the financial year 1987-88.

Coal Industry (Capacity)

36. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the reduction in the capacity of the coal industry over the last two years.

Mr. David Hunt: Deep-mined output in 1985-86 was 88·4 mt, compared with 90·1 mt in 1983-84, and is continuing at broadly this level in 1986-87.

Tidal Energy

37. Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he is taking to promote tidal energy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: As my right hon. Friend announced on 9 July, the Department of Energy has initiated a major extension of its programme of research and development on tidal energy. The chief features of the programme comprise: advanced investigation and site exploration of a Severn barrage near to Cardiff and Weston-super-Mare; support for the cost of studies into a barrage across the Mersey estuary conducted by the Mersey Barrage Company; a set of generic tidal energy studies complementary to these two major projects.

I regard tidal energy as one of the most promising of the renewable energy sources, and I therefore wish to discover as quickly as possible whether it can make a significant and economic contribution to electricity supply.

Nuclear Power (Co-operation and Exchange of Information)

38. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on progress on international co-operation and exchange of information relating to civil nuclear power issues, following the Tokyo summit communiqué.

Mr. Peter Walker: Since the Tokyo summit communiqué was issued in May, the IAEA has adopted and opened for signature two new conventions on early notification of a nuclear accident, and mutual assistance in the case of a nuclear accident or radiological emergency. Fifty-eight states have already signed these conventions, including the United Kingdom.

The IAEA is considering a number of further proposals.

Nuclear Generation

39. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the current effect upon electricity prices of nuclear generation.

51. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the current effect on electricity prices of nuclear generated electricity.

Mr. Goodlad: At present, nuclear generation accounts for around 17 per cent. of electricity output in England and Wales. The fuel cost advantage of the CEGB's existing nuclear power stations is such that they are significantly cheaper to run than even the most modern coal-fired plant. The industry estimates that, at the current level of nuclear output, running costs are lower that they would otherwise be by well over £500 million per annun, equivalent to about 5 per cent. on prices. This does not take into account the additional costs which would arise in any replacement of existing nuclear stations by other forms of generation.

British Gas

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the best available estimate of the take-up of British Gas shares by the general public.

Mr. Peter Walker: Over 7 million people registered their interest in buying shares with the British Gas share information office before the offer was made. The prospectus will be widely available from tomorrow in banks, post offices, British Gas showrooms and in the press.

Electricity Demand

41. Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of electricity demand for the period 1990 to 2000; and to what extent domestically produced electricity will be able to meet this demand.

Mr. Goodlad: The sales forecast for England and Wales adopted by the Electricity Council in October 1986 includes a unit requirement on the Central Electricity Generating Board of 271·3 terawatt hours in 1995-96. The board expects, as in the past, to meet the overwhelming bulk of the requirment from its own power stations.

Energy Monitoring and Targeting

42. Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Energy what support his Department is giving to energy monitoring and targeting projects; and if he will make a statement

Mr. David Hunt: The Energy Efficiency Office is supporting a monitoring and targeting (M&T) programme aimed at developing and introducing M&T within 40 major energy consuming sectors: 25 sectoral projects are under way at present; 11 systems have already been fully developed for promotion within their sector. The programme is proving highly effective: savings averaging 10 per cent. are being realised from the adoption of M&T systems. The programme aims to achieve energy savings of some £300 million per year.

Energy Efficiency Office

43. Mr. Rathbone asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will report on the achievements of the Energy Efficiency Office to date.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer to the answer given earlier today to the question from my hon. Friend the Member for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn).

Fast Breeder Reactor Programme

44. Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will report on the fast breeder reactor programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The research and development we are undertaking, in collaboration with our European partners, continues to provide encouraging evidence about the future potential of the fast reactor for electricity generation. The Government have always envisaged that the electricity supply industry would bear an increasing share of the cost of this programme as it progressed towards the commercial phase. I am pleased to announce that, from 1987-88, the CEGB will fund some 30 per cent. of the AEA programme.

Nuclear Generation (Manpower)

45. Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the number of jobs currently provided by the generation of nuclear power; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The CEGB and SSEB currently employ over 11,000 people directly for nuclear power generation. Both the UKAEA and BNFL also generate electricity from some of their nuclear plant, but given the nature of their respective operations it is not possible to give a precise figure for the numbers employed in the generation of electricity. Overall, the nuclear industry directly employs about 44,000 people. Many thousands more are employed on the industry's major capital projects in maintaining and servicing the industry's existing sites and in providing local infrastructure. Well over 100,000 jobs depend directly or indirectly on the industry.

Land-fill Gas

46. Mr. Stevens asked the Secretary of State for Energy what steps is he taking to promote the use of energy from land-fill gas.

Mr. David Hunt: On 28 October I addressed a land-fill gas conference in Solihull at which over 200 delegates attended. The event was part of the United Kingdom-United States collaborative effort on energy r,d and Demonstration.

My Department has so far committed £1·85 million through its r,d and Demonstration Scheme programmes towards the use of land-fill gas as fuel. The promotion and take-up of this technology should eventually lead to the production of around 3 million tonnes of coal equivalent a year from land-fill sites.

Renewables Programme

47. Mr. Norris asked the Secretary of State for Energy what success his Department has had in attracting contributions from external sources for the renewables programme.

Mr. David Hunt: We have had considerable success in attracting external contributions to our renewables programme. Since 1979 over £14 million has been contributed. Estimate contributions for 1986-87 are £3 million compared to £2·1 million in 1985-86. (The figures include contractors' contribution to projects on waste as a fuel and passive solar design under the Departments energy efficiency demonstration scheme).

British Coal (Scotland)

48. Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the current numbers employed in the Scottish areas of British Coal.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of men on colliery books in British Coal's Scottish area at 8 November was 5,468.

Chernobyl

49. Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about his forthcoming visit to Chernobyl.

Mr. Peter Walker: I shall be visiting Chernobyl in mid-December at the invitation of the USSR Government. I hope to be able to inspect the site of the accident and to have discussions with the Soviet authorities on nuclear safety matters.

Coal Mines (Vale of Belvoir)

52. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Energy what plans the Government have to allow the opening of further coal mines in the Vale of Belvoir, and in particular at the Cadley Hill site.

Mr. David Hunt: Responsibility for proposed new mining developments lies in the first instance with British Coal.

South Wales Coalfield

53. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of British Coal to discuss the future of the south Wales coalfield.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of British Coal regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry, including from time to time the South Wales coalfield.

Coking Coal

54. Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Energy what are the latest available figures for imports of coking coal.

Mr. David Hunt: During the period January to September 1986 imports of coking coal were 5 million tonnes. This compared with imports of 7·1 million tonnes in 1985.

Power Generating Plant

55. Mr. Orme asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he will next meet the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board; and if he will discuss with him a programme for power generating plant orders.

Mr. Peter Walker: I meet the chairman regularly and we discuss a wide range of issues.

Drilling Rigs

56. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many drilling rigs are currently active within the United Kingdom continental shelf; and how this number compares with the position two years ago.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: In the week ending 27 October 1986, 27 mobile drilling rigs were active within the United Kingdom continental shelf. In the last week of October 1984, 49 rigs were active.

Plutonium Export Contracts

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will take steps to renegotiate the confidentiality clauses in plutonium export contracts to permit free circulation of information; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: No.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mr. John McCarthy

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department has taken to identify the whereabouts of John McCarthy, the Worldwide Television News journalist, who was kidnapped in Beirut last April and to secure his safe release.

Mr. Renton: We continue to follow every possible lead but regrettably still do not have any hard information as to Mr. McCarthy's whereabouts.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Anglo-Irish Agreement was registered at the United Nations.

Mr. Eggar: The Anglo-Irish agreement was registered at the United Nations on 20 December 1985.

Royal Mail Ship St. Helena

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to announce the placing of a contract for a replacement vessel for Royal Mail ship St. Helena.

Mr. Eggar: We are now working out the precise details of the most appropriate type of ship to build, and the timing of its construction. We hope to make decisions on these points shortly.

Visa Applications

Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what additional staff have been recruited to date to posts in Dhaka, Islamabad and Delhi to process visa applications.

Mr. Eggar: The answer is: in Dhaka, four entry clearance officers and 11 locally-engaged support staff; in Islamabad, one second second secretary, four entry clearance officers, and 12 locally-engaged support staff; in New Delhi, one second secretary, three entry clearance officers and nine locally-engaged support staff.

Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current waiting period for visit visas from applicants in the Indian subcontinent.

Mr. Eggar: Over 95 per cent. of personal applicants are at present dealt with on the day of application. Those requiring more than a cursory interview may have to wait up to a maximum of 12 days (New Delhi). There is no backlog of postal applications at any post.

WALES

Private Patients

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for 1985 for each health authority and for Wales as a whole (a) the number of pay beds, (b) the number of discharges and deaths of private patients, (c) the average number of pay beds occupied by private patients, (d) the percentage occupancy and (e) the number of private out-patient attendances.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The required information is given in the following table:

	Number of pay beds authorised[1]	Discharges and deaths of private patients	Average number of beds occupied daily	Percentage occupancy	Private out-patient attendances
Clwyd	12	621	6·74	56·2	2,151

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each year since 1979 in Wales (a) the number of National Health Service pay beds, (b) the average number occupied by private patients, (c) the occupancy rate as a percentage, (d) the number of private in-patients and (e) the number of private out-patients.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The required information for Wales is given in the following table:

	Number of pay beds authorised[1]	Average number of beds occupied daily	Percentage occupancy	Number of private in-patients[4]	Number of private out-patients[5]
1979	39	14·86	38·1	1,087	528

[5] Total out-patient attendances by private patients.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the health authorities in Wales for which statutory auditors have issued reports of poor control over private in-patient care since his answer of 25 November 1985, Official Report, column 461.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The statutory auditor has recently re-reported on some of the control weaknesses identified in the 1984 audit review of the management of private practice in respect of the following authorities: Clwyd, East Dyfed, Gwent, Gwynedd, Mid Glamorgan and Pembrokeshire.

The Department is continuing its follow-up action on the original reports but clearance will not be considered until all outstanding points have been resolved. In re-reporting on these outstanding matters, the statutory auditor has acknowledged the progress made in remedying many of the points made in his original reports.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for 1985 for each health authority and for Wales as a whole the income from (a) private resident patients, (b) private non-resident patients and (c) services provided to private medical institutions; and if he will give the bad debts written off in each category.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is given in the following tables:

(2) Income collected under section 58 of the NHS Act 1977 covers income for services provided to private medical institutions. No information is held centrally about bad debts written off in respect of section 58 income.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals for private hospital development have been notified to or authorised by him under the Health Services Act 1976 as amended by the Health Service Act 1980 giving the date in each case as well as the health district.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is as follows:

Date of notification	Notified by	Number of beds	Health district
16 September 1980	BUPA Hospitals Ltd.	60 (48 in first phase)	South Glamorgan
14 October 1980	HAI (UK) Ltd.	56/70	South Glamorgan

October 1985	Clwyd County Council	30	Clwyd
23 December 1985	W. Griffiths, Son & Lewis	17	East Dyfed

There have been no requests for authorisation of controlled private hospital works.

Health Services (Privatisation)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each health district in 1985-86 the total expenditure on catering, the expenditure on services provided by private catering companies, the latter figure as a percentage of the former and the difference between that percentage and the percentage in the previous year.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is as follows:

Catering expenditure

	Total expenditure 1985-86 £000	External contracts 1985-86 £000	External contracts as a per cent. of total expenditure	Difference between per cent. for 1985-86 and per cent. for 1984-85

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each tendering exercise for hospital services of which his Department is aware (a) the health authority, (b) the hospital, (c) the service, (d) the successful tenderer, (e) the date of the tenders' approval and (f) the saving achieved.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I assume the hon. Gentleman is referring to hospital "hotel" services (domestic, catering and laundry). Such information as is held centrally is given in the following tables:

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each year since 1979 the percentage of expenditure on (a) catering, (b) laundry and (c) cleaning which has been paid to private contractors for services provided to the National Health Service in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is as follows:

Payment to private contractors as a percentage of relevant expenditure

	Catering	Laundry	Domestic and Cleaning
1979-80	0·013	3·79	0·64

Notes:
(1) Figures for 1985-86 are, at this stage, provisional.
(2) A fire in the central laundry in E. Dyfed led to some additional external contracts in 1983-84. This central laundry has since been repaired and re-opened.
(3) The figures are not strictly comparable over the whole period as Value Added Tax on contracted out services became reclaimable by health authorities from 1 September 1983.

Deaths and Discharges

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for 1985 for each health authority and for Wales as a whole the number of deaths and discharges among, and the number of beds occupied on 31 December by, patients receiving treatment under contractual arrangements with institutions outside the National Health Service breaking the figures down by category of patients treated.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The required information is given in the following table:

Patients receiving treatment under contractual arrangements: 1985

[1] Information on bed usage is now obtained in the form of average daily bed occupancy and not as occupancy at 31 December.

Private Hospitals and Nursing Homes

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the private hospitals and nursing homes which treated National Health Service patients under contractual arrangements with Welsh health authorities in 1985.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The required information is as follows:

Convent of Mercy, Colwyn Bay, Clwyd.
Maes Mynnan Nursing Home, Mold, Clwyd.
Poolmead Centre, Bath.
St. Andrews Hospital, Northampton.
The Royal Hospital and Home for Incurables, West Hill, Putney, London.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the private hospitals in Wales, giving in each case the health authority and the number of beds.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The latest available information, which relates to 31 December 1985, is given below:

Health authority	Name of hospital	Number of beds
Gwent	St. Joseph's Nursing Home, Malpas, Newport	56
Gwynedd	North Wales Medical Centre, Queens Road, Llandudno	52
South Glamorgan	B.U.P.A. Croescadarn Road, Pentwyn, Cardiff	48
West Glamorgan	Sancta Maria Hospital, Ffynone, Swansea	40

Patient Care

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each health authority and for Wales as a whole the expenditure on contractual arrangements for patient care in 1985-86.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is as follows:

Consultants

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each year since 1979 the total number of consultants holding (a) whole-time, (b) maximum part-time, (c) other part-time and (d) honorary contracts with the National Health Service in Wales; and if he will break down the figures by health district.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: For information relating to 1984 and previous years I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him on 25 November 1985, (Official Report, Col. 459). Information for September 1985, is as follows:—

Number of Consultants[1]

	Full-time	Maximum Part-time	Other Part-time	Honorary
Clwyd	82	26	8	1
East Dyfed	59	7	2	—
Gwent	69	35	2	1

WALES	522	212	16	91

[1] Including all medical and dental consultants in hospital and community services. Consultants who work for more than one authority are included only in the figures for the authority in which the majority of their sessions are worked.

Council House Sales

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many council homes have been sold in 1986 to sitting tenants in Dyfed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Between January and September 1986, 355 council homes in Dyfed have been sold to sitting tenants.

Assisted Places

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much is earmarked for the assisted places scheme in 1986-87, and 1987-88; and how much since the scheme's inception has been paid in each operative year for (a) school uniforms for the assisted places scheme and (b) travel grants.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The allocation for the financial year 1986-87 is £1,090,000 and subject to parliamentary approval, proposed expenditure for 1987-88 is £1,347,000. Payments in respect of costs incurred on school uniform and travel grants are shown in the following table. There are still some claims outstanding:

Payments

School year	School uniform (£)	Travel grants (£)
1981-82	2,547·78	3,288·87
1982-83	4,817·00	4,997·75
1983-84	6,045·45	6,387·45
1984-85	5,765·35	8,314·50
1985-86	1,018·60	3,069·86

Housing

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the total allocation to Welsh housing authorities in each year from 1979 to 1986 inclusive.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Total housing capital allocations to Welsh local authorities in the period 1979-80 to 1986-87 are as follows:

1979-80	121·2
1980-81	110·0
[1]1981-82	97·6
1982-83	145·8
1983-84	184·3
1984-85	125·6
1985-86	109·1
[2]1986-87	138·5

[2] Provisional.

The allocations are not comparable from year to year because of changes in the basis of calculation.

School Meals

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received in the past six months on the subject of the provision and nutritional quality of Welsh school means; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: In the past six months I have received two letters concerning the provision of school meals. Both raised fears that children of parents in receipt of family income supplement might lose entitlement to free meals as a result of the new Social Security Act.

Although the entitlement to free school meals will be lost when the changes become operative in April 1988, it is intended that benefit will generally be provided in the form of a cash increase in family credits.

No representations have been received in the past six months in respect of the nutritional quality of Welsh school meals.

Primary Schools (Closures)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many rural primary schools in Wales were closed in each of the years from 1979-80 to 1985-86.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information, by calendar year, is as follows:

2, 8, 9, 9, 7, 4, 15 and 7 (to date).

Students (Financial Support)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met members of the National Union of Students on the subject of financial support for Welsh students; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Secretary of State has not recently met representatives of the NUS to discuss financial support for Welsh students. Welsh Office officials, however, have met student representatives on various occasions in the last two years to receive representations about the level of student awards.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received in the last six months on the subject of student financial support in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I have received 24 letters in the last six months about various aspects of student financial support. The majority of these cases concerned students who had been unsuccessful in seeking discretionary awards from their local education authority.

Drains and Sewerage

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many miles of drains and sewerage in the Welsh system (a) were built in the 19th century and (b) are in need of repair and replacement; what percentage of the total mileage this represents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Chapter 5 of the annual report of the Welsh Water Authority for 1985-86, a copy of which is available in the Library, discusses sewerage. More detailed information is not held centrally and I have asked the chairman of the authority to write direct to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made by the Welsh Office in trying to find a solution to the sewerage problems at Maes Gerddi, Porthmadog; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the Department's letter to him of 30 October 1986. The Department has since received correspondence from the solicitors of the Maes Gerddi residents' association requesting that the Department take no further action in this matter while negotiations continue. The Department is not involved in these negotiations.

Jobs

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the number of new jobs created in each county of Wales in each of the years 1979 to 1986; what proportion of these are in the manufacturing industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Information in the form requested is not available. I shall write to the hon. Gentleman giving such data as can be provided.

Truancy

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the truancy rate for Welsh school secondary pupils in each year since 1980; and what are the latest available figures.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is not collected centrally.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his policy towards the provision of resources for children with special educational needs in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The provision of resources for the education of children with special educational needs is a matter for local education authorities. They receive help in meeting these needs through the rate support grant.

Help is also available through a specific direction of resources, via education Support Grants; these are for the provision of microelectronic equipment and computerised learning aids.

Resources are also provided centrally for a project which is establishing the requirements of children with special educational needs when they are integrated into ordinary schools.

School Buildings

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received in the last six months from teachers' unions about the state of school buildings in Wales; and if he proposes to make funds available to tackle dilapidated buildings.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave him on 17 November 1986, Official Report, column 35.

School Books

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received in the last six months from teachers' unions about the provision of books in Welsh schools.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: In the last six months we have received representations from two teachers' unions. Both raised the matter of the provision of books in the context of a general discussion on the introduction of GCSE examinations.

Disabled Students

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what are the proportions of disabled students in higher education in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Department does not collect this information.

MSC Schemes

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many of the people employed on Manpower Services Commission schemes in Wales work on schemes for agencies based in England; and what proportion of the total employed on such schemes they represent.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [pursuant to his reply, 17 November 1986, c. 38]: The latest information available on scheme participants is as follows:

	Number on England-based agency schemes	Percentage of total
Community Programme	5,036	25
Youth Training Scheme	2,791	13
Voluntary Projects Programme	313	28

Participants include those who are employed, receiving training or given the opportunity to do voluntary work on MSC schemes. The figures do not include supervisory staff.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Clinical Academic Staff

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure avoidance of delays in awarding pay parity for clinical academic staff with National Health Service colleagues.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend met representatives of the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals on 13 October. He explained the nature of the Governments willingness to compensate universities for additional costs involved in applying to clinical academic staff pay awards recommended for NHS hospital doctors by the Doctors and Dentists Review Body (DDRB). The Clinical Academic Staff Salaries Committee subsequently determined that clinical academic staff should receive the award with effect from 1 July 1986. Now that the Government's position is understood delays in the application of DDRB awards to clinical academic staff should no longer occur.

Departmental Initiatives

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list initiatives by his Department which have been of benefit specifically to the north-east, north-west and Yorkshire and Humberside regions since 1979.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government are pursuing their principal aims for raising standards and securing better value for money in all sectors of education and for increasing participation of school leavers in higher and further education through legislative and other measures which have specific benefits for the regions concerned. For example, Cumbria, Humberside, Cheshire, North Yorkshire and Northumberland are amongst 14 local education authorities participating in a programme, funded by the Department through education support grant, to identify cost-effective means of enriching the curriculum in small rural primary schools. Authorities in these regions will also benefit from ESGs for a range of other activities and from the separate grant scheme for in-service teacher training.

Funding under special initiatives within the AFE pool — for biotechnology, research and engineering and technology — for selected polytechnics in the region amounted to £775,000 in 1985-86 and £895,000 in 1986-87.

The advice on target student numbers given by the NAB and accepted by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has allowed for an increase of 13 ·7 per cent. in full time equivalent student numbers in local authority HE in the region, compared with 11 ·4 per cent. nationally, between 1982-83 and 1986-87.

In addition, my right hon. Friend's proposals for city technology colleges are designed to benefit a number of urban areas in these regions

Rural Schools

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what provision for rural schools is included in the public expenditure increase for education in the autumn statement.

Mr. Dunn: The increase of 18·8 per cent. in the Government's plans for local expenditure on education in 1987-88 does not distinguish between types of school. It allows scope for local education authorities generally to enhance provision in all schools, according to local needs and priorities. The distribution of rate support grant takes into account factors such as the increased cost of education in sparsely populated areas.

Student Grants

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received with regard to the decision to change the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations 1986, schedule 2, part 4, paragraph 21*(b)* on the earnings qualifications for older students.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend has received about 80 letters since the change was announced.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in the past three months on the level of student financial support.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend has received about 50 representations in the last three months. In addition, a few organisations have already submitted evidence to the review of student support.

Primary and Secondary Education

Mr. Rathbone asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he proposes to give any guidance to local education authorities on how best to encourage high quality teaching in their primary and secondary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government's policy was set out in the White Papers "Teaching Quality" in March 1983 and "Better Schools" in March 1985. Since then there has been progress in a number of areas including new arrangements for grants for in-service training of teachers and teacher appraisal.

Leicester (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the recent visit to Leicester by the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Rumbold).

Mrs. Rumbold: I have not visited Leicester since my appointment as Minister of State, but did visit Beauchamp college in Oadby, Leicestershire on 12 November. During that visit I talked to the head teacher, members of staff and pupils about the initiatives the school is developing in the field of equal opportunities for girls and boys, and saw examples of pupils' work.

Further and Higher Education

Sir William van Straubenzee asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the work of the British Accreditation Council for Independent Further and Higher Education.

Mr. Walden: Following the abolition in 1982 of the Department's voluntary system of "recognition as efficient" of private sector further education colleges, discussions were held between parties interested in setting up an alternative system. These discussions resulted in the establishment of the British Accreditation Council for Independent Further and Higher Education as a company limited by guarantee, with charitable status. The BAC became operational in 1984. A number of bodies interested in maintaining academic standards in the United Kingdom have nominated members of the BAC's board. The BAC's role is to accredit institutions by inspection; it does not validate awards.

The Government welcome endeavours of this sort to establish standards within the independent sector.

Brixton, Plymouth (New School)

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for South Hams of 25 September about a new school for Brixton, Plymouth, and his further letter of 30 October asking for an early reply to his letter of 25 September.

Mr. Dunn: I replied on 19 November.

Schools (Closure)

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will introduce legislation to confer powers on environmental health officers to close a school if they believe that any aspect of the school presents a serious health risk to pupils and staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: We have no plans at present to make changes in these arrangements. There are sufficient powers under existing legislation to prevent a school from being used if it is a danger to public health. My right hon. Friend is aware of problems in the Bradford area and will shortly be meeting a deputation.

Institute of Marine Biochemistry

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what basis his Department calculated its estimate of the costs of transferring the Institute of Marine Biochemistry from Aberdeen to Oban.

Mr. Walden: The transfer of the Institute of Marine Biochemistry from Aberdeen to Oban is a matter for the Natural Environment Research Council.

The work of IMB concerns mainly research on fish nutrition of relevance to fish farming. I understand that the council's decision to transfer this work to Oban was based on the potential for increased collaboration with scientists already there, considerations of the nature and long term prospects of the science and the cost of continuing to maintain a small laboratory at Aberdeen for this purpose.

The costs and savings related to the transfer are principally:

i. Building costs at SMBA, Oban, offset by the receipts expected from the sale of the IMB building;
ii. the costs of the transfer of mobile staff to Oban and severance payments for non-mobile staff;
iii. continuing savings from lower running costs at Oban as compared with Aberdeen.

The council has concluded that the transfer is beneficial on both scientific and financial grounds.

O-Level Examinations

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report the percentage of children in each local education authority who achieve five or more O-levels within the grades A-C.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply as soon as possible.

A-Level Examinations

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report the percentage of children in each local education authority who achieve five or more 'A' levels within grades A-C.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Leukaemia

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give, for each year since 1979, the total sum devoted by the Medical Research Council to projects involving leukaemia.

Mr. Walden: Since 1979 expenditure by the Medical Research Council on research into leukaemia has been as follows:

Financial year	£ million
1979-80	1·27
1980-81	1·73
1981-82	1·33
1982-83	1·40
1983-84	1·39
1984-85	1·38
1985-86	1·86

Personnel (Morale)

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to improve the morale of those engaged in education.

Mrs. Rumbold: The main aim of the Department's policies is to improve standards in all sectors of education whilst at the same time making best use of the resources available. On 6 November, my right hon. Friend announced an additional £2·25 billion for education in 1987-88, including some £500 million for improving school teachers' pay and conditions of service. These policies should improve the morale of those engaged in the education service.

Redundant Maintained Schools

Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will introduce legislation to require local authorities to offer redundant maintained schools for sale to other institutions of learning before the land and buildings are put on the open market.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has at present no plans to do so.

ENVIRONMENT

Advertisements (Control)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he proposes to take to implement the recommendation of the working party on the control of advertisements' regulations that house colours and colour schemes on the exterior of premises should be covered by provisions in the regulations.

Mr. Tracey: The working party recommended that we should consider the merits of bringing house colours and colour schemes within the scope of advertisement control. We published the working party's report on 30 July 1986 with a consultation paper setting out proposals for the revision of the Control of Advertisements Regulations. We are considering the responses.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has as to the proportion of full planning appeals against decisions by each of the planning authorities in Staffordshire and by the Peak Park planning board which were decided in favour of the applicant in each of the past five years;

(2) what information he has at to the proportion of written planning appeals against decisions by each of the planning authorities in Staffordshire and by the Peak Park planning board which were decided in favour of the applicant in each of the past five years;

(3) what information he has as to the proportion of informal planning appeals against decisions by each of the planning authorities in Staffordshire and by the Peak Park planning board which were decided in favour of the applicant in each of the past five years.

Mr. Tracey: Tables 1 and 2 give details of the numbers of planning appeals under sections 36 and 37 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 against decisions of planning authorities in Staffordshire and of the Peak Park planning board which were decided and allowed in 1984 and 1985 respectively, the earliest years for which information about individual planning authorities is available. "Written planning appeals" and "Informal planning appeals" are assumed to refer to those appeals determined under the written representations and informal hearings procedures respectively.

Departmental Initiatives

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list initiatives by his Department which have been of benefit specifically to the north-east, north-west and Yorkshire and Humberside regions since 1979.

Mr. Ridley: Each of these regions has benefited from the urban programme, urban development grant and derelict land grant. The aggregate allocations for 1986-87 are:

Region	Urban programme	Derelict land grant	Urban development grant	Total
North-east	40·7	15·5	2·3	58·5
North-west	90·8	29·3	6·8	126·9
Yorkshire and Humberside	21·7	7·5	5·0	34·2
TOTAL	153·2	52·3	14·1	219·6

Enterprise zones have been created in each region, as follows:

North-east
- Tyneside
- Hartlepool
- Middlesbrough

North-west
- North East Lancashire (Burnley, Hyndburn, Pendle, Rossendale)
- Salford/Trafford
- Speke
- Workington

Yorkshire and Humberside
- Wakefield
- Rotherham
- Glanford
- Scunthorpe

In addition, my Department is responsible for, or participates in, a number of specific initiatives in the north-east and north-west, as follows:

North-east
- Newcastle/Gateshead City Action Team
- Cleveland Coordination Team
- North Middlesbrough Task Force
- Derwentside Industrial Strategy Committee
- Shildon ERDF Coordinating Committee
- South Tyneside Industrial Strategy Committee

North-west
- Merseyside Task Force
- Merseyside Development Corporation
- Mersey Basin Campaign
- Groundwork Trusts in Knowsley/St. Helens; Macclesfield; Oldham/Rochdale; Rossendale; Salford/Trafford; Wigan
- Manchester/Salford City Action Team
- Moss Side and Hulme Task Force

I have recently announced the intention to set up new urban development corporations—two in the north-east, Teesside and Tyne and Wear; and one in the north-west, at Trafford Park.

Housing Revenue Account

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the national notional housing revenue account for the current financial year and the estimates made in respect of the next financial year, and list the assumptions contained therein.

Mr. Tracey: The following tables are summaries of the housing revenue accounts of local authorities in England for 1985-86 and 1986-87. These summaries are based directly on provisional outturn figures for 1985-86 and estimates for 1986-87 submitted by local authorities to the Department, adjusted to allow for a small number of missing authorities. Similar information is not available at this stage for 1987-88.

Local Authorities (Capital Receipts)

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the assumptions underlying the estimate of capital receipts accruing to local authorities, including the sale of council houses, housing land and the repayments of loans and advances for housing purposes in the year 1987-88.

Mr. Tracey: The housing capital receipts of local authorities are forecast to be £1,581 million in 1987-88. The details are as follows:

	£ million cash
Receipts from sale of land	100
Initial receipts from council house sales	1,000
Discount repayments	21
Repayment of sums left outstanding on sales	330
Repayments of loans to private persons	105
Repayments of loans to housing associations	25

The assumptions about council house sales on which these forecasts are based are:

Forecasts
Number of completed sales	80,000
Average selling price net of discount	£15,600
Average level of discount	47 per cent.
Average level of private finance	80 per cent.

Council House Sales

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total value of discounts accruing to tenants exercising the right to buy or purchasing their homes from local authorities under voluntary sales agreements in each year since 1978-79, including the estimate for the current financial year.

Mr. Tracey: The information collected from local authorities is the aggregate amount of discounts on all their housing sales each quarter and the available estimates for England are as follows:

1978-79	0·1
1979-80	0·3
1980-81	0·4
1981-82	0·9
1982-83	1·3
1983-84	0·9
1984-85	0·9
1985-86 (provisional)	0·9
1st quarter 1986-87 (provisional)	0·2

Schools (Assistance)

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, if he will list the schools that have been assisted under the service provision initiatives in rural development areas.

Mr. Waldegrave: There are no specific service provision initiatives in rural development areas. The Development Commission considers applications for grant aid for selected projects forming part of annual rural development programmes for those areas.

Severn Barrage

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will detail the role that will be played by his Department in ensuring that the research into the Severn barrage is directed towards safeguarding all aspects of the environment of the Severn estuary.

Mr. Waldegrave: Officials of my Department are in consultation with officials from the Department of Energy with the aim of ensuring that the total package of research into the Severn barrage includes an adequate examination of the regional and environmental aspects before any decision to construct a barrage is taken.

Killer Whales

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take immediate steps to ban the importation of killer whales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have already acted. In my answer of 1 July 1986 at column 459 I said that my Department would not permit further imports of cetaceans until new standards for dolphinaria were met.

The departmental steering group set up to consider the detailed recommendations of the report commissioned from Dr. Margaret Klinowska is continuing its work and will take into account the recent death of the killer whale Nemo, at Windsor safari park.

West Yorkshire (Development Fund Assistance)

Mr. John Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how long on average it takes between approval of an application for European regional development fund non-quota textile areas assistance for projects in west Yorkshire and payment of grant moneys.

Mr. Waldegrave: Grant is claimed as authorities incure expenditure. The average time for grant payment from the closing date of each claims round is seven months.

Mr. John Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications for European regional development fund non-quota textile areas assistance have been approved for projects in west Yorkshire; and what is the total value of these approved applications.

Mr. Waldegrave: There have been 49 approvals with a total grant value of £1·562 million in west Yorkshire on the infrastructure side.

Mr. John Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications for European regional development fund non-quota textile areas assistance are awaiting approval for projects in west Yorkshire; and what is the total value of these outstanding applications.

Mr. Waldegrave: There are three applications under consideration from the 1986 round with a potential grant value of £743,856. Ten subsequent applications with a potential grant value of £879,000 have also been submitted to the Department and will be considered as part of the 1987 round. My regional office has also received seven further applications with grant potential of £193,000 for schemes not yet in local authority capital programmes.

Falkland Islands (Machinery Auction)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total sum received by Her Majesty's Government from the sale of machinery used in the Falkland Islands auctioned on 18 November; and what information he has on the original purchase price of the items auctioned.

Mr. Chope: A detailed account has not yet been completed but about £700,000 has been realised from the auction held on 17 and 18 November 1986.

These items are the residue from stocks issued by the Ministry of Defence for use by the Royal Engineers during and after the Falklands war and subsequently passed to the Property Services Agency for their use in the islands. The original purchase price of the various items cannot readily be identified, and the amount realised represents their secondhand value.

Privatisation

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which local Government services he proposes should be privatised; and if it is his intention, in the forthcoming legislation on this subject, to take enabling powers or to specify such services in the Bill itself.

Dr. Boyson: We have no plans for privatisation; only for the exposure of services to competition for the benefit of the ratepayer. We intend to include an initial list of services on the face of a Bill, with provision for adding others in secondary legislation. Final decisions on the initial list have not been taken, but it will include refuse collection, street cleansing, building cleaning, vehicle maintenance, ground maintenance and catering.

Birmingham (Parish Proposals)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the report on the review of parish proposals for Birmingham from the local government boundary commission under section 48 of the Local Government Act.

Mr. Chope: The timetable for the submission of proposals by the local government boundary commission is a matter for them.

North Sea Conference

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is now able to announce the date on which the international North sea conference will be held in 1987.

Mr. Waldegrave: The conference will be held in London on Tuesday 24 November and Wednesday 25 November 1987.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the value by historic cost and market price, of the local authority housing stock sold since 1979 (a) under right to buy legislation, (b) sales to sitting tenants and (c) sales of vacant dwellings, giving the cost of discounts off the sale price in each case;

(2) what is the total local authority housing stock sold since 1979, giving a breakdown of sales (a) under right to buy legislation (b) other sales to sitting tenants and (c) sales of vacant dwellings, listing how many in each category were (i) houses, (ii) flats, (iii) maisonettes, (iv) bungalows and (v) others.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his answer, 17 November 1986, c. 44-45]: Between April 1979 and June 1986 nearly 750,000 council houses were sold in England at a price after discount of £8 billion. These sales have given individual tenants greater control over their own homes and environment, are leading to more variety and social diversity on former council estates, and have given authorities very substantial additional resources for other capital work.

The detailed figures are as follows:

Sales of local authority dwellings, England April 1979 to June 1986

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Statistics

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many square feet of exercise space are available to prisoners in Liverpool prison.

Mr. Mellor: A total of 40,888 sq ft in exercise yards, 109,620 sq ft in the grassed area, and 8,964 sq ft in the gymnasia.

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners there are in Her Majesty's prisons; how many these prisons were designed to hold; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: On 14 November 1986 the total prison population in England and Wales was 47,664 as against a certified normal accommodation of 41,149.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the minimum recommended number of officers working in each of Her Majesty's prisons; what was the actual number on duty on the latest date for which figures are available; how these figures compare with the authorised establishment at each prison; what is the number of prisoners in each prison and how this figure compares with the recommended maximum; what is the recommended ratio of prison officers to prisoners at each prison and what is the actual figure; and if he will give these figures for each of the last three years, where appropriate.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not readily available and I shall reply as soon as possible.

Smoke Detectors

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy as to the installation of smoke detectors in business premises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Automatic fire detection systems incorporating smoke detectors can make a very effective contribution to good fire precautions within business premises, provided that the systems are properly installed and maintained.

Prisoners

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners were being held in police cells on 1 November;

(2) what was the present prison population at 1 November 1986; and what were the numbers at 1 November 1979.

Mr. Mellor: On 31 October 1986 the total prison population in England and Wales was 47,341 plus 106 prisoners in police cells. On 31 October 1979 the total population was 42,550. Population figures for 1 November are not available centrally.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the police stations in the Greater London area where prisoners were being held on 1 November.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that prisoners were held at the Metropolitan police support unit headquarters at Lambeth, at Highbury corner, Camberwell Green and South Western magistrates' courts and at seven police stations which, for operational reasons, the Commissioner does not wish to be identified.

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department for how many hours in the most recent convenient week the workshops in Wandsworth prison were open; what was the average number of prisoners employed; how many classes took place and for how many hours; what was the average number of prisoners in each class; and how much time on average each prisoner spent out of his cell during that week.

Mr. Mellor: In the week commencing 3 November 1986 the workshops were open for an average of 18 hours; an average of 648 prisoners were employed each working day in the workshops and on catering, maintenance, cleaning and other domestic tasks; 121 education classes (65 daytime and 56 evening) were held for a total of 234 hours; there were an average of seven prisoners in each class. It is not practical to calculate the average amount of time spent out of cells since this covers many things apart from work and education including, for example, exercise, association, visits, use of the prison library and canteen and other out of cell activities.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average population of Wandsworth prison in the most recent convenient week.

Mr. Mellor: Prison population figures are collected centrally once a week. On 14 November 1986 Her Majesty's prison Wandsworth held 1,548 prisoners.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many square feet of exercise space is available to prisoners in Wandsworth prison.

Mr. Mellor: A total of 66,300 sq ft in exercise yards and 1,820 sq ft in the gymnasium.

Stocken Prison

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total cost of construction of the new prison officers' houses at Her Majesty's prison Stocken; when the work was completed; how many are currently unoccupied; how many are occupied by prison officers and how many by estate staff from Stocken hall farm; and what steps are being taken to rectify this situation.

Mr. Mellor: The 40 prison officers' houses at Stocken were built at a total cost of £2·37 million. Construction was undertaken in four phases of 10 houses each, the phases being handed over on 22 April, 6 June, 26 June, and 10 July 1986 respectively. Five of the houses are currently occupied by prison officers and two by horticultural craftsmen employed in the prison; the remaining 33 houses are unoccupied.

The present low rate of occupation can be attributed to the fact that the houses were not completed until some time after Stocken prison was opened. Staff originally posted to Stocken therefore opted to live in their own accommodation rather than wait for quarters to become available. As new staff who require quarters are posted to Stocken and to Ashwell prisons the occupancy rate of the Stocken quarters can be expected to increase.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest estimated cost to public funds of the necessary remedial work at Her Majesty's prison, Stocken regarding the gatehouse entrance; when this work will be undertaken; and what steps are being taken to establish responsibility, including financial responsibility, for the original unsatisfactory arrangements.

Mr. Mellor: Various items of remedial work associated with the gatehouse at Stocken prison were undertaken by the contractors during the 12 month defects liability period which followed the completion of the building work. These works were a contractual obligation and were carried out at no cost to public funds.

The latest estimate of the cost of the programme of improvements to the gatehouse drawn up by the Department is £230,000. The work is scheduled to commence in April 1987. The improvements are considered necessary to bring the equipment and operating systems up to the Department's current requirements, which are aimed at achieving efficiency of operation with maximum economy of staffing levels. These requirements have been developed since the time at which Stocken prison was designed; the original arrangements were not unsatisfactory in relation to the circumstances at the time.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of computers originally installed in the computer classroom at Her Majesty's prison, Stocken, and at what total cost; why they have been replaced by another model, and at what cost; and what use is to be made of the original computers.

Mr. Mellor: Six BBC microcomputers were supplied as part of the initial equipment for the education centre at Stocken prison to provide students with the opportunity to develop basic computer skills, for use in a business studies class and for use as a teaching aid in other classes. Because of the delay in completing the fitting out of a room designated for a separate full-time vocational training course in computer studies, these machines, together with two others which were purchased subsequently, were used for part of the time for an interim vocational training course which utilised an ordinary classroom.

The designated computer studies room is now ready and 12 Ferranti microcomputer systems costing £21,400 are currently being installed and commissioned. The BBC microcomputer will continue to be used in the general education programme as originally intended.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current budget and staffing of the prisons education service; and what are the comparable figures for Her Majesty's prison, Stocken.

Mr. Mellor: The planned expenditure on prison education services in England and Wales in the financial year 1986-87 is £14·54 million. Expenditure on such services at Her Majesty's prison Stocken in 1986-87 is expected to be about £246,000. The latter figure includes expenditure on equipment to commission new courses which will not be repeated in subsequent years. Both figures exclude some education-related expenditure, the main items of which are the costs of the prison officer manpower and prison buildings used in connection with the provision of education services and the pay of vocational training and construction industry training instructors.

In 1986-87 there is provision for local education authorities to supply to prison service establishments 527 salaried education staff and also 499,324 sessional teaching hours to be undertaken by part-time teachers. The corresponding figures for Her Majesty's prison Stocken are 4 and 8,560 respectively. In addition 323 full-time vocational and construction industry training instructors are currently employed directly by the prison department including five at Her Majesty's prison Stocken.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will give details of the tendering procedures which were followed by his Department before equipment and furnishings were ordered for a computer classroom at Her Majesty's prison, Stocken;

(2) whether he will make a statement on the results of his investigation into how equipment and furnishings costing approximately £7,000 was ordered for a computer classroom at Her Majesty's prison, Stocken; whether these items remain in storage and unused; and what steps will be taken to dispose of them.

Mr. Mellor: Four companies were invited to provide quotations for the supply of microcomputer equipment to Her Majesty's prison, Stocken and two other prisons. All four companies replied and the company offering the best value for money was selected to provide the equipment. In addition, specialist furnishing for the designated computer classroom at Stocken, mainly comprising work stations and chairs, were ordered from a supplier at a cost of nearly £8,000 without competitive quotations because of the high priority given at that time to early commissioning of the vocational training course in computer studies. This supplier had previously completed a similar order to a satisfactory standard in another prison service establishment following a competitive tender and the staff concerned concluded that its services would represent value for money. The computer equipment and furnishings are currently being installed and commissioned in the computer room and the course will shortly become fully operational.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the equal opportunities policy of the Metropolitan police will be included in the Commissioner's force goal and in the divisional strategies.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commissioner is still considering the form of his strategy statement for 1987 which will include the force goal. Divisional plans will reflect that statement.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether a working group has been established to determine the implementation of equal opportunities in the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Yes.

Leeds Prison

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the prisoners in Her Majesty's prison, Leeds on 7 November were held on remand.

Mr. Mellor: On 7 November 1986, Her Majesty's prison, Leeds held 548 unconvicted prisoners and 67 convicted unsentenced prisoners.

Prisoners (Cell Sharing)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many of the prisoners in Her Majesty's prison, Leeds on 7 November were sharing a cell with (a) three other prisoners and (b) two other prisoners;

(2) how many prisoners on the latest available figures were sharing a cell with (a) three other prisoners and (b) two other prisoners.

Mr. Mellor: The number of prisoners sharing cells certified for one prisoner is recorded centrally only once a month. On 12 October there were 4,350 prisoners held three to a cell and 12,972 held two to a cell in England and Wales of whom 172 and 921 respectively were in Her Majesty's prison, Leeds. No prisoners were held four to a cell.

R. v. Ayres

Mr. Oakes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he intends to take on the advice of the Criminal Law Revision Committee with regard to the case of R. v. Ayres.

Mr. Mellor: The 18th report of the Criminal Law Revision Committee recommended that the ambit of the common law offence of conspiracy to defraud should be restored by statute to what it had been before 1977. We have accepted this recommendation and clause 12(1) of the Criminal Justice Bill adopts the terms of the draft clause suggested by the committee. Also in accordance with the committee's advice, prosecutors will be given guidance by the Director of Public Prosecutions on the proper use of the charge. We have, however, departed from the 18th report in one respect. The committee recommended that the penalty for the offence should remain unlimited, but we have thought it right to provide a maximum of 10 years' imprisonment—the same as for theft.

Traffic Offences

Mr. Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis (a) as to the number of prosecutions for unlawful use of bus lanes by unauthorised vehicles in London in each of the last three years and (b) as to the number of vehicles wheelclamped in each year since wheel clamps were introduced; and, of these, how many were vehicles in respect of which diplomatic immunity was claimed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has indicated that statistics in respect of bus lane offences are not recorded separately and cannot be obtained without disproportionate cost. Wheelclamping in central London commenced on 16 May 1983. Wheelclamps are not affixed to vehicles in relation to which a claim of diplomatic immunity is believed to arise. The table below shows the total number of vehicles clamped in each year, and the number of fees waived following a claim of diplomatic immunity.

1983 (from 16 May 1983)	26,808	156
1984	44,101	110
1985	34,801	48
1986 (up to 14 November 1986)	27,841	4

Peace Convoy

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make an emergency payment to Hampshire county council to help it cover the cost of policing the peace convoy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. I see no grounds for departing from the normal arrangements under which well over half of the expenditure of police authorities is met from central funds. Under these arrangements the Home Office meets 51 per cent. of the expenditure through police grant and the central Government make a further contribution through the block grant payable to local authorities.

Channel Tunnel (Immigration Control)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions his Department has held with French Railways, the European Commission and British Rail on the harmonisation of immigration controls on Channel tunnel trains; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: No discussions of the sort referred to by the hon. Member have taken place. However, British and French Government officials, including representatives of my Department, are negotiating arrangements for frontier controls in respect of the Channel tunnel. My officials are also in touch with British Rail about the arrangements for immigration control for trains travelling to and from London and beyond via the Channel tunnel.

Wheel Clamps

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Metropolitan police officers were engaged in wheel clamp duties in October 1985 and October 1986.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In both October 1985 and October 1986, four police constables were engaged in wheel clamp duties. In addition, one police sergeant and six police constables were engaged in duties at car pounds, and 60 per cent. of their time was occupied on wheel clamping matters. One inspector and two police sergeants were engaged on supervisory duties involving wheel clamping and vehicle removals. The physical work of clamping and unclamping is carried out by civilian employees.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of wheel clamps held by the Metropolitan police in October 1985 and October 1986.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The number of wheel clamps held by the Metropolitan police in both October 1985 and October 1986 was 300.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many wheel clamp prosecutions were made by the Metropolitan police in 1985 and in 1986 to date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The fixing of a wheel clamp to a vehicle does not itself give rise to a prosecution but the offence which led to the fixing of the clamp is the subject of a fixed penalty notice. During 1985 34,101 vehicles were wheel-clamped and up to 14 November 1986 27,841 vehicles had been wheel-clamped this year.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of operating the Metropolitan police wheel clamp unit in 1985-86.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The cost of operating the Metropolitan police wheel clamp unit from 1 April 1985 to 31 March 1986 was £966,685·00.

Polling Booths

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement detailing the cost per annum of the storage, handling and distribution of polling booths;

(2) what are the amounts spent per annum on repairing or replacing polling booths;

(3) what amounts were spent on the storage, handling, distribution, repair and replacement of polling booths at the last general election;

(4) what amounts were spent on the storage, handling, distribution, repair and replacement of polling booths at the last European Parliament election.

Mr. MacGregor: I have been asked to reply.

The claims from acting returning officers for the 1979 and 1983 general elections and the 1979 and 1984 European Assembly elections have been examined. The costs for adapting and fitting up of any room for election purpose were £842,588, £1,244,189, £524,782 and £990,000 (estimate) respectively, or an average cost of just over £900,000. The further detail of costs for the handling, distribution, repair and replacement of polling booths could be obtained only with disproportionate expenditure of time and resources. Local authorities meet the costs of storage of polling booths for whatever form of election.

EMPLOYMENT

Restart Scheme

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General if there are any circumstances in which the form UB671, "Availability for Work Questionnaire", has been used or would be expected to be used by DE group staff working in restart teams.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The form UB671 is completed by claimants in the unemployment benefit office when they first make a claim for benefit. It is used by the unemployment benefit service in determining eligibility for benefit in accordance with long standing legal rules.

It is not used by staff in restart teams and I have no present plans for them to use it. Our restart teams are helping a completely different group of people — those who have been unemployed for over twelve months.

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General how many claimants called for restart interview have failed to attend their interview; how many of those failing to attend are believed to have found work; how many of those failing to attend have not found work; how many failing to attend have had their benefit stopped; how many of these have successfully appealed against the benefit decision; and how many failing to attend have subsequently re-registered as unemployed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: By 9 October 528,115 people had been contacted under the restart scheme, of whom 27,533 had failed to attend an interview, after two invitations. We have no means of knowing how many of them have, or have not, found work.

Of those who failed to attend, 8,405 had their benefit stopped, in accordance with long standing laws which require recipients to attend an interview. Of these 4,504 had their benefit reinstated because they subsequently attended an interview. Statistical records for the numbers of appeals are not available. A total of 377 people who failed to attend after two invitations to interview have subsequently made fresh claims and were awarded benefit again as unemployed people.

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General if he will list the circumstances or cases in which claimants referred to restart courses have had any benefit penalty exercised.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are not exercising any benefit penalty solely as a result of declining the offer of a restart course.

Departmental Initiatives

Mr. Silvester asked the Paymaster General if he will list initiatives by his Department which have been of benefit specifically to the north-east, north-west and Yorkshire and Humberside regions since 1979.

Mr. Lee: The main employment, training and enterprise measures offered by this Department and the Manpower Services Commission since 1979 have all been available to people in the north-east, north-west and Yorkshire and Humberside regions. The range of measures currently available is described in the "Action for Jobs" booklet. The measures which have operated in the period since 1979 are listed below.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Paymaster General what is the latest information his Department has on the number of those unemployed by social class in Britain; and what percentage of each social class these figures represent.

Mr. Lee: The available information which comes from the labour force survey is shown in the table below:

Numbers of people without a job and actively looking for work and as a percentage of those economically active in each group.

Great Britain, Spring 1985

Previous Social Class	Number	Percentage Rate
Professional etc. occupations	17,000	1·5
Intermediate occupations	210,000	3·5
Skilled occupations	814,000	6·7
Partly skilled occupations	419,000	9·6
Unskilled occupations	199,000	12·7
Not classified	[1]1,155,000	[2]
All unemployed	2,814,000	10·6

[1] includes 554,000 people looking for work for over 3 years who were not asked about their previous occupation.

[2] No meaningful rate can be computed for this group.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General what is the number of claimants registered as unemployed at unemployment benefit offices in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Liverpool, (c) Norwich, (d) Cromer and (e) North Walsham; and what is the number of persons registered at jobcentres for each of the above.

Mr. Lee: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him on 17 November 1986, col. 67-68, which contains the unemployment figures which he has requested. The following table gives the numbers of people registering for employment at jobcentres on 3 October 1986 in the areas requested, except that Great Britain figures are given instead of United Kingdom. Northern Ireland figures are not comparable with the rest of the United Kingdom, since only disabled people and those in skill shortage occupations are encouraged to register there.

Asbestos

Mr. Dobson asked the Paymaster General what criteria are used by the Health and Safety Commission to determine (a) the significance of exposure of workers to asbestos and (b) the appropriateness of their protection.

Mr. Trippier: The medical evidence on health effects of asbestos determines both the significance of exposure of workers and the precautions required. In particular, employers must ensure that the exposure of their employees is reduced to the lowest level reasonably practicable, and in any case never above stringent control limits.

Mr. Dobson asked the Paymaster General (1) how many deaths from the following asbestos-related diseases have been notified to the Health and Safety Executive for the years 1984 and 1985 (i) asbestosis together with lung cancer, (ii) asbestosis together with mesothelioma, (iii) asbestosis alone or with other diseases, (iv) mesothelioma of pleura, (v) mesothelioma of peritoneum, (vi) mesothelioma of pleura and peritoneum and (vii) mesothelioma, site not specified;

(2) how many additions to the mesothelioma register maintained by the Health and Safety Executive have been made for the years 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Trippier: The numbers of death certificates for 1984 added to the executive's register of specified asbestos-related diseases are as shown in the following table. Figures for 1985 are not yet available.

Deaths from specified asbestos-related diseases in Great Britain: 1984

	Number
Asbestosis with lung cancer	59
Asbestosis with mesothelioma	81
Asbestosis alone or with other diseases	67
TOTAL ASBESTOSIS[1]	207
Mesothelioma of pleura	462
Mesothelioma of peritoneum	43
Mesothelioma of pleura and peritoneum	11
Mesothelioma, site not specified	90
TOTAL MESOTHELIOMA[1]	606

[1] Both totals include the 81 certificates which mention asbestosis and mesothelioma.

Mr. Dobson asked the Paymaster General if he will give statistics on the prevalence of asbestosis, pneumoconiosis and mesothelioma in each year since 1975.

Mr. Trippier: The available information is as follows.

The figures for asbestosis and other pneumoconiosis are based on awards for benefit and those for mesothelioma on death certificates.

New awards of disablement benefit under the Industrial Injuries scheme

	Asbestosis	Other pneumoconiosis	Death certificates mentioning mesothelioma

Benefits

Mr. Fatchett asked the Paymaster General if he will publish information showing how many people in Leeds metropolitan district council area have had their benefits (a) reduced and (b) withdrawn in connection with the restart scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No one can lose their benefit entitlements solely as a result of the restart programme. Under long-standing legal rules people can lose their entitlement to benefit if they fail to attend an interview, are not available for work or refuse an offer of suitable employment. The information is not available in the precise form asked for. As at 9 October 1986 the number of people invited to a restart interview who had their benefit withdrawn in Leeds Metropolitan District Council area is 105. A further 98 claimants had benefit suspended and then reinstated after going to a restart interview which they had previously failed to attend.

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Paymaster General how many suspended claims for unemployment benefit were held at the adjudication office in Birmingham at 31 October or the most recent date for which the statistics are available.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Information is not available in the form requested. The number of cases under consideration at the adjudication office in Birmingham on 31 October 1986 was 6,678. It is not possible to say how many of these cases involved suspension of benefit. The adjudication office has always had and will continue to have a number of cases under consideration at any given time as part of our national insurance and supplementary benefit system.

Dr. David Clark asked the Paymaster General if, following the decision of the Social Security Commissioner, Mr. M. J. Goodman, in Southampton on 23 September to allow the payment of unemployment benefit to redundant employees of British Shipbuilders, he will now issue instructions to local offices instructing payments to be made to other persons in a similar position.

Mr. Lee: No. The Commissioner's decision allowed an individual claimant's appeal against disallowance of his claim for unemployment benefit. Whether this decision can be applied to claims from other redundant employees of British Shipbuilders is for consideration by the independent adjudicating authorities appointed under the Social Security Act 1975 to make decisions about benefit entitlement. Each case is considered on its merits.

Departmental Publicity

Mr. Frank Field asked the Paymaster General if he will list the size of his Department's advertising budget from each financial year since 1979; and if he will give the estimate for the next financial year.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Paymaster General what has been the size of the budget for information and publicity staff of each financial year since 1979; and if he will detail the number of staff employed on this work over the same time span.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Paymaster General if, in the light of the letter to him dated 7 November from the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation (RADAR), he has anything to add to his reply of 17 November Official Report, column 66, regarding the effect on disabled people of the new guidelines on the availability for work test; why his earlier answer made no mention of the letter from RADAR; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Job Training Schemes

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Paymaster General (1) how much the agencies which have been selected as Dundee management agents for the new Manpower Services Commission's job training schemes for the long-term unemployed will be paid by the Manpower Services Commission once the trainee has been placed with a company;

(2) which agencies in Dundee have been selected to manage the new Manpower Services Commission's job training schemes for long-term unemployed; and on what criteria the selection was made;

(3) how much the agencies who have been selected as Dundee management agents for the new Manpower Services Commission job training scheme for the long-term unemployed will be paid per person each week for administrative costs, from the Manpower Services Commission;

(4) if the companies who accept trainees from the new Manpower Services Commission's job training scheme for the long-term unemployed are obliged to pay a fee for the trainee.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 20 November 1986, c. 276]: Dundee training for employment and enterprise project is the managing agent for the pilot area's job training scheme. The criterion for selection is that potential managing agents should be able to organise schemes which can assess the needs of individuals for training, offer a sufficiently wide range of different types of training and linked practical experience to meet their needs (including training in new technology and self-employment), and provide training in job-interview and other related skills needed to help gain employment.

Managing agents will be paid an administration fee of £35 for each person joining the scheme and £58 for each month of training and linked practical experience delivered. Managing agents will expect providers of practical experience to pay a fee for trainees, but there is no set rate. The money will be used by managing agents to help meet the costs of the training that they provide.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Paymaster General (1) if those 20 long-term unemployed claimants who were invited to participate in the new Manpower Services Commission's funded job training programmes during interviews held in Dundee will be credited with national insurance contributions while on the scheme;

(2) if those 20 long-term unemployed claimants who were invited to participate in the new Manpower Services Commission's funded job training programme during interviews held in Dundee will be regarded as new claimants if they sign on when the scheme finishes;

(3) if those 20 long-term unemployed claimants who were invited to participate in the new Manpower Services Commission's funded job training programmes during interviews held in Dundee, will have their unemployment benefit withdrawn if they refuse to participate in the scheme;

(4) if those 20 long-term unemployed claimants who were invited to participate in the new Manpower Services Commission's funded job training programme during interviews held in Dundee will still be registered as unemployed if they accept this job training scheme.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986, c. 276]: The aim of the job training scheme pilots is to assist the long term unemployed to acquire skills which will help them find employment. Trainees will be volunteers and benefit sanctions will not be applied to anyone who does not wish to take up an offer of training in a pilot scheme.

Participants are not unemployed whilst on the training scheme. If they subsequently become unemployed, they will need to renew their claim for benefit. National insurance contributions are credited for each week or part week of the course.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Paymaster General why his officers were unable to provide information to those twenty long-term unemployed claimants invited to participate in the new Manpower Services Commission's funded job training programme in Dundee as to the implications for their entitlement to benefits of accepting a place on the scheme.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 20 November 1986, c. 276]: People on the job training scheme pilots will be paid a training allowance which will be no less than their previous rate of unemployment benefit or supplementary allowance. This is explained at the restart interview. In addition, people expressing an interest in joining the scheme receive individual counselling by the unemployment benefit service staff on transfer from one type of payment to another and are given a written statement about the amount of training allowance that they will receive and the availability of other benefits. I understood that these procedures were followed in Dundee.

Portsmouth

Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General how many people in Portsmouth have left the employment register through the restart programme since it started.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1986, c. 367.]: On the basis that the hon. Member is referring to the unemployment benefit count, it is impossible to estimate what proportion of those long-term unemployed people who have ceased to claim benefit in recent months have done so because of the restart programme. People are constantly ceasing to claim benefit because they have returned to work, started work, started training or for a variety of other reasons.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Manioc Imports

Mr. Latham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from pig producers regarding imports of manioc into the European Community; and any competitive advantage which this gives to Dutch pig producers; and what action he is taking in that regard.

Mr. Gummer: I have not received any recent representations from our pig producers about imports of manioc into the European Community. But I am aware that imports of cereal substitutes into the European Community are of concern to them.

It is difficult to make precise comparisons of feed costs for pig producers in the United Kingdom and other member states because of variations in such factors as the quality of feed produced and used. Compound feedstuffs in the Netherlands do contain a high proportion of cereal substitutes, imports of which enter the European Community mainly through Rotterdam.

I continue to work for further price restraints in the cereals sector. In this way, any advantage for users of cereals substitutes should be reduced.

Green Pound

Mr. Latham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received from the National Farmers' Union regarding the green pound; and what action he intends to take in that regard.

Mr. Gummer: Following the devaluation of the Irish green punt in September, I made a request to the Commission of the European Communities for devaluations of the green pound for beef and for other livestock products. On 18 November the Commission made a proposal for devaluations of the green pound and the French green franc for beef and sheepmeat. I am pressing for a positive decision at the earliest opportunity. The National Farmers Union wrote to me seeking a devaluation and has welcomed my request. It has, however, registered its concern at the size of the United Kingdom negative monetary compensatory amount. I keep this matter under constant review and shall continue to do so.

Pressure Stock Licences

Mr. Steen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will investigate the extent to which pressure stock licences are being bought in the Plymouth area and transferred to Spanish fishing vessels; and if he will make a statement about the practice of transferring pressure stock licences from British boats to boats belonging to other countries but registered in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Mr. Steen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to restrict the issue of pressure stock licences to British nationals fishing from British boats.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Departmental Information Technology Staff

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average number of days training per year given to professional information technology staff within his Department who are no longer trainees, in the most recent years available.

Mr Jopling: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Milk

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish a table showing the figures for milk production within each country in the European Community over the last 10 years and another table giving details of the consumption of milk in each of those countries during the same period.

Mr. Gummer: Usable production of wholemilk for 1982-84 for each member of the European Community 10 is given on page 92 of the fourth quarter 1985 edition of "animal production" (Eurostat), a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. Page 68 of the same publication also gives figures for cows milk collected for 1982-85. Data for earlier years are given in previous editions. Because milk is consumed as a range of products, in which the butterfat and solids-not-fat proportions are different from those in whole milk, it is not meaningful to produce a single figure for each country of milk consumption to compare with production. However, pages 95-103 of the Eurostat publication give usable production and human consumption of drinking milk and the major milk products for 1981-84.

Consultants (Fees)

Mr. Dobson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the spending of his Department on fees to outside consultants in the current year; and what it was in 1979-80 and each intervening year.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 19 November 1986, c. 252]: My Department has spent the following sums:

1984-85	328,518
1985-86	428,719
[1]1986-87	956,207

Pesticides (Temik)

Sir John Farr asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy that the aldicarb pesticide Temik will not be made available for sale or cleared by the Pesticide Registration Department until an evaluation has been made in the United Kingdom of its effects on the immune system.

Mr. Thompson [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1986; c. 376]: The insecticide Temik 10G, containing the active ingredient aldicarb, is approved under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986. It has been evaluated by the Advisory Committee on Pesticides and its Scientific Sub-Committee and was first cleared for use in 1974.

The recently-introduced statutory arrangements for approving pesticides make provision for approvals to be reviewed at any time in the light of new evidence. We have made urgent arrangements to obtain details of the Wisconsin university studies referred to in recent press reports, and these will be evaluated carefully by the appropriate experts before any consideration is given to the status of the product under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in Northern Ireland have been diagnosed as suffering from acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Mr. Needham: Four.

Private Patients

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give for 1985: (a) the number of authorised pay beds, (b) the average number occupied by private patients, (c) the average occupancy as a percentage, (d) the number of private in-patients and (e) the number of private out-patients for each health and social services board and for Northern Ireland as a whole.

Mr. Needham: Information is not available in the precise form requested. Details of the number of authorised pay beds, and of the average occupancy and percentage occupancy of these beds by private patients, in general hospitals, by Health and Social Services Board for 1985 are given below. Information on the number of private in-patients and private out-patients treated in hospital is not available and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Southern	14	2·4	17·1
Western	21	2·8	13·3
Northern Ireland	141	27·5	19·5

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give for each year since 1979 for National Health Service hospitals in Northern Ireland (a) the number of paybeds, (b) the average number occupied by private patients, (c) the occupancy rate as a percentage, (d) the number of private in-patients and (e) the number of private out-patients.

Mr. Needham: Information is not available in the precise form requested. Details of the number of pay beds and of the average occupancy and percentage of these beds by private patients, in general hospitals administered by the health and social services boards, for Northern Ireland for each year since 1979 are given below. Information on the number of private in-patients and private out-patients treated in hospital is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

n/a = Data not available due to industrial action.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list any health and social services boards for which statutory auditors have issued reports of poor control over private patient income since 1979.

Mr. Needham: In December 1985 the statutory auditor issued reports covering deficiencies in the system of control over private patient income in each of the four health and social services boards.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give for 1985-86 and for each health and social services board and for Northern Ireland as a whole: (a) the income from private resident patients and the amount written off as bad debts, (b) the income from private non-resident patients and the amount written off as bad debts and (c) the income from services provided to private medical institutions and the amount written off as bad debts.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is as follows:

Hospital Statistics

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give for each health and social services board and for Northern Ireland as a whole in 1985-86 the total expenditure on hospital cleaning, the total expenditure on services provided to hospitals by private companies, the latter figure as a percentage of the former and the difference between that percentage and the percentage in the previous year.

Mr. Needham: The answer is as follows:

Health and Social Services Board	Total Expenditure in 1985/86 hospital cleaning £	Expenditure in 1985/86 on services provided by private cleaning companies £	Per cent. of Total	Difference between 1984/85 percentage and 1985/86 percentage
Northern	2,174,860	12,269	0·56	+ ·01
Southern	2,156,284	29,425	1·17	+ ·49
Eastern	7,863,971	101,475	1·29	− ·09
Western	2,591,060	33,451	1·29	+ ·19
All boards	15,146,175	176,620	1·17	+ ·07

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give for 1985-86 for each health and social services board and for Northern Ireland as a whole the total expenditure on hospital laundry, the total expenditure on services provided to hospitals by private laundry companies, the latter figure as a percentage of the former and the difference between that percentage and the percentage in the previous year.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is as follows:

Health and Social Services Board	Total Expenditure in 1985/86 hospital laundry £	Expenditure in 1985/86 on services provided by private laundry companies £	Per cent. of Total	Difference between 1984/85 percentage and 1985/86 percentage

All boards	6,134,133	322,311	5·25	+0·21

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give for 1985-86 for each health and social services board and for Northern Ireland as a whole the total expenditure on hospital catering, the total expenditure on services provided to hospitals by private catering companies, the latter figure as a percentage of the former and the difference between that percentage and the percentage in the previous year.

Mr. Needham: No catering services are provided to hospitals by private catering companies. The total expenditure on hospital catering is as follows:

Health and Social Services Board	Total expenditure in 1985-86 on hospital catering £
Northern	2,600,259
Southern	3,064,442
Eastern	11,587,869
Western	3,547,059
All boards	20,799,629

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give for each year since 1979 the percentage of expenditure on (a) hospital catering, (b) hospital laundry and (c) hospital cleaning which has been paid to private contractors for services provided to the National Health Service in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is shown in the table:

Percentage of Total Expenditure Paid to Private Contractors

Year	Hospital Catering	Hospital Laundry	Hospital Cleaning
1979-80	NIL	5·26	0·93
1980-81	NIL	5·25	0·86
1981-82	NIL	5·65	0·86

Patient Care

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give for 1985-86 for each health and social services board and for Northern Ireland as a whole the expenditure on contractual arrangements for patient care.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is shown in the table:

Financial year 1985-86

Northern board	3,986
Southern board	96,250
Eastern board	1,650,574
Western board	6,979
Northern Ireland	1,757,789

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the private hospitals and nursing homes in Northern Ireland which treat National Health Service patients under contractual arrangements.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is as follows: St. John of God hospital; Ulster Volunteer Force hospital; Beaconfield Marie Curie home.

Private Hospitals

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the private hospitals in Northern Ireland giving in each case the number of beds and the health board.

Mr. Needham: The answer is as follows:

Private hospital	Beds	Health and social services board
St. John of God	50	Southern
Ulster Independent clinic	36	Eastern
Ulster Volunteer Force	70	Eastern

Consultants

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give for 1986 for each health and social services board and for Northern Ireland as a whole the number of consultants holding (a) full-time contracts, (b) part-time contracts and (c) joint appointments with the University.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is as follows:

Health Service consultants at 30 September 1986

Board	Full-time	Part-time	Joint appointment	Total
Eastern	233	83	74	390
Northern	67	5	1	73
Southern	56	6	0	62
Western	59	8	0	67
Total	415	102	75	592

Notes:

(i) Consultants who serve different boards are shown under the board with which their major involvement lies.

(ii) Dental consultants and community physicians are included.

Maghberry Prison

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) for what offences the prisoner who miscarried in October at Her Majesty's prison, Maghberry was being held in custody;

(2) if he will outline the circumstances in which a prisoner in Her Majesty's prison, Maghberry had a miscarriage in October;

(3) if he will make a statement on the practice of strip searching pregnant women in Her Majesty's prison, Maghberry;

(4) what medical or psychiatric evidence he has received concerning the extent to which strip searching was a contributory factor in the miscarriage of a prisoner in Her Majesty's prison, Maghberry in October;

(5) on how many occasions a pregnant woman in Her Majesty's prison Maghberry was subject to strip searches in the week before she miscarried; and if he will indicate the number of times over the previous seven days she was strip searched each day before her miscarriage.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Housing (Newry and Armagh)

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications for housing transfer have been made in the area administered by the Newry (Urban) Housing Executive office during each of the past five years; how many of these were subsequently withdrawn; and how many were successful.

Mr. Needham [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1986; c. 382-83]: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and I am informed by the chairman that the number of transfer applications made and those withdrawn during each year are not available. The available information for Newry (Urban) office is as follows:

Number of applications for housing transfer held at September each year	702	637	664	684	589
Number of houses allocated to transfer applicants in year ended September	n/a	161	131	84	113

Labour Statistics

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people over the age of 40 years in Northern Ireland have not been engaged in full-time employment in the past five years.

Mr. Viggers [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1986; c. 385]: At 9 October 1986, 8,086 unemployed people aged over 40 had been claiming benefit for five years or more.

Redundancy

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give for each of the last six years the number of redundancies notified to the Department of Economic Development, the total number of jobs involved and the number of company closures by district council area in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1986; c. 386]: The numbers of redundancies notified to the Department of Economic Development, and previously the Department of Manpower Services, in each of the last six years are as follows:

	Number of Notifications	Number of Redundancies Notified
1980	N/A	44,999
1981	430	23,614
1982	311	18,365
1983	185	9,254
1984	120	6,161
1985	100	5,568

Redundancies are notified to the Department in advance and may not all eventually occur.

Comprehensive information on company closures and associated employment loss is not available as there is no general requirement for businesses to notify the Department of closures.

The following table shows the closures of which the Department has details and relates mainly to closures of larger employers:

	Number of closures	Jobs lost at closure
1980	76	5,824
1981	74	5,234
1982	74	4,952
1983	27	1,785
1984	27	1,429
1985	13	548

A breakdown of these by district council area could be made available only at disproportionate cost.

TRANSPORT

Seat Belts

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to which European countries have laws requiring the compulsory wearing of rear seat belts.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Our understanding is that there are laws in the Federal Republic of Germany and in Austria and the USSR requiring rear seat belts to be worn in cars which have them fitted.

Roads

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the 100 major new local road schemes which he has indicated will be able to start following the provision of more resources as announced in his statement of 6 November.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It would not be appropriate to do this. My assessment is based on local highway authority plans and recent performance together with an estimate of what they could do with the available resources. It is for them to decide which schemes they start in accordance with their priorities. Many will be covered by the 1987-88 transport supplementary grant settlement which has yet to be announced.

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the new trunk road schemes which he expects to start in the next three years as announced in his statement of 6 November.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Details of schemes in the trunk road programme are contained in the report "National Roads England 1985". It is not appropriate to specify expected starts in the next three years in more detail. The timing of starts of individual schemes depends upon progress through pre-construction procedures which can be significantly affected by factors outside the Department's control.

Passenger Ships

Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any proposals to change the present arrangements for surveying passenger ships so as to avoid duplication of effort between his surveyors and those of the classification societies.

Mr. Michael Spicer: In discussions earlier this year measures were agreed with the industry to cut costs by rationalising survey procedures and this will avoid unnecessary duplication in the future. These measures will be reviewed again after a year's experience of their operation.

Bus Deregulation

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from Mr. Ian T. Brown of Manchester city council about the effects of bus deregulation in Manchester; what reply he will be sending; if there is any action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend has received a letter asking for comments on a report about certain bus services in Manchester. I have replied today suggesting that the city council should consider drawing the report to the attention of Greater Manchester Buses Ltd.

M25

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the latest traffic flows in vehicles per day on each section of the M25 motorway;

(2) if he will state the percentage of original design capacity which is now represented by traffic flow in vehicles per day on each section on the M25 motorway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is as follows:

Motorway section	Vehicles per 24 hour average day	Date of information	Per cent. of original recommended design flow standard

The original design flow standard for dual three-lane motorways (24 hour average daily flow) was 91,000 vehicles per day, and for dual four-lane motorways 123,000. The M25 has dual four-lanes between jucntions 13 and 15. The design flow for any road is less than its maximum capacity.

Parking (Schools)

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to tighten up parking regulations outside schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Local highway authorities already have powers to introduce mandatory parking restrictions outside particulars schools if they consider them appropriate.

Drink Driving

Mr. Stott asked the Secretary of State for Transport how much he intends to spend on the 1986 Christmas drink and drive campaign; and how this compares in real terms with the 1985 campaign.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This year, we estimate expenditure of about £1·5 million to include not only advertising but production and distribution of the free booklet "The Facts about Drinking and Driving" and the cost of offering a free telephone inquiry service to the public. A further improvement in the campaign, designed to secure better value for money, was its use for the first time during May and June when drink-related road accidents tend to peak. It will continue in the forthcoming Christmas and new year period.

Spending on the drink and drive phase of the Government's 1985 road safety publicity campaign was approximately £1·4 million wholly devoted to advertising in the Christmas and new year period.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will undertake not to alter the Severn bridge tolls before the final outcome of the proposed appeal to the House of Lords by Gwent county council is known.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We shall not reintroduce the higher tolls until the current legal issue is completely resolved.

Settle-Carlisle Line

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce a decision about the future of the Settle to Carlisle railway line.

Mr. David Mitchell: I cannot say yet, as I have received neither the TUCCs' report, nor British Rail's financial case, but I hope to do so before the end of the year.

Search and Rescue

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met members of the United Kingdom Search and Rescue Committee; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have not met the United Kingdom SAR committee as a body. It is chaired by a senior official who reports to me all matters of significance.

Roads (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport how much has been spent on the repair and maintenance of those London roads for which his Department is responsible in each of the past five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The approximate figures are:—

1984	8·3
1986	12·1

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many people are currently employed by the Greater London roads and traffic division of his Department; and what is the total staff complement of this division.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: 164 in each case.

One-Person Buses

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he last discussed the issue of one-person operated buses with London Regional Transport board members.

Mr. David Mitchell: The use of one-person operated buses in London is an operational matter for London Regional Transport and its subsidiary London Buses Ltd.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations have been received by his Department in the last two months over the use of one-person operated buses in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Department has received 10 letters which refer to the use of one person operated buses in London. I understand that London buses carry over 3 million passengers each weekday, and that 72 per cent. of their buses are currently one person operated.

Travel Concessions

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to arrangements for concessionary fares for the elderly in London for 1987-88.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand the London boroughs are close to reaching voluntary agreement to continue the existing scheme into 1987-88. The continued availability of free travel for London's elderly in 1987-88 is in any case guaranteed under the London Regional Transport Act 1984.

Bus Routes (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to how many bus routes in London have been put out to competitive tender by London Regional Transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: Sixty-six.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to financial savings made by London Regional Transport from bus routes tendering in 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. David Mitchell: The latest information that I have is for tendered routes operating up to 31 August 1986. For 41 tendered routes where a direct comparison can be made with former London Buses routes, the total contract prices including the administrative cost to LRT of tendering is some £4 million less than the fully allocated cost to London Buses Ltd before tendering.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make an announcement on his proposals for the levy on London ratepayers in support of his grant to London Regional Transport for 1987-88.

Mr. David Mitchell: Before Christmas.

British Airways

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what special arrangements are to be made for members of the British Airways Board as part of the process of privatising the company; if he will give the reasons for these arrangements; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make it his policy to ensure that the share issue in respect of British Airways contains provision for an allocation of shares to a British Airways employees trust; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's answer on 21 October which gave details of the share offers available to all employees at the time of flotation.

In addition, schemes will be put in place before privatisation to enable both employees in general and executives to exercise options after privatisation to buy further shares in the company. These save-as-you-earn and executive share option schemes will conform with the Inland Revenue and investment protection committee guidelines, but the final details have not yet been settled. I believe that it is important to give people at all levels working for British Airways the opportunity to take a continuing stake in the company's future, an objective which these schemes are intended to meet.

Shares acquired by employees on free and matching terms are required to be held in trust for specified periods. If employees decide to buy additional shares, they will be free to put them into a trust or deal with them in any other way that they think fit. However, the number of shares an employee acquires will be for that individual to decide, and the allocation arrangements will be framed accordingly.

Lorry Ban (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to make available transport supplementary grants to London boroughs requesting it for the purpose of altering London lorry ban road signs following his exempting of 65 miles of trunk roads from the ban; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is open to highway authorities to bid for support of the capital costs of such signing in their transport policies and programme submissions. They can then use the block of minor works expenditure that we accept each year for this purpose.

Ministerial Visits (Leicester)

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the recent visits to Leicester by the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Hampshire, North-West, (Mr. Mitchell), and the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley).

Mr. David Mitchell: I have made two recent visits to Leicester. On 16 October I was pleased to attend an informal ceremony at Billesden to mark the completion of the A47 bypass at the village which will take 1,470 vehicles —22·7 per cent. off the villages' roads. I called on the Midland Fox Bus Company on 29 October for a discussion with the management and also visited the company's mini-bus depot. The company is running over 100 mini-buses from its depot; these provide competitive new services which mean a big improvement for the travelling public.

My colleague the Minister for Roads and Traffic chaired the East Midlands regional annual consultative committee on 19 November at the county hall and later had an informal tour of the Woonerf scheme at Worthington street which forms part of the Melbourne housing action area.

DEFENCE

Wintex

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether Wintex '87 will involve the exercise of the national command authority in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether the scenario for Wintex '87 will be made public; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether Wintex '87 will simulate the closure of essential service routes to the general public; and if he will make a statement;

(4) whether Wintex '87 will simulate the internment of subversives; and if he will make a statement;

(5) whether there will be any differences in the organisational involvement and scenarios as between Wintex '85 and Wintex '86;

(6) what will be the date and duration of the Wintex '87 exercise;

(7) what is the purpose of the Wintex '87 exercise;

(8) whether Wintex '87 is a North Atlantic Treaty Organisation exercise; and if he will make a statement;

(9) whether Wintex '87 will have a nuclear phase; and if he will make a statement;

(10) whether Wintex '87 will have a chemical phase; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Stanley: Exercise Wintex-Cimex is the ninth in a series of NATO-wide command post exercises conducted by Alliance members. It will take place from 4-17 March 1987. Its objective will be to test military command and control procedures and to exercise Alliance authorities in procedures intended for use in times of international tension and war. To ensure that procedures across the whole spectrum of a crisis are practised a nuclear consultation phase is always included. In the United Kingdom, Government Departments will be participating. Details of the scenario for the exercise and the play itself are classified, but are based upon NATO's deterrence strategy. As in previous exercises, the full spectrum of NATO's procedures and plans for crisis management will be tested.

Nuclear Weapons (Storage)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will summarise the state of discussions between Her Majesty's Government and the United States Government about the possible use of RAF Bentwater for the storage of nuclear weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 4 November at column 430.

Defence Arms Control Unit

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will explain the functions and duties of his Department's defence arms control unit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) on 4 June 1985 at column 138.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the current number of staff and the annual expenditure of his Department's defence arms control unit in each year since 1979.

Mr. Stanley: The defence arms control unit was formed on 2 January 1985. Since that date, and currently, it has consisted of 13 posts. In 1985-86 it cost £466,000 at current prices. It is expected to cost about the same for the present financial year.

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what differences of status are accorded by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation to ground-launched cruise missile bases in different countries in Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I assume the hon. Gentleman is asking about the opertional status of NATO ground launched cruise missiles. I refer him to paragraph 320 of volume I of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1986" (Cmnd. 9763-1).

NATO

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what Her Majesty's Government understand to be the current commitment by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation to defend the United Kingdom in the event of a conventional attack; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has had any discussions with those North Atlantic Treaty Organisation states without an independent nuclear deterrent about the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's obligations to them in the event of aggression against them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: The key principle of the North Atlantic Alliance remains that enshrined in article V of the North Atlantic Treaty which states that:

"The Parties agree that an armed attack against one or more of them in Europe or North America shall be considered an attack against them all and consequently they agree that, if such an armed attack occurs, each of them, in exercise of the right of individual or collective self-defence recognised by Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations, will assist the Party or Parties so attacked by taking forthwith, individually and in concert with the other Parties, such action as it deems necessary, including the use of armed force to restore and maintain the security of the North Atlantic area."

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish information on the production or storage of chemical gas by North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: The United Kingdom abandoned its chemical warfare capability in the late 1950s, and no change to that policy is now proposed. Details of national defence capabilities are a matter for national Governments. The United States has a limited and aging retaliatory stockpile of chemical weapons. Further details of this capability are provided in the report of the United States' chemical warfare review commission and the annual report by the United States' Secretary of Defence for the fiscal year 1987, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

US Submarine Nathanael Green

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the United States authorities informed his Department of (a) the extent of damage suffered and (b) the nature of repair needed, by the United States submarine Nathanael Green; whether any evaluation was made of the likelihood of the submarine sinking in United Kingdom waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: United States authorities informed my Department that the USS Nathanael Green had suffered limited damage to her external hull plating and rudder. I understand that the nuclear propulsion system was not damaged. There was never any danger of the submarine sinking.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will identify the agreement or undertaking with the United States under which approval for use of the Holy Loch facilities by the United States submarine Nathanael Green was given following the recent incident in which it sustained damage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: The USS Nathanael Green berthed at the Holy Loch under arrangements between the United Kingdom and United States Governments, details of which are confidential between them.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Sectretary of State for Defence whether the United States authorities informed his Department of (a) the approximate location and (b) the latitude and longitude of the incident in which the United States ship Nathanael Green was damaged; and if he will publish the information made available to his Department.

Mr. Stanley: My Department was provided with information as to the location of the USS Nathanael Green at the time when she was damaged. For reasons of operational security it would not be in the public interest to publish this information.

Holy Loch (Submarines)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether United States authorities (a) give advance notice and (b) seek approval in respect of each berthing of a nuclear-powered United States submarine at the Holy Loch facilities; if he will describe the relevant arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: Use of the base at the Holy Loch by nuclear-powered US submarines is covered by confidential agreements between the United States and United Kingdom Governments.

Royal Fleet Auxiliary Fleet List

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will detail the Royal Fleet Auxiliary fleet list; and if he will denote the dates on which vessels are marked down for refits; and in which year such refits are expected to take place.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The normal period between refits for the ships of the Royal Fleet Auxiliary is about 18 months, or a year for passenger-carrying ships (ie the landing ships logistic). The ships are listed below, together with the date for the next refit of each, on current plans.

Class and Name	Planned refit date

NATIONAL FINANCE

VAT (Auctions)

69. Mr. Maclennan asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what response he has made to proposals from the European Community to harmonise the levy of value added tax upon the sale at auction of works of art.

Mr. Brooke: Discussions on the draft seventh VAT directive, which was first proposed in 1978 to harmonise the VAT treatment of, inter alia, the sale of works of art, are continuing at official level. Regular representations have been received from a special working party set up by some leading auctioneers and importing dealers. Trade views will continue to inform the British position in the Brussels discussions.

Civil Service (Payroll Giving)

70. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to promote payroll giving for members of the Civil Service.

Mr. Brooke: I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to a similar question on 20 November to my hon. Friend the Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Howarth) at column 314

Duty-Free Allowances

Mr. Hill asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress is currently taking place during the British presidency of the European Council of Ministers to achieve adoption of the proposed seventh directive which clarifies the legal status of duty-free allowances for intra-Community travellers.

Mr. Brooke: The seventh directive, concerning duty-free goods for travellers, has been made a priority for the United Kingdom Presidency. Discussions have taken place and some progress has been made towards reconciling conflicting national requirements, but I am optimistic that our essential interests will be provided for when discussions are resumed shortly.

Hospital Radios

Mr. Holt asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was raised by value added tax imposed on contributions to hospital radios run on a voluntary basis in each of the past five years.

Mr. Brooke: VAT is not charged on contributions and donations voluntarily given to charitable organisations. Charities do, however, bear VAT which they cannot recover on those non-business purchases which are not covered by a specific relief. I regret that there is no information on the amount of tax borne in this way by hospital radio organisations.

Direct Cosmetics Ltd

Mr. Latham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer why Her Majesty's Customs and Excise have been pressing Direct Cosmetics Ltd of Oakham to pay a sum in respect of value added tax while the sum in question is the subject of proceedings before a value added tax tribunal and the European Court; and whether he will give an assurance that no enforcement action will be taken in advance of a decision by the European Court.

Mr. Brooke: Parliament has empowered the Commissioners of Customs and Excise to collect value added tax due to the Crown. If tax is found to be due, but unpaid, the commissioners have a duty to secure it by means of an assessment. Time limits are laid down in law within which such assessments must be made. Direct Cosmetics Ltd is receiving money in respect of tax from purchasers of its goods but is refusing to pay it to HM Customs and Excise. Should the company continue to refuse to pay the tax, the commissioners must consider what steps should be taken to secure it.

Mr. Latham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the letters sent to Mr. W. F. Doody of Direct Cosmetics Ltd. of Oakham dated 28 April and 20 May by Mr. G. R. Burgess of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise advising Mr. Doody to take Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to Court were sent with his authority; and on how many other occasions in 1986 officials of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise have written to taxpayers advising them to undertake litigation against Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Counterfeit Goods

Mr. Oakes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the value of goods in each of the last five years seized by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise as being counterfeit.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Currency Depiction (Works of Art)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to permit the depiction by artists of currency in works of art; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No. In accordance with section 18 of the Forgery and Counterfeiting Act 1981, reproductions of bank notes require the prior authorisation of the Bank of England. These sensible provisions are intended to prevent reproductions being passed off as genuine bank notes. Decisions on whether or not approval should be given in individual cases are entirely a matter for the Bank of England.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate has been made of the revenue consequences of applying value added tax to those areas which are currently zero-rated but which are required by the European Community Commission to be subjected to value added tax; and what account has been taken of these estimates in preparing the Government's spending and borrowing plans.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the Government's submissions to the European Court of Justice in respect of the application made by the European Community Commission to the Court for a declaration concerning United Kingdom value added tax zero-rating; and if he will also publish any correspondence with the Commission on the same subject.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Finance Act 1975

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer why the certification of policies known as senior plan and senior saver policies as qualifying policies for the purposes of schedule 2 Part 1 of the Finance Act 1975 has been withdrawn.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Channel Tunnel (Customs Control)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he proposes to take to ensure the harmonisation of United Kingdom and French customs' controls on Channel Tunnel trains.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Financial Management Initiative

Mr. Moynihan asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what response he intends to make to the report on the financial management initiative by the Comptroller and Auditor-General.

Mr. MacGregor: There will be a Treasury minute in response to any report from the Public Accounts Committee which follows from the Comptroller and Auditor General's report. It will be published.

Short Term Bills

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the value of short-term commercial bills which the Bank of England has purchased month by month so far in the current year; and what were the comparable figures for the years 1980 to 1985.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Net purchases of commercial bills by the Bank of England have been as follows:

	1986	1985	1984	1983	1982	1981	1980
January	+683	+1,135	+1,492	+613	+1,295	+568	−101
February	+201	+1,052	+1,461	−16	+1,108	+539	+244
March	−1,610	+242	+90	+499	+2,004	+1,335	+9
April	−3,146	−329	−776	−2,014	−418	−866	+305

November		+171	−548	+322	+21	+1,748	+251
December		+1,233	−715	−352	−865	+533	+47

Figures up to and including September 1986 are in banking months; the October 1986 figure is for the calendar month. In the period between the end of banking September 1986 and the beginning of calendar October, the bank purchased £23 million of commercial bills.

Departmental Publicity

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the total spending of his Department on press and public relations in the current year; and what it was in 1979-80 and each intervening year.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 19 November 1986; c. 230]: The total budget for my Department in the current financial year is £617,000. Outturns for previous years are as follows:

	Cost £000
1982-83	404
1983-84	456
1984-85	508
1985-86	524

Comparable figures for the years 1979-80 to 1981-82 are not available because of machinery of Government changes.

Pensions

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report such information as he has on the numbers in receipt of part of their pension in tax-free lump sums in 1985-86 (a) up to £25,000, (b) up to £50,000 and (c) up to £75,000 and the cost to the Exchequer for each of those bands.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1986; c. 365]: I regret that the information requested is not available. However, information from the Government Actuary Department's survey of occupational pension schemes suggests that, in 1983, about 400,000 lump sums were paid on retirement, averaging some £6,000.

THE ARTS

EC Library and Information Matters

61. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for the Arts what arrangements exist to ensure that initiatives taken in the European Economic Community on library and information matters are made known to professional organisations in the United Kingdom; and what arrangements exist for consultations with these organisations on those matters.

Mr. Luce: I am satisfied with the present arrangements for dealing with the European Commission's work on library and information matters. These involve two committees organised by my office, and both have representatives on them of all the major United Kingdom professional organisations concerned.

Arts Council (Funding)

62. Mr. Jessel asked the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on funding for the Arts Council consequent upon the abolition of the Greater London Council and the metropolitan counties.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to my reply on 17 November 1986 to my hon. Friend the Member for Ruislip-Northwood (Mr. Wilkinson). I was very pleased to be able to tell the House that I could make £24 million available to the Arts Council for the post-abolition funding in 1987-88, an increase of £3 million on planned expenditure. The Arts Council, the regional arts associations concerned and the successor authorities were able to conclude arrangements for 1986-87 which effectively safeguarded the many excellent arts bodies in the metropolitan counties, and I am confident that they will be able to do so again.

63. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts when he last met the chairman of the Arts Council to discuss funding of the arts.

Mr. Luce: I met the chairman on 3 November.

Newspapers

64. Mr. Greenway asked the Minister for the Arts what recent advice has been issued by the Office of Arts and Libraries on the stocking of newspapers.

Mr. Luce: The Office of Arts and Libraries has made it clear that it is for library authorities to decide what newspapers to make available by way of providing a comprehensive and efficient service as required by section 7 of the Public Libraries and Museums Act 1964. The office has pointed out, however, that in making their decisions authorities must take into account criteria relevant to their library functions. An authority contravenes section 7 of the Act if it withdraws newspapers to make a political or industrial point.

Public Library Service

65. Mr Andrew F. Bennett asked the Minister for the Arts what further action he proposes to take in discharge of his obligations to superintend and improve the public library service under the Public Libraries and Museums Act 1964.

Mr. Luce: I maintain contact with the public library service through my team of library advisers and the Library and Information Services Council.

VAT (Auctions)

67. Mr. Rathbone asked the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received about the possible levy of value added tax on the value of pieces of art at auction.

Mr. Luce: I believe my hon. Friend is referring to the European Community's draft seventh directive on VAT, and I refer him to the answer I have given to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor).

Arts Council and Scottish Arts Council

Mr. Craigen asked the Minister for the Arts what have been the operating costs of the Arts Council and the Scottish Arts Council over each of the past five years and as a percentage of their total expenditure.

Mr. Luce: The operating costs of the Arts Council and the Scottish Arts Council over the past five years and the percentage they represent of total expenditure were:

	Arts Council		Scottish Arts Council
	Operating £	Percentage of total expenditure	Operating £	Percentage of total expenditure
1982-83	3,455,760	3·76	683,640	6·22
1983-84	3,852,193	3·97	697,017	5·76
1984-85	4,099,873	4·02	715,035	5·88
1985-86	4,241,015	3·97	735,679	5·59
[1]1986-87	4,467,000	4·20	847,800	6·20

[1] Estimate.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister for the Arts how many representations he has received about the consequences for the United Kingdom arts market of the European Economic Community Commission proposals on value added tax liability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I have received representations from the chairman of the Museums and Galleries Commission, the director of the National Art Collections Fund, and representatives of the arts trade on the draft seventh directive on harmonisation of VAT in the European Community, numbering seven in all. I can assure the hon. Member, as I did the hon. Member for Warley, East (Mr. Faulds) on 6 November, that no decisions on new Community measures in respect of VAT and works of art are expected in the very near future.

I am very mindful of the unique position of the United Kingdom as a world centre of the trade in fine art and antiques. As Minister for the Arts I would of course be opposed to a harmonisation of VAT which damaged that position.

Regional Arts Associations

Mr. Dormand asked the Minister for the Arts whether he will discuss with the Arts Council the devolution of its powers to the regional arts associations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: It is the Arts Council's policy to devolve responsibility for clients and areas of work to regional arts associations where appropriate. Discussions about devolution continue between the Arts Council and the regional arts associations, but I do not propose to make any fundamental change in the powers of the council.

Leicester (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Spencer asked the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Leicester.

Mr. Luce: I had a most enjoyable visit to Leicester. I met local councillors at a lunch at the Leicester Mercury Offices, and visited Leicestershire's Libraries and Museums Services, during which I had great pleasure in opening an exhibition of pictures collected by the late Mrs. Anne Kessler. I am pleased that the loan of the paintings was made possible by the Government's indemnity scheme.

Marketing Initiative

Mr. Moynihan asked the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on his proposed marketing initiative for the Arts.

Mr. Luce: I announced to the House on 17 November that I would be launching a new arts marketing scheme shortly; it is intended to encourage publicly funded arts organisations to take new initiatives in the field of marketing for the purpose of increasing their audiences and improving their income.

SCOTLAND

Abortions

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, concerning each death notified in connection with legal abortion, performed in Scotland in each of the years 1968 to 1985, inclusive, what was the woman's age and parity, gestation period under nine, nine to 12, 13 to 16, 17 to 19, and over 19 weeks, abortion premises (National Health Service or non-National Health) and procedure; whether sterilisation was performed concurrently; and whether the Registrar General attributed the death to the operation.

Mr. John MacKay: The information contained in the reports of the inquiry into maternal deaths in Scotland and the annual reports of the Registrar General for Scotland is set out below. Information for 1981 to 1985 is not yet available. Figures for the number of deaths available from the Registrar General are based on the cause of death written by the certifying doctor on the death certificate; that information may not correspond to the more detailed information available to the inquiry, which looks at all deaths occurring up to 12 months after a delivery or abortion.

Expenditure (Roads)

Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much additional expenditure in 1987-88 on roads is earmarked for Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend will announce in December his decision on the allocation to the transport programme. Fuller details will be published early next year in "Public Expenditure to 1989-90: A Commentary on the Scotland Programme".

Road to Mallaig

Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he now expects to see the completion of the final section of the road to Mallaig.

Mr. Ancram: I expect the Kinsadel-Mallaig stage I scheme to start in February 1987 and to take two years to complete. Five further schemes will follow and the improvement of the whole route between Mallaig and Lochailort should be completed by 1995.

Expenditure (Schools)

Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent per pupil (i) in primary schools and (ii) in state secondary schools in Scotland in the most recent year for which figures are available; and how this compares with the figure for 1978-79 at constant prices.

Mr. John Mackay: The information requested is given in the following table:

Net School Expenditure Per Full-Time Equivalent Pupil

Year	Primary		Secondary
	At Out-Turn Prices	At November 1984 Prices	At Out-Turn Prices	At November 1984 Prices
1978-79	395	774	719	1,409
1984-85	918	918	1,468	1,468

Sewerage System

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many miles of the drains and sewerage system in Scotland (a) were built in the 19th century and (b) are regarded in need of repair or replacement; and what percentage of the total mileage each of these represents.

Mr. Ancram: Precise figures are not available, but it is estimated that there are some 15,000 miles of sewers in Scotland of which about 30 per cent. were built in the 19th century. Regional and islands councils have been encouraged to survey the condition of the sewers, particularly those in critical parts of systems. This work is proceeding. Preliminary findings indicate that the structural condition of sewers may in general be better than has been suggested. Sewer repair, renovation and replacement are undertaken routinely by local authorities within their capital expenditure programmes.

Housing (Scotland) Act 1986

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when the provisions of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1986 will come into force.

Mr. Ancram: A commencement order will shortly be made bringing the Act into operation on 7 January 1987. From that date, the right to buy will extend to tenants of regional authorities and housing associations. The discount scale for flats bought under the right to buy will run from 44 per cent. by 2 per cent. steps to 70 per cent. For both houses and flats, the period during which there is a liability to repay discount on resale will be reduced from five to three years; this will apply to former tenants who have already bought their homes at discount provided that they do not sell before 7 January.

A7 Road

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the general condition of the A7 road in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: I am satisfied that the general condition of the A7 in Scotland is adequate for the volume of traffic using it. However, improvements are planned to rectify certain substandard features. With the completion of the Edinburgh city bypass due about the end of the decade, the Scottish Development Department is putting in hand a study of the various trunk routes south of Edinburgh, including an assessment of the need for any further improvements to these roads.

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on plans for realignment of the A7 at Dryden-Headshaw.

Mr. Rifkind: A draft trunk road order to establish the new line of the A7 at Dryden-Headshaw was published in September 1986. Timing of a construction start will depend on the satisfactory completion of statutory procedures and on the availability of funds.

Private Patients

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give for each health board and for Scotland as a whole (a) the number of pay beds, (b) the average number occupied by private patients, (c) the average occupancy percentage, (d) the number of private in-patients and (e) the number of private out-patients in the latest year for which figures are available;

(2) if he will give for each year since 1979 for National Health Service hospitals in Scotland (a) the number of pay beds, (b) the average number occupied by private patients, (c) the occupancy rate as a percentage, (d) the number of private in-patients and (e) the number of private out-patients.

Mr. John MacKay: The information available centrally is given in the following table. Information on the number of private in-patients and out-patients is not available centrally.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, if he will list any health boards whose accounts have been qualified by the statutory auditor in respect of control over private patient income since 1979.

Mr. John MacKay: No accounts of health boards have been qualified by the statutory auditor in respect of control over private patient income in the period in question.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for 1985-86 and for each health board and Scotland as a whole the income from (a) private resident patients, (b) private non-resident patients and (c) services provided to private medical institutions; and what is the amount written off as bad debts in these areas.

Mr. John MacKay: The information available on income from private patients is set out in the table below. Central information on amounts written off as bad debts does not distinguish between resident and non-resident patients.

The only source of income to the NHS from the supply of services to private medical institutions in Scotland for which central information is available relates to the charges made by the Common Services Agency for the expenses incurred in the handling and processing of blood and blood products. Income from provision of these services amounted to £34,032 in 1985-86.

Hospital Patients

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each health board and for Scotland as a whole the cost of maintaining patients in hospitals not vested in the Secretary of State in 1985-86.

Mr. John MacKay: Contributions by health boards in 1985-86 towards the cost of maintaining patients in hospitals not vested in the Secretary of State were as follows:

Patient Care

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for 1985 for each health board and for Scotland as a whole the number of deaths and discharges among, and the number of beds occupied by, patients receiving treatment under contractual arrangements with institutions outside the National Health Service, breaking the figures down by category of patient treated.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested, which relates to 30 September 1985, is as follows:

Private Hospitals

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the private hospitals and nursing homes in Scotland which treat National Health Service patients under contractual arrangements with health boards.

Mr. John MacKay: The latest available information, which relates to 30 September 1985, is as follows:

Consultants

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the 1985 figures broken down by health board showing the number of National Health Service consultants holding (a) full-time, (b) maximum part-time, (c) other part-time and (d) honorary contracts in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: The number of medical and dental consultants by nature of contract at 30 September 1985 is shown in the table below:

Chiswick Report

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all recommendations of the Chiswick report on Glenochil young offenders' institution and detention centre, indicating what action has been taken to meet them.

Mr. Lang: In his statement to the House on 24 July 1985 my right hon. Friend the Member for Ayr (Mr. Younger) indicated the Government's response to the recommendations of the Chiswick report and to the findings of fatal accident inquiries into two deaths which occurred in 1985. Of the report's 63 recommendations 13 were rejected, while the remaining 50 were accepted or remitted for further study.

Considerable progress has been made in implementing those recommendations which the Government accepted. I am now reviewing all aspects of follow-up to the Chiswick report and to the fatal accident inquiries and I shall write to the hon. Gentleman before long.

Education Authority Bursaries

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland for what reason he has not provided additional resources to enable education authorities in practice to waive, in whole or in part, the parental contribution element of a bursary calculation, as provided for under the Education Authority Bursaries (Scotland) Regulations 1986.

Mr. John MacKay: In response to representations from the education authorities, the regulations were amended to give the authorities discretion to waive in part the parental contribution element of a bursary calculation. The allowance of £23·8 million in the 1986-87 rate support grant settlement for expenditure on further education bursaries is sufficient to enable the authorities to exercise discretion in their determination of parental contributions.

Glasgow College of Arts

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the funding for the Glasgow School of Art in each of the past three years; and what changes he plans for the college.

Mr. John MacKay: The Glasgow School of Art receives funds from various sources. The Scottish Education Department has provided the following grants towards current and capital expenditure in each of the past 3 years:

	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86
Current	2·812	2·985	3·120
Capital	0·095	0·302	0·203

No decisions have been taken about the level of such grants in future years.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland why he plans a 20 per cent. increase in funding for forestry in 1988-89.

Mr. MacKay: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans for a 20 per cent. increase in funding for forestry in 1988-89. The Public Expenditure White Paper 1986-87 to 1988-89 (Cmnd. 9702-II) records an increase from £50 million to £60 million between 1987-88 and 1988-89, but these figures have been rounded to the nearest £10 million in accordance with convention. The planned expenditure, at outturn prices, is £54·4 million for 1987-88 and £55·8 million for 1988-89.

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of total receipts to March 1989 for the Forestry Commission's disposal of plantations and planting land; and whether he intends to revise the guidelines on the selection of areas for disposal.

Mr. John Mackay [pursuant to his reply, Friday 21 November 1986; c. 389]: The latest estimate of total receipts from that part of the Forestry Commission's disposals programme relating to plantations and planting land, covering the period from the passage of the Forestry Act 1981 to 31 March 1989, is around £70 million. My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to revise the guidelines on the selection of areas for disposal.

Sheep Premium

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent progress has been made with the European Commission in the extension of sheep annual premium to untupped gimmers.

Mr. John Mackay: The European Commission has still not made a proposal to extend sheep annual premium to untupped gimmers in Scotland despite our continuing to press strongly for them to do so.

Laminate Manufacturers

Mr. Hind asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what consideration he gave to the effects on other laminate manufacturers in the United Kingdom when grants were awarded to Isola Werke A. G. of Duren, West Germany to establish a manufacturing facility at Cumbernauld; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consideration he gave to the effects on other laminate manufacturers in the United Kingdom when grants were awarded to Les Techniques Industrial les Du Stratifie at Livingstone; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The normal evaluation procedures relating to offers of regional selective assistance were carried out before grant was offered to the companies. These procedures include an evaluation of the likely effects of the proposed project on existing United Kingdom manufacturers of similar products. As well as consideration by my own officials, consultations were held with the relevant divisions of the Department of Trade and Industry. In both cases the conclusions reached were that the projects would strengthen manufacturing capability in the United Kingdom at the expense of imports.

Industrial Grants

Mr. Hind asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now answer questions about grants to individual companies in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Questions about grants, to individual companies in Scotland are answered subject to the normal rules of commercial confidentiality.

Green Belt

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to introduce legislation to remove all planning controls in the green belt in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend has no such plans. The Government's policies on green belts in Scotland remain as set out in Scottish Development Department Circular No. 24/1985.

Hazardous Cargoes

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which a gas-carrying vessel went aground near Leith; what information he has as to the consideration given by the Forth Ports Authority to the hazardous nature of the cargo while the vessel remained in the estuary; and if he has received a report on the effectiveness of the emergency procedures.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have been asked to reply.

An inspector has been appointed to carry out an inquiry into the casualty under the Merchant Shipping Act and is presently pursuing his enquiries.

The Forth Ports Authority has a rigorous system for the control of all shipping movements and vessels with hazardous cargoes are additionally required to confirm each time before entering the ports authority area, that they comply with internationally agreed safety standards and that their systems are in good working order.

Immediately after the grounding of the Inga Tholstrup the authority designated a three-mile exclusion zone around the vessel and this was maintained until her cargo had safely been transferred to other vessels.

Throughout the incident the authority acted in the interests of the safety of all concerned and kept my Department's marine pollution control unit fully informed of the action being taken.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are awaiting admission for each speciality at each hospital in Wandsworth; and what were the comparable figures for 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Member for Wycombe (Mr. Whitney) on 25 July at columns 722-724.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each year since 1970 and for each region the in-patient waiting list at 31 December.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is given in the table. However, the waiting list figures are generally at a seasonal peak at 31 December. The March and September figures give a better indication of trends in the demand for hospital in-patient treatment.

[1] Figures prior to 1974 relate to Regional Health Boards and Boards of Governors. Because of NHS restructuring in 1974 and 1982 the regional figures are not strictly comparable over the whole period.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give the number of people on in-patient waiting lists every six months since 30 September 1982 for (a) each district health authority and special health authority in Greater London, (b) the health authorities in Greater London added together and (c) the health authorities in inner London added together;

(2) if he will give the number of people on the waiting lists for acute surgery every six months since 30 September 1982 for (a) each district health authority and special health authority in Greater London, (b) the health authorities in Greater London added together and (c) the health authorities in inner London added together.

Mr. Newton: For information from 30 September 1982 to 30 September 1985, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Member for Wycombe (Mr. Whitney) on 25 July at columns 723-28. The position at 31 March 1986 for Greater London, Inner London and individual health authorities is given in national, regional and district waiting list figures for 31 March 1986, copies of which I have placed in the Library. Greater and Inner London are identified in the booklet. The summaries for Greater London and inner London are on pages 17 and 18 respectively.

Cancer (Treatment)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average time delay between a general practitioner recommending a patient to a consultant on the National Health Service for cancer diagnosis and the date the patient is seen by the consultant in (a) London and (b) nationally; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I regret I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks. Information on waiting time for out-patient appointments is not collected centrally.

NHS (Drugs)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions in the current financial year his staff responsible for scrutinising the accounts of companies which supply drugs to the National Health Service have discovered (i) breaches of profit targets allowed by the Department of Health and Social Security under the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme, (ii) that the companies' costs cannot be properly validated, (iii) that their capital employed is excessively inflated, and (iv) that the cost of the raw materials from a foreign subsidiary drug company has been artificially inflated and (v) that costs for drug trials, or for researching copied drugs, are bogus or unacceptable and really for promotional purposes; how much money he estimates is involved under each category; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Information is not available in the form requested. Companies supplying drugs to the National Health Service in significant quantities submit audited financial returns which are examined by the Department, following which detailed adjustments may be made for a variety of reasons in assessing a company's level of profit on National Health Service sales.

NHS (Beds)

Mr. John Browne asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the average value per bed of hospitals included in the National Health Service estate;

(2) what is the current average cost of providing a new bed in a district general hospital broken down into, land, buildings, equipment, fees and other overheads, together with figures for different sizes of hospital, including ones of 300 beds and 450 beds.

Mrs. Currie: A meaningful answer cannot readily be given.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each year since 1979 and for each district health authority the total number of beds in National Health Service hospitals.

Mrs Currie: The information requested is given in the table.

Paybeds

Mr. John Browne asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide the detailed basis of calculation for calculating the capital depreciation element included in the paybed charges for each class of hospital.

Mr. Newton: The factor used to represent capital depreciation was built up in several stages. The starting point is the annuitised building, engineering and equipment replacement costs of a typical 450 bed hospital in the mainly acute category. The sum of these annuitised costs are adjusted for in-patient balance and bed occupancy, and reduced to a cost per patient day. Vehicle replacement costs are derived separately, expressed as a daily cost per patient, and added in.

The capital depreciation cost per patient day for hospitals in other charging classes is extrapolated by weighting the unit cost for hospitals in the mainly acute category. The sum of daily capital depreciation costs for all hospitals is then expressed as a percentage of the sum of their daily revenue costs. The resulting figure—18·9 per cent.—was included in paybed charges for 1985-86 and 1986-87.

NHS (Operating Theatre Costs)

Mr. John Browne asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current estimated cost of operating theatre time per hour in the National Health Service in England.

Mr. Newton: The Department does not at present collect specific information on the cost of operating theatre time and we have no estimate of the overall average for the National Health Service. The new form of health authority accounts being introduced from the financial year 1987-88 will include information on operating theatre costs. This is part of the changes being made to implement the recommendations of the steering group on health services information.

Ancillary Staff Reimbursement Scheme

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the present estimate of cost of ensuring equality of treatment between related and unrelated staff under the ancillary staff reimbursement scheme.

Mr. Newton: It is not possible to forecast accurately. Few of the 30,000 family doctors in Great Britain currently employ dependants. Additional costs could be substantial if the more favourable remuneration arrangements encouraged doctors to increase salaries or employ dependants where they had not previously done so. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on 30 October at columns 237-238 in which I outlined the present position in the prolonged discussions which have taken place on this matter.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will seek to extend transitional protection arrangements to any housing benefit recipients when the revised scheme is introduced in April 1988.

Mr. Lyell: We have no present plans to extend transitional protection beyond that illustrated in the technical annex to the White Paper on Reform of Social Security, Cmnd. 9691.

Joint Replacement Operations

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average waiting period for a person needing a joint replacement operation in Basildon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I regret I cannot give my hon. Friend the information he seeks. The numbers in the central data sample are too small for reliable estimates to be made below regional level. My hon. Friend may wish to write to the chairman of the Basildon and Thurrock district health authority about the information requested.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people resident in the Fulham constituency were receiving supplementary benefit at the latest count; and if he will indicate how many of these are (a) pensioners, (b) families with children and (c) others.

Mr. Lyell: Information is not available in precisely the form requested. Fulham constituency is covered by the Department's offices at Chelsea and Kensington but their boundaries are not coterminous with those of the constituency.

The table shows the number of people receiving supplementary benefit from these offices, in the three categories available, on 13 August 1986 — the latest figures available.

	Unemployed	Over pension age	Others
Chelsea	6,626	3,661	2,944
Kensington	5,197	2,415	2,194
Total	11,823	6,076	5,138

Families with children are included in each of the categories of claimant shown above.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information his Department has on the number of supplementary benefit claimants by age group in Scotland; and what percentage of each age group these numbers represent.

Mr. Lyell: The information is as follows:

Age group	Number of claimants (thousands)	Percentage of population
16-20	73	16·2
25-29	41	10·7

Home Nursing

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to develop or introduce night home nursing services for disabled or elderly people still living in their homes.

Mrs. Currie: I fully recognise that domiciliary nursing services provided at night by community nurses can be an important element in helping to maintain physically disabled or elderly people in their own homes. These services exist in many parts of the country. However, it is for individual health authorities to decide for themselves both the level of provision, and the pace and direction of further developments, in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Health Education Council

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current salary of the director of the Health Education Council.

Mr. Newton: The salary is £36,941.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims for attendance allowance have been disallowed over the past five years because claims were made after the claimants had reached the age of 66 years; and if he will estimate the increased cost for each year if these claims had been allowed.

Mr. Major: None. There is no upper age limit for the allowance.

Breast Cancer (Screening)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the main recommendations of the working group chaired by Sir Pat Forrest on breast cancer screening; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I have not yet received the working group's report from Professor Sir Patrick Forrest, although I expect to receive it very shortly.

Adjudication Regulations

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give, for each year since 1975, the number of awards given to claimants without reference to the Special Medical board under regulation 44(1) of the Adjudication Regulations 1984 and its predecessors.

Mr. Major: No information is collected about the use of regulation 44(1).

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will undertake to bring to the attention of adjudicating officers their power under regulation 44(1) of the Adjudication Regulations 1984 to make awards to claimants without reference to the Special Medical board.

Mr. Major: The duty to advise adjudication officers falls to the chief adjudication officer, whose guidance already covers this point. If the hon. Member has a specific case in mind the chief adjudication officer will be pleased to look into it.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the omission of any reference to regulation 44(1) of the Adjudication Regulations 1984 in appendix 1, point 7, to the industrial injuries handbook for adjudicating medical authorities.

Mr. Major: Regulation 44(1) of the Social Security (Adjudication) Regulations 1984 gives power to the lay adjudication officer to dispense with reference to adjudicating medical practitioners for medical reports in certain circumstances. Since the industrial injuries handbook is a guide for adjudicating medical authorities, a reference to regulation 44(1) is unnecessary.

"The Health Service Today"

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many copies of "The Health Service Today" leaflet dated July 1986 have been printed and at what cost; and how the leaflets have been distributed and at what cost.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 3 November at columns 361-363.

Mesothelioma

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of the significance of the proportion of awards of industrial death benefit to cases where mesothelioma is shown on the death certificate.

Mr. Major: There are a number of reasons why industrial death benefit is not awarded in all cases where mesothelioma is shown on the death certificate. Benefit will be awarded only if the deceased was exposed to asbestos dust when working as an employed earner. Moreover, claims are not made for all such deaths. The deceased may not have left a widow, for example.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, if he will give for 1985 the number of cases of mesothelioma diagnosed by each medical board centre during the claimant's lifetime, and the number of cases in which the claimant had died before a decision was made.

Mr. Major: There were 245 cases in 1985 where diffuse mesothelioma was diagnosed. Information about whether the decision was made in the claimant's lifetime could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the hospitals approved for complete closure since 1 January 1985 giving for each the health district, health region, number of beds and date approved.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to the information provided by my predecessors in replies given to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 20 May 1985 at columns 317-329 and on 3 March 1986 at column 62; and also to the hon. Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mrs. Short) on 20 February 1986 at columns 309-10.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether all proposed closures of hospitals and all proposed significant partial permanent closures require his approval.

Mr. Newton: Not all proposed closures of hospitals or proposed significant partial permanent closures require the approval of my right hon. Friend. Most proposed closures are agreed locally, without reference to Ministers.

NHS Hospitals

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, if he will give for each year since 1979 and for each district health authority the total number of National Health Service hospitals.

District Health Authorities

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether regional health authorities have ever referred to his Department the issue of the suitability of individuals for appointment to district health authorities.

Mr. Newton: No. Regional health authorities may, from time to time, seek general advice on the regulations and guidance governing health authority appointments, as North Western regional health authority did earlier this year in respect of an appointment to Oldham health authority about which the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) corresponded with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. The appointment of individual members of district health authorities is entirely a matter for the appropriate regional health authority and the relevant local authorities.

Health Authority Banking

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the grounds for the decision to end the central negotiations between his Department and the major banks over health authority banking in favour of health authorities making their own arrangements.

Mr. Newton: Banking needs vary considerably from one health authority to another and depend upon local payment practices and the location of the hospital sites. The centrally negotiated tariff covered all National Health Service business and did not necessarily represent the most cost effective solution to meeting the needs of individual authorities.

The termination of the central tariff negotiation arrangements, making health authorities responsible for establishing local arrangements with banks, follows the general principle of making authorities responsible, wherever possible, for the local management of their own services. The new arrangements will allow authorities to retain any savings achieved from the re-organisation of their banking needs to provide better value for money. The change was made following discussion with regional treasurers.

Organ Transplants

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any proposals to introduce a required requests system in relation to organ transplants.

Mrs. Currie: The Department's Chief Medical Officer wrote earlier this year to the medical profession's representative bodies seeking their views on the introduction of a voluntary code of practice under which doctors would agree to ensure that, whenever a patient died who was clinically suitable as an organ donor, his relatives were asked for permission for the organs to be removed. I am pleased to say that the Royal College of Physicians has now established a working party which will be considering how this suggestion might best be taken forward.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give for each region and for each year since 1979 (a) the total number of pay beds, (b) the average number occupied by private patients, (c) the total number of private in-patients and (d) the total number of private out-patients;

(2) if he will give for 1985 the number of private out-patient attendances and the number of private day-patient attendances for each district health authority, regional health authority special health authority-Board of governors and for England as a whole;

(3) if he will give for 1985 for each district health authority, regional health authority, special health authority, board of governors and for England as a whole (a) the number of pay beds, (b) their average occupancy by private patients, (c) the average private patient occupancy as a percentage and (d) the number of deaths and discharges of private in-patients.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for the financial years 1984-85 and 1985-86 the health authorities for which statutory auditors have issued reports of poor control over private patient income.

Mr. Newton: The information is as follows:

District health authority

1984-85
- Southmead
- Northampton
- East Berkshire
- Cornwall and Isles of Scilly
- Milton Keynes
- Great Yarmouth and Waveney
- Aylesbury Vale
- Central Birmingham
- Mid Staffordshire
- Rugby
- Hammersmith and Fulham
- South Manchester
- Newcastle
- North West Hertfordshire
- North Bedfordshire
- Coventry
- Bath

1985-86 (Not completed)
- Exeter
- Southampton and South West Hampshire

Finance

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give for 1985-86 and for each district and special health authority the total income under (a) section 58, (b) section 65, (c) section 66 of the National Health Service Act 1977 and (d) the bad debts written off in respect of private patients;

(2) if he will give for each year since 1979 the total income in each region under section 58, section 65 and section 66 of the National Health Service Act 1977; and if he will give these figures (a) in cash terms, (b) deflated to take account of inflation generally, (c) deflated to take account of the movement of National Health Service pay and prices and (d) as a percentage of total National Health Service expenditure.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Private Hospitals

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for each year since 1980 the proposals for private hospital development which have been notified to him or authorised by him under the Health Services Act 1976 as amended by the Health Services Act 1980 giving the health district in each case.

Mrs. Currie: Since August 1980, when amendments to the Health Services Act 1976 became effective, no applications for authorisation of the development of private hospitals have been made. The notifications received are listed in the table. Where no beds are shown, the proposal involves other facilities. Prior to April 1982 the name of the Area rather than the District Health Authority is given.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give for 31 December 1985 and for each health district the total number of beds in registered private hospitals, nursing homes and clinics, the total number of state registered nurses working in those institutions and the appropriate whole time equivalent figure and the total number of all nursing staff working in those institutions and the appropriate whole time equivalent figure;

(2) if he will give for 31 December 1985 and for each health district the total number of beds in registered private hospitals, nursing homes and clinics which contain operating theatres, the total number of state registered nurses working in those institutions and the appropriate whole time equivalent figure and the total number of all nursing staff working in those institutions and the appropriate whole time equivalent figure;

(3) if he will list the registered nursing homes with operating theatres in England on 31 December 1985, giving in each case the number of beds and the health district and region;

(4) what is the total number of private hospitals, homes and clinics registered on 31 December 1985 which contain both operating theatres and (a) pathology and (b) radiology departments; and if he will give the figures for each region;

(5) what were the total numbers of (a) private hospitals, homes and clinics registered on 31 December 1985 which contain operating theatres and (b) beds they contain; and if he will give the figures for each region;

(6) what were the total numbers of (a) private hospitals, homes and clinics registered on 31 December 1985 and (b) beds they contain; and if he will give the figures for each region;

(7) what were the total numbers of (a) nursing staff and (b) medical practioners employed (i) by all the private hospitals, homes and clinics registered on 31 December 1985 and (ii) by those private hospitals, homes and clinics which contain operating theatres; and if he will give the figures for each region.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested by the hon. Member will be available shortly in a summary booklet, a copy of which will be placed in the Library.

Hospital Expenditure

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give for 1985-86 for each health authority the total expenditure on hospital catering, the total expenditure on services provided to hospitals by private catering companies, the latter figure as a percentage of the former and the difference between that percentage and the percentage in 1984-85;

(2) if he will give for 1985-86 for each health authority the total expenditure on hospital cleaning, the total expenditure on services provided to hospitals by private cleaning companies, the latter figure as a percentage of the former and the difference between that percentage and the percentage in 1984-85;

(3) if he will give for 1985-86 for each health authority the total expenditure on hospital laundry, the total expenditure on services provided to hospitals by private laundry companies, the latter figure as a percentage of the former and the difference between that percentage and the percentage in 1984-85;

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Health Authority Tendering

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish in the Official Report details of the progress made by health authorities in putting their services out to tender in the manner of the answer to the hon. Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr) on 12 June 1985, Official Report, c. 489-493;

(2) if he will give for each tendering exercise completed following health circular HC(P3)IP the health authority, the hospital, the successful tenderer (naming the company where relevant), the saving achieved, the date of the tender's approval, and the service concerned, laundry, catering or cleaning.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each year since 1979 the percentage of the expenditure on (a) laundry, (b) domestic/cleaning services and (c) catering which has been paid to private contractors in the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: The information requested which is derived from the annual accounts of regional and district health authorities in England together with those of the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals is set out in the table. The figures for 1985-86 understate the benefits to health authorities from putting more services out to private contractors, because they do not reflect the substantial savings thereby achieved.

Percentages of the Relevant Current Expenditure Paid to Private Contractors

	Laundry	Domestic/Cleaning Services	Catering
1979-80	14·1	2·4	0·2
1980-81	12·0	2·5	0·3
1981-82	11·7	2·1	0·2
1982-83	11·5	2·0	0·2
1983-84	9·7	2·0	0·2
1984-85	11·0	2·2	0·3
[1]1985-86	12·2	5·0	0·8

[1] provisional figures

Note:
The figures are not strictly comparable over the whole period as value added tax on contracted out services became reclaimable by health authorities on 1 September 1983 thus lowering later percentages. The figures for 1985-86 do not include expenditure by family practitioner committees, following their separation from health authorities on 1 April 1985. The form of family practitioner committees' accounts does not permit a similar analysis but their total expenditure on contracted out services in these categories was a little over £200,000.

Patient Care

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give for each year since 1979 the number of (a) in-patient discharges and deaths and (b) new out-patients treated among patients receiving acute treatment under contractual arrangements with institutions outside the National Health Service in England;

(2) if he will list the private institutions providing in-patient and out-patient treatment to National Health Service patients and contractual arrangements with health authorities during 1985;

(3) if he will give for 1985 for each region and for England as a whole the number of deaths and discharges among, and the number of beds occupied on 31 December by, patients receiving treatment under contractual arrangements with institutions outside the National Health Service; and if he will break down these figures into the categories of (a) medical, (b) surgical, (c) pre-convalescent and post-operative, (d) convalescent, (e) geriatric, (f) diseases of the chest, (g) maternity, (h) mental illness, (i) mental handicap, (j) rehabilitation, (k) terminal care and (l) others.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each district the expenditure on contractual arrangements for patient care in 1985-86.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average number of sessions worked by a National Health Service consultant on an ordinary part-time contract.

Mr. Newton: Information is only collected centrally on sessions contracted for, and the average number of these for National Health Service consultants holding part-time contracts — that is, excluding maximum part-time — in England at 30 September 1985 was 7·4 sessions.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for 30 September 1985 and for each region and each special health authority and board of governors and for England as a whole the total number of consultants holding (a) full-time, (b) maximum part-time, (c) other part-time and (d) honorary contracts.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my predecessor's reply to him on 14 April 1986 columns 289-292 which gave the information for each region and special health authority for 30 September 1985.

Figures for England are set out in the following tables:

Number [1] of consultants at 30 September 1985 (England)

	Number
Whole-time	6,499
Maximum part-time	4,552
Other part-time	1,294
Honorary	1,657
Total	14,002

[1] Consultants holding contracts in more than one region or special health authority in England are counted once only.

Medical Boarding Centres

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the award in each successful appeal against a decision of a medical boarding centre (respiratory diseases) in 1985.

Mr. Major: This information is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what links exist between the medical boarding centres (respiratory diseases) and the Department of Employment's EMAS survey of asbestos workers.

Mr. Major: When the EMAS survey finds evidence suggesting the presence of asbestos-related disease in an asbestos worker, he or she is advised to claim disablement benefit from the Department of Health and Social Security. Those who do so are subsequently examined by a special medical board. There is also local informal liaison between EMAS and the medical boarding centres (respiratory diseases).

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the factors which account for the variation in the costs of medical boarding centres (respiratory diseases).

Mr. Major: Each medical boarding centre (respiratory diseases) serves a different area. Costs vary according to the individual centre's workload and staffing level, which in turn depend on the size of the area, its population and the extent and type of its industries. Local factors such as the cost of office accommodation also play a part.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give, for each year since 1975, the number of cases referred to medical boarding centres (respiratory diseases) by prescribed disease claimed, and the number of awards by prescribed disease claimed.

Mr. Major: The information is as follows:

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of examinations for pneumoconiosis and byssinosis made by medical boarding centres (respiratory diseases) for 1984 and 1985 as analysed by attributable industry; and why the figures for 1984 were not included in "Social Security Statistics" at table 25.07.

Mr. Major: The information is shown in the following tables. The figures for 1984 were not available for inclusion in "Social Security Statistics 1985" because of industrial action at the Department of Health and Social Security's Newcastle central office. Figures for 1984 and 1985 will be included in "Social Security Statistics 1986", to be published shortly.

Special Medical Boards

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions hon. and right hon. Members have written to him about individual findings of the special medical boards in 1985.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what advice is available to sufferers from non-malignant respiratory diseases such as asbestosis and bilateral diffuse pleural thickening in relation to applications to special medical boards.

Mr. Major: Advice is available in leaflets NI2, NI3 and NI237 issued by the Department. In addition, staff in local social security offices are always willing to give help and advice to claimants.

Asbestos

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the ability of optical microscopes to find asbestos fibres as distinct from large asbestos bodies.

Mr. Major: Asbestos bodies and a proportion of asbestos fibres can readily be identified by the use of an optical microscope. Fine uncoated fibres are difficult to find by this method because their diameters are often at or below the limits detectable by the optical microscope.

Asbestosis

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give the number of cases in 1985 in which asbestosis was not diagnosed by each medical board centre following a claim for industrial disablement benefit;

(2) if he will give the number of cases of asbestosis newly diagnosed by each medical boarding centre (respiratory diseases) in 1985.

Mr. Major: The information is as follows:

Medical Boarding Centre	Number of cases
	Asbestosis diagnosed	Asbestosis not diagnosed
Cardiff	24	48
Glasgow	71	89
London	23	96
Manchester	46	128
Newcastle	48	52
Sheffield	45	42
Stoke	12	16
Swansea	4	4
Total	273	475

Claimants (Statistics)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for the latest available year the number of claimants under the Pneumoconiosis, Byssinosis and Miscellaneous Diseases Benefit Scheme who asked for a decision to be reconsidered, and the number of reconsiderations which have resulted in the reversal of a decision.

Mr. Major: In the year ending 30 June 1986 there were 12 applications by claimants for a decision to be reconsidered. One application was subsequently withdrawn and five resulted in a reversal of the decision. A decision is awaited on one application.

Industrial Disablement Benefit

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make it his policy to collect information to determine the average length of time for which 100 per cent. industrial disablement benefit is paid.

Mr. Major: No. This would not be justified on grounds of cost.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, if he will give the number of cases in 1985 in which asbestosis accompanied by lung cancer was diagnosed by each medical board centre following a claim for industrial disablement benefit.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the form requested. In 1985 special medical boards diagnosed eight cases of lung cancer where there was accompanying evidence of asbestosis or bilateral diffuse pleural thickening.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of the 100 per cent. disablement benefit awards made by special medical boards in 1984 were first awards as opposed to re-assessments; and how many were for asbestos-related diseases.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Industrial Death Benefit

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many awards of industrial death benefit were made in 1985 for (a) asbestosis, (b) diffuse mesothelioma, (c) lung cancer accompanied by asbestosis and (d) lung cancer without asbestosis;

(2) what percentage of deaths where the death certificate mentions mesothelioma result in awards of industrial death benefit.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Secretarial Agencies

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give, for each region and for each year since 1979, the total expenditure by the National Health Service on services provided by secretarial agencies.

Mr. Newton: Following is the information requested as shown in the annual accounts of health authorities from 1980-81. The annual accounts for earlier years did not provide directly comparable figures.

Total	6,837	4,678	4,946	6,130	8,399	11,674

[1]Figures for 1985-86 are provisional.

Notes

1. The table does not include corresponding expenditure by special health authorities and other bodies providing central services for the National Health Service. This is not separately identified in the annual accounts of these bodies but is unlikely to have been significant given the relatively small scale of their total expenditure.
2. Figures for 1985-86 are not directly comparable with those for earlier years because of the separation of family practitioner committees from health authorities which took effect on 1 April 1985. The equivalent expenditure by family practitioner committees in 1985-86 amounted to £75,000 (provisional figure).

Hospitals (Statistics)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of National Health Service hospitals and the number of beds in those hospitals which were opened in each year since 1956.

Mrs. Currie: Information from 1956 is not accessible centrally and, if available, could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Information held on the beds provided in hospital building schemes each costing over £1 million completed in each year since 1979 were:

	Schemes	Beds	Total cost £ million
1979	3	1,521	33·9
1980	8	2,198	68·8
1981	10	2,146	62·0
1982	16	2,553	105·6
1983	47	4,334	232·5
1984	45	2,712	194·2
1985	49	1,696	173·6
1986[1]	39	3,310	209·3

Kidney Transplants

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the percentage of patients undergoing kidney transplants involving an organ not donated by a sibling who are still alive (a) three months, (b) six months, (c) one year and (d) five years after the operation;

(2) what is the percentage of patients undergoing kidney transplants involving an organ donated by a sibling who are still alive (a) three months, (b) six months, (c) one year and (d) five years after the operation;

Mrs. Currie: Information from the European Dialysis and Transplant Association on survival rates of patients transplanted between 1975 and 1984 with kidneys removed from different types of donors is as follows:

	Sibling live donor Percentage	Other live donor Percentage	Cadaver donor Percentage
Survival rate after
Three months	97	95	92
Six months	97	93	89
One year	95	91	86
Five years	87	81	71
Number of patients at risk for the analysis	412	546	6,902

These figures need to be interpreted with some caution; they are not directly comparable because of the number of variables involved.

Kidney Disease

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what statistics exist on the prevalence of kidney disease in each year since 1970.

Mrs. Currie: The available information is set out in the table. The in-patient figures are based on a sample of cases, and those for patients dialysing or transplanted are actual numbers. It is essential to note that there is likely to be some overlap between the two groups. These figures take no account of other people with kidney disease being treated as out-patients or by general practitioners, or as yet undiagnosed.

Estimated number of in-patient cases discharged from NHS non-psychiatric hospitals in England with a main diagnosis of kidney disease[1]

[1] Figures from the European Dialysis and Transplant Association.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information is available to him about the causes of kidney disease.

Mrs. Currie: I am informed that kidney disease can result from a wide variety of conditions including diabetes, inflammation, infection, tumour, stone, toxic substances, metabolic diseases, vascular diseases, congenital abnormalities and hereditary conditions.

Nursing and Residential Homes

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give, for each year since 1978, the total social security payments supporting residents of private and voluntary nursing and residential homes, breaking the figures down into the categories (a) elderly, (b) mentally ill, (c) mentally handicapped, (d) physically handicapped and (e) others.

Mr. Major: I regret that the information required is not available.

Merton and Sutton Health Authority

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those who have made representations to himself and to Ministers in his Department concerning the acute services strategy up to 1994 of Merton and Sutton health authority.

Mrs. Currie: We have received two representations from hon. Members and six representations from members of the public.

Saffron Walden (Hospital Facilities)

Mr. Haselhurst asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will announce his decision about the transfer of hospital facilities in Saffron Walden.

Mrs. Currie: There are several matters to be clarified with the district health authority concerning its community health facilities. We shall announce our decision as soon as possible.

Oval Office (Relocation)

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what survey he has made of the feasibility of relocating the Oval office of his Department at Blue Star house; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lyell: This accommodation was surveyed previously when rehousing of another DHSS local office was being considered. The survey concluded that the premises could not be economically adapted for local office use.

Broadstairs and Chatham (Staffing)

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether the funding of new staff to be recruited at Broadstairs and Chatham to take the casework that has been out-stationed from the Oval office of his Department will be paid from the underspend in central south London; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps have been taken to ensure that the new staff recruited at the Chatham and Broadstairs offices of his Department will be able to process the full range of supplementary benefit claims; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what additional staff will have to be recruited in Chatham and Broadstairs to handle the casework out-stationed from the Oval office of his Department.

Mr. Lyell: The single payments work which is out-stationed from the Department's Oval office is being processed at Chatham. Single payments work from local offices in London South Region other than Oval is being processed at both Chatham and at Broadstairs. Twenty-four additional staff have been recruited (12 at each office) and are being funded from within the region's staff budget. The new staff will be trained and deployed exclusively on single payments work for a maximum of six months after which they will be given full training.

The complements of south London offices have not been reduced to provide staff for the two out-station offices nor has the Department reduced its effort to recruit staff to fill existing and expected vacancies in south London offices.

The Oval office received an additional 16 staff above the number justified by normal staffing arrangements as its share of the extra 5,000 allocated to local offices this year.

Chiropody Treatment

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to ensure that all unemployed persons in receipt of supplementary benefit have access to regular free chiropody treatment when this has been prescribed by their doctor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Decisions on how best to use limited chiropody resources are a matter for local health authorities. Where they are unable to provide a comprehensive service they have been advised to give priority to elderly people, handicapped people, expectant mothers and school children. A general practitioner who feels that a patient needs priority treatment can, of course, notify the district chiropodist of his view.

Hip Replacement Operations

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average waiting time for a hip replacement operation for the elderly in each district health authority; and what were the corresponding figures in 1979.

Mr. Newton: I regret that I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks. The numbers in the central data sample are too small for reliable estimates to be made below regional level.

Long-term Oxygen Therapy

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give (a) the number of people on National Health Service long-term oxygen therapy with oxygen cylinders on 1 December 1985, (b) the number of people on National Health Service long-term oxygen therapy with oxygen cylinders at the latest available date, (c) the number of people who were on National Health Service long-term oxygen therapy with oxygen cylinders on 1 December 1985 who have been transferred to National Health Service oxygen concentrators and, (d) the saving to date by the introduction of long-term oxygen therapy by oxygen concentrators.

Mrs. Currie: Long-term oxygen therapy is defined as the provision of oxygen for 15 hours or more a day for a prolonged period. Information on the number of patients receiving such therapy with oxygen cylinders and the numbers transferring to oxygen concentrators could be obtained only through detailed scrutiny of individual prescriptions at disproportionate cost.

In addition to patients receiving long-term oxygen therapy there are other patients, needing lesser amounts of oxygen, for whom oxygen concentrators provide a less expensive method of supply. It was estimated in 1985 that the transfer of patients from cylinders to concentrators would save some £2·5 million a year and the indications are that we are on course to achieve the sort of saving predicted.

St. Helens

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide figures for the number of people in St. Helens dependent on social security benefits, broken down by category of benefit and age group.

Mr. Lyell: Information cannot be provided in the precise form requested. The table shows the number of supplementary benefit claimants at the St. Helens local social security office. The office covers St. Helens, Prescot, Whiston and other outlying areas.

Supplementary Benefit Claimants on 13 August 1986[1]

	Number of thousands
Unemployed claimants	9,084
Pensioners	5,372
Other cases[2]	5,072
Total[3]	19,528

Notes:

[1] 100 per cent. count of cases in action.

[2] These are claimants under pension age who are not required to be available for work.

[3] A proportion of this total will be in receipt of other benefits as well as supplementary benefits.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate he has of the number of households in St. Helens at or below 140 per cent. of supplementary benefit level, showing type of house and age group.

Mr. Lyell: I regret that the survey statistics cannot be broken down reliably in the manner requested.

Parliamentary Questions

Dame Jill Knight asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the cost to the taxpayer of answering all the questions tabled on 13 November for written answers by him on 24 November.

Mr. Fowler: A Civil Service-wide survey, based on staff by grade, estimate the average cost of answering a written question to be £43. On this basis, the cost of answering these 68 questions is £2,924.

Hospital and Bed Closures

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hospitals have been closed since 1979; if he will list them; how many beds have been closed in them in each case; how many beds have been closed each year since 1979 in wards within hospitals that still remained open; and if he will list the location in each case.

Mr. Newton: The information we keep centrally records approvals for partial and complete hospital closures. It does not include temporary closures, neither does it give the date on which closures were implemented.

For information on hospitals approved for complete closure, I refer the hon. Member to the information provided by my predecessors in replies given to the hon. Member on 20 May 1985, columns 317-329 and 3 March 1986, column 62, to to the hon. Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mrs. Short) on 20 February 1986, columns 309-310, and to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) today.

The information on hospitals approved for partial closure is as follows up to December 1984. For 1985 and 1986 (to August) I refer the hon. Member to the information given in the reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras today.

Sick Pay

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations the Government have received complaining of the complexity of the three rate system of statutory sick pay; and from what individuals or organisations they were received.

Mr. Lyell: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest figures for (a) the number of people in receipt of statutory sick pay at each of the three rates, (b) the number of statutory sick pay claims per year at each of the three rates and (c) the total expenditure per year on statutory sick pay.

Mr. Lyell: In 1983-84 there were some 5 million recorded payments of statutory sick pay at all rates and some 5·7 million for 1984-85. It is estimated that 85 per cent. of these were at the standard rate, 7 per cent. at the middle and 8 per cent. at the lower rate. The sum paid out in statutory sick pay by employers was £440 million in 1983-84 and £523 million in 1984-85.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what will be the savings to the Government as a result of the changes proposed to the rates and structure of statutory sick pay.

Mr. Lyell: It is estimated that as a result of the changes proposed to the rates and structure of statutory sick pay there will be a saving of about £19 million.

Information Technology Staff (Training)

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the average number of days' training per year given to professional information technology staff within his Department who are no longer trainees, in the most recent years available.

Mr. Lyell: The Department does not maintain separate training statistics for trainee and non-trainee information technology staff.

The average amount of IT technical training given to IT technical staff in each of the last two financial years is:

1984-85—13 days per person
1985-86—20 days per person

Child's Special Allowances

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to abolish child's special allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lyell: A commencement order was published on Friday 21 November, which will bring section 40 of the Social Security Act 1986 into force on 6 April 1987 when child's special allowance will be abolished except for the 780 existing beneficiaries.

Social Security Expenditure

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a table setting out social security expenditure (a) in cash terms, (b) as a percentage of total public expenditure, (c) as a percentage of gross domestic product, (d) showing the real-terms percentage increase on the previous year and (e) the percentage of the real-terms increase spent on (i) increased numbers of claimants, (ii) real-terms increase in benefit levels and (iii) new benefits or extension of eligibility for each year from 1979-80 to 1986-87, including the autumn statement projections.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 17 November 1986; c. 79]: The available information is set out in the table. Because eligibility for income related benefits is in part determined by the levels of the benefits themselves, and by the levels of other benefits, it is not possible to make a meaningful split between the effects of increases in these levels and the effect of other changes to eligibility.

TRANSPORT

Public Transport (Penalty Fares)

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has given any more detailed consideration to the operation of penalty fares systems on public transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: Earlier this year my right hon. Friend established a working group of officials from the Home Office, the Lord Chancellor's Department, London Regional Transport, and my Department to review the principles which should apply to penalty fares schemes on public transport. The group was asked, in particular, to review the penalty fares provisions of the London Regional Transport Act 1984. This was in line with the undertakings given to Parliament by the Government on 25 June 1984, at column 765, during consideration of the relevant sections of the London Regional Transport Act, that if further improvements could be identified before the penalty fare provisions were brought into effect we would be prepared to implement them in amending legislation. The working group was also asked to examine concerns which had been raised about the different powers contained in the London Docklands Railway Acts 1984 and 1985 and London Docklands Railway (City Extension) Bill. The working group has now reported and the Government have accepted its recommendations for changes to the existing legislation. My right hon. Friend has given LRT consent to deposit a private Bill seeking to amend the penalty fares provisions of the London Regional Transport and London Docklands Railways Act to bring them into line with the working group's recommendations. I have today deposited a copy of the working group's Report — "Penalty Fares on Public Transport" in the Library.

Roads

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all road construction contracts which his Department intended to award in 1986-87 as identified in table 1 of Class VIII, Vote 1 of the Supply Estimates 1986-87, showing in each case whether the contract has been let or whether it is expected to be let during the remainder of 1986-87, and giving in each case the total value of the contract and the expansion likely to be incurred in 1986-87.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is as follows:

	Contract let	Contract value £ million	Estimated expenditure this year £ million
M63/66 Portwood-Denton	[1]	51·5	6·3
A361 Tiverton-Newtown	2/87	[3]23·0	0·3
A69 Newcastle Western Bypass	[2]	[3]64·0	0·1
A27 Havant-Chichester Bypass	9/86	20·0	4·5

[1] This scheme is being constructed under two contracts. The first was let in August 1986, the second is planned to be let very soon.
[2] Contracts for various advance works have already been let. The main works for this scheme are to be constructed in four sections. The first contract is expected to be let in summer 1987.
[3] Estimate.

Network SouthEast

Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to how much British Rail has spent to date on the new Network SouthEast lines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that Network SouthEast has earmarked £13·4 million for Operation Pride in 1986-87. This will pay for more capacity to relieve overcrowding, more frequent train cleaning, a better service at telephone inquiry bureaux, and some modernisation of stations. In addition, NSE has completed some major projects this year, including three electrification schemes. A number of stations, notably Dorchester, Brighton, Faversham, Ealing Broadway and Andover, have been modernised.

Ferry Services

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what undertakings were required and given about the maintenance of ferry services operated by British Rail when Sealink was sold.

Mr. David Mitchell: No undertakings were required or given that particular services would be maintained indefinitely. It was envisaged in the sale agreement that British Rail and Sealink would enter into individual contracts requiring either party to give an appropriate term of notice to the other if they wished to terminate the provision of particular connecting rail or ferry services. In fact the only such individual contracts to have been signed were those relating to Freightliner and freight train-ferry services.

Merchant Fleet

Sir William Clark asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table in the Official Report setting out the net foreign currency earnings of the United Kingdom owned and registered merchant trading fleet, and the United Kingdom's net balance of overseas payments on the overall sea transport account, in each year since 1980, together with his forecast of these magnitudes in 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The following table gives figures of revenue for international activities of the United Kingdom shipping industry. Information is not available separately for the United Kingdom owned and registered trading fleet. The sea transport balance is taken from table 33 of the Central Statistical Office "Pink Book" (United Kingdom balance of payments).

Year	United Kingdom shipping industry revenue from international activities	Balance of payment sea transport services
1980	3,747	141
1981	3,577	−160
1982	3,183	−623
1983	2,994	−1,013
1984	3,203	−1,132
1985	3,174	−1,157

The Department does not make forecasts of these series. However, in the first six months of 1986 the balance on the sea transport account was minus £605 million compared with minus £691 million in the equivalent period of 1985.

Sir William Clark asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing the value of investment in British owned merchant ships in each year since 1980 and his forecasts of these magnitudes in 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer my hon. Friend to articles in British Business of 5 September 1986 (page 42) and of 26 September 1986 (page 37), copies of which are in the Library. These give figures of the capital expenditure of the United Kingdom shipping industry as compiled by the Department of Trade and Industry.

My Department does not make forecasts of investment in the shipping industry.

Dock Labour Scheme

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest estimate available to him of the annual cost to the nation's economy of continuing with the present dock labour regime in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am not aware of any such estimate; a wide range of figures could be derived, depending on the assumptions made.

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is currently considering any proposals for the closure of a port covered by the dock labour scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. The closure of a port would usually need an Act of Parliament.

Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to eliminate the dock labour scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government have consistently made it clear that they have no plans to legislate on this matter during this Parliament.

Railway Safety

Mr. Leadbitter asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many train derailments have taken place in each of the previous five years under the headings of (a) passenger and (b) freight;

(2) if he will list the reported accidents on British Rail showing the numbers injured and killed for each of the years 1976 to the latest available date.

Mr. David Mitchell: The information is given in the Department's annual reports on railway safety, published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, copies of which are in the Library.

Port Control

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport what controls exist on ships entering ports in accordance with the memorandum of understanding on port state control.

Mr. Michael Spicer: All foreign ships entering ports covered by the memorandum are subject to inspection. Each authority undertakes to achieve an annual inspection rate corresponding to 25 per cent. of the estimated number of individual foreign ships entering its ports, taking as a basis of the inspection the standards laid down in seven internationally agreed instruments dealing with safety and the prevention of marine pollution. In selecting ships for inspection special attention is paid to those which may present a special hazard, for instance oil tankers and gas and chemical carriers.

Buses

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Transport what are Her Majesty's Government's plans over bus deregulation in London.

Mr. David Mitchell: We have made it clear that it is our firm intention to extend deregulation to London in due course.

Docklands (Road Access)

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans for improving road access to docklands.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Each of the trunk road schemes in east London worth nearly £600 million in total and included in the programme for completion by the early 1990s will improve access to docklands. The following are particularly relevant:

Under construction: South Woodford to Barking relief road and A2 Rochester Way relief road.

To start early in 1988: north circular, Chingford road to Hale End road.

For completion by 1993, subject to the successful completion of the statutory procedures: east London river crossing; A12, Hackney Wick to M11; and A13, West of Rainham to M25.

Transport Act

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the costs to district councils of the operation of the Transport Act 1986; what information he has about regional variations in these costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell [pursuant to the reply, 21 November 1986, c. 362]: All local authorities that incur expenditure on public transport including district councils, will benefit from the improved value for money, through the competitive tendering requirement, which the Act is already providing. Those benefits can be passed on to passengers or ratepayers. Setting up public transport companies has caused some district councils costs which do not show any pattern of regional variation; but the benefits overall of establishing transport undertakings at arm's length and on a competitive commercial basis will outweigh those costs.

MV Kowloon Bridge

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to know the results of his Department's inquiries into the loss of the MV Kowloon Bridge.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement that I made earlier today.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Namibia

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards Namibia; and what steps he is taking to seek a solution of outstanding constitutional problems there.

Mrs. Chalker: Our policy is to press for the early and peaceful implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibian independence, as endorsed by United Nations Security Council resolution 435. This forms the only universally accepted basis for a settlement. We continue to support United States and United Nations negotiations towards such a settlement.

ENERGY

Uranium

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Energy, if he will make a statement about the agreement between Britain, France and Italy by which BNFL manufactures uranium dioxide from imported enriched uranium hexafluoride and exports it to France and Italy for use in their nuclear reactors.

Mr. Goodlad: BNFL processes imported low enriched uranium hexafluoride for a variety of overseas customers. All material is covered by the relevant IAEA and EURATOM safeguards agreements and subject to the normal export licence controls.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Energy what quantity of uranium was purchased by the Central Electricity Generating Board in 1985; and from what sources it was purchased.

Mr. Goodlad: The CEGB informs me that, as reported in its annual reports, all deliveries of natural uranium to the CEGB in 1985 were under a contract with Rio Algom in Canada. The total quantity delivered to the CEGB that year was around 340 tonnes of uranium.

Nuclear Installations

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on how his policy towards openness about nuclear matters is to be applied to the Advisory Committee on the Safety of Nuclear Installations; and whether that body will in future publish an annual report.

Mr. Goodlad: The Independent Advisory Committee on the Safety of Nuclear Installations plans to publish a report on its work early next year.

Electricity Supplies

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will obtain from the Central Electricity Generating Board a statement of current plans for development of the electricity supply system in the next 15 years, including a list of sites under consideration for new coal-fired power stations; and if he will place a copy of the statement in the Library.

Mr. Goodlad: The medium term development plan of the electricity supply industry (England and Wales) for the period 1986-93 was published by the Electricity Council last month. It includes a section on generation (pages 18-23) which covers possible sites for future power stations. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will describe what arrangements exist between his Department and the Central Electricity Generating Board to discuss strategic planning of the electricity system; what forecasts and financial information are made available by the Central Electricity Generating Board for such discussions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The Central Electricity Generating Board annually provides me with detailed forecasts of capital requirements for the next six years. These are considered, together with the capital and financing forecasts for the Electricity Supply Industry (England and Wales) as a whole, in the annual investment and financing review of the nationalised industries. Approvals to capital expenditure in the following three years are then given. Strategic planning features in the medium term development plan for the industry, published annually by the Electricity Council; and is also the subject of ad hoc reports to me.

Power Stations

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information his Department receives on the costs of different siting options for new power stations in England and Wales; if he will set out an illustration of the costs for two different sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Applications to site power stations in England and Wales and comparison of the costs of different siting options are matters for the Central Electricity Generating Board. The costs of a particular site would be included in the total station costs for which my right hon. Friend's investment approval would need to be obtained.

Nuclear Reactors (Safety)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy what arrangements have been made for copies of the emergency handbooks used by operators at each site of (a) British Nuclear Fuels plc and (b) the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority to be deposited in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Copies of the emergency plans for BNFL sites will be deposited as soon as practicable. The plans for the UKAEA sites at Dounreay and Winfrith have already been placed in the Library of the House and those for Harwell are expected to follow shortly.

Departmental Initiatives

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list initiatives by his Department which have been of benefit specifically to the north-east, north-west and Yorkshire and Humberside regions since 1979.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Government's approach to energy matters is necessarily a national one designed to benefit all Britain's energy consumers producers and suppliers, many of whom are situated in the north-east, north-west and Yorkshire and Humberside regions.

Our aim is that energy should be produced, supplied and used efficiently and economically. We need to build on Britain's considerable heritage of coal, oil and gas, and long experience in civil nuclear power to ensure a degree of diversity in supply. We aim to ensure that the energy economy works as efficiently as possible through the discipline of the market place and with suitable financial targets for nationalised industries. A further spur to efficiency will be the privatisation of British Gas.

The improved efficiency of the gas and electricity industries has been shown clearly over the last three years. Domestic electricity and gas prices have fallen in real terms, electricity by 10 per cent. and gas by 7 per cent. In cash terms they have gone up by 2 per cent. per year for electricity and 3 per cent. per year for gas. Under the last Labour Government, electricity prices went up 11 times as fast and gas prices four times as fast. Examples of benefits attributable directly to the three regions are:

(i) I have set up the Energy Efficiency Office and launched a major campaign to promote efficiency in the use of energy. Survey grants of over £1 million have been paid to industrial and commercial consumers in the North and potential savings identified of some £780 million.

(ii) Our efforts to create a successful coal industry have resulted in substantial capital investment in British Coal's North East, Western and Yorkshire areas of some £2·4 billion since taking office. Some £370 million was invested in the 1985-86 financial year, a substantially higher level than in the final year of the Labour Government. We have been rewarded by excellent improvements in productivity of 50 per cent. in the North East and Yorkshire and 40 per cent. in Western Area. Following rationalisation of the industry, we created British Coal Enterprise Limited who have now helped to create new industries and businesses, providing over 5,000 new job opportunities in these areas. This Government has also set up the Coal-Firing Scheme under which nearly 200 companies in the North have been offered and accepted grants totalling £21·3 million to switch to coal boilers.

(iii) We have continued to support the safe and economic development of nuclear power, an industry which is concentrated in the North and is particularly important to its economy. Direct nuclear employment amounts to 24,000. In addition, CEGB's estimated investment of around £1,800 million in its latest Advanced Gas-Cooled Reactor Station at Heysham II alone has resulted in the creation of substantial new jobs in construction and manufacturing sectors over the past five years.

(iv) We have approved large-scale investment in the conventional areas of the electricity supply industry. Drax coal-fired power station complex has now been completed at a cost of around £900 million and three local Area Boards have combined annual capital investment programmes of around £100 million.

(v) The Government is funding a programme of research and development on renewable energy technologies. This includes a grant of up to £400,000 towards the cost of studies into a Mersey Barrage.

(vi) Our stable financial regime has encouraged North Sea investment and maintained interest in new developments and exploration. My Department's Offshore Supplies Office have helped Britain's offshore industry to gain an average since 1979 of 74 per cent. of the United Kingdom's market, worth in total some £3 billion a year. A considerable part of this work has come to the North where the fabrication sites are situated.

EMPLOYMENT

Work Test

58. Mr. Nellist asked the Paymaster General how many claimants in Coventry have had their benefit suspended or ended by the availability for work test.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Revised procedures for testing availability for work were introduced in the Coventry area on 10 November. Since then benefit has been suspended in 23 cases, but no claims have yet been formally disallowed by the adjudication officers.

Job Monitoring

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General what is the form of monitoring and report conducted by his Department or the Manpower Services Commission to establish how many people have found jobs, started self-employment, entered training or become involved in volunteer work, as either a direct result of restart or as a result of (a) advice given by restart interview staff, (b) use of a jobclub, or (c) advice from a restart course subsequent to volunteer work.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have no means of knowing how many of those who have had a restart interview, or who have been on a restart course, subsequently find jobs, start self-employment, enter training or take up voluntary work. People have always ceased to claim benefit for those and other reasons at any time and will continue to do so.

However, when people are referred direct from restart interviews to jobs, self-employment, training or voluntary work the employers or organisations and so on are asked about the result. When people leave jobclubs they are asked whether they are going into a job, training or some other opportunity. We cannot guarantee the completeness of our returns however. We do not have any means of following up every participant. There is no sensible reason why we should devote extra staff and resources to doing so.

United States of America (Tourists)

Mr. Wigley asked the Paymaster General if he will state the latest estimate of the number of holidaymakers who did not come to the United Kingdom from the United States of America during 1986; and how this compares to the corresponding period of 1985.

Mr. Trippier: Figures are not available for the number of people in the United States who planned to visit the United Kingdom on holiday either during 1985 or 1986, but who did not do so. Figures are available for the number of visitors who came to the United Kingdom from North America as a whole. During the first eight months of 1986 there were 1,991,000 visitors from this area, compared with 2,754,000 for the same period last year.

This represents a fall of 27 per cent. Both the British Tourist Authority and British Airways report that bookings are now returning to forecast levels.

Jobstart

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Paymaster General how many people have applied for jobstart allowances and how many have been refused jobstart allowances, for each of the jobcentres at Billingham, Eston, Guisborough, Hartlepool, Middlesbrough, Redcar, Saltburn, Stockton, Thornaby and Yarm.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Jobstart was piloted in nine areas of Great Britain from January 1986 to the end of June 1986. One of the pilot areas was Billingham and during that period 13 people applied for the allowance, of whom 12 were successful and one was rejected.

Since 1 July 1986 jobstart has been extended nationally and the numbers of jobstart applications and rejections till 14 November 1986 for the offices requested are as follows:

	Applications	Rejections
Billingham	8	—
Eston	1	1
Guisborough	—	—
Hartlepool	5	2
Middlesbrough	28	7
Redcar	10	4
Saltburn	4	3
Stockton	9	—
Thornaby	1	1
Yarm	—	—
Total	66	18

Departmental Publicity

Mr. Frank Field asked the Paymaster General if he will list the size of his Department's advertising budget from each financial year since 1979; and if he will give the estimate for the next financial year.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986]: We do not have an advertising budget as such. For figures of expenditure on the promotion of employment and training schemes to the people intended to benefit from them, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 19 November 1986, at column 216.

We have not yet set a figure for estimated expenditure on such promotion in 1987-88.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Paymaster General what has been the size of the budget for information and publicity staff of each financial year since 1979; and if he will detail the number of staff employed on this work over the same time span.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986]: For the number of staff employed on this work from 1979 until the present, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 19 November, at column 217. Salary costs for these staff in 1985-86 were £455,000. Salary costs were not separately attributed to these staff in previous years.

Disabled Persons (Work Test)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Paymaster General if, in the light of the letter to him dated 7 November from the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation (RADAR), he has anything to add to his reply of 17 November, Official Report, column 66, regarding the effect on disabled people of the new guidelines on the availability for work test; why his earlier answer made no mention of the letter from RADAR; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986]: I confirm the information I gave in my reply of 17 November relating to disabled claimants. The new procedures will improve the arrangements whereby the sick, the handicapped and those who care for them can be directed to claiming the correct benefits. Although I said I had received no representations on the effect of the new guidelines on disabled people, this did not take account of the letter to me from RADAR. This did raise a point about eligibility for benefit and was provoked by our new arrangements, although I believe it was based on a mistaken understanding of the long-established relationship between invalidity benefit and unemployment benefit. I apologise for my failure to refer to this letter, to which I shall be replying shortly.

PRIME MINISTER

Westland plc

Q104. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if she knew from her discussions with her office on 7 January whether Department of Trade and Industry officials had asked for the disclosure of the letter from the Solicitor-General to the then Defence Secretary to be made from No. 10 Downing street; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 17 November 1986 at columns. 49-50.

Merchant Shipping

Sir Edward du Cann asked the Prime Minister what information she has about the tonnage by which the United Kingdom owned and registered merchant trading fleet has been reduced in the past 12 months; what assessment she has made of the adequacy of the remaining fleet to meet the United Kingdom's national defence requirements, including those for civil resupply; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The tonnage of this fleet decreased by 5·4 million dwt in the year ending September 1986.

There are sufficient vessels to meet Ministry of Defence requirements. The ability of the fleet to meet those requirements is monitored closely by the Ministry of Defence and the Department of Transport. The availability of merchant shipping to meet civil supply needs has to be assessed in terms of the capability of NATO, since the Alliance has a long-standing agreement to pool its merchant shipping in war.

Sir Edward du Cann asked the Prime Minister what information she has about the present level of investment in the British-owned merchant fleet; and what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of the adequacy of this for the creation of a future merchant fleet of a size and composition to meet the requirements of national defence partners.

The Prime Minister: In 1985 capital expenditure by the United Kingdom shipping industry on new and secondhand ships was £346 million net of disposals. In the first and second quarters of 1986, the figures were £89 million and £38 million respectively. These figures do not cover investment in ships owned by overseas subsidiaries and associate companies of United Kingdom concerns. Details were given in articles published in British Business on 5 and 26 September this year, copies of which are in the Library.

The "Statement on the Defence Estimates" figures in 1986 reported that a study carried out by consultants last year of future trends for those parts of the merchant fleet for which there is a defence requirement, indicated that for the foreseeable future most of these requirements were likely to be met, and that the situation was being monitored closely. The requirements for civil supply have to be viewed in NATO terms, and take into account overall NATO demand and NATO supply including overseas registered shipping beneficially owned in NATO countries and other factors such as future investment and manning, NATO wide. We are pursuing these matters with our NATO allies.

Sir Edward du Cann asked the Prime Minister what information she has about trends in the size of the merchant shipping fleets of other member countries of the North Atlantic Alliance; and when she next expects to have an opportunity to discuss the defence implications of these trends with the leaders of the United Kingdom's North Atlantic Treaty Organisation partners.

The Prime Minister: In 1985 the total tonnage of the merchant fleets of NATO members fell by 30·7 million dwt.

The NATO Planning Board for Ocean Shipping has drawn the attention of the North Atlantic Council to the implications for the Alliance of this trend, and indicated possible remedial measures. I anticipate an early discussion of the matter in the Council.

Sir Edward du Cann asked the Prime Minister if she will list in the Official Report the Government Departments responsible for the policy issues arising from the decline of the United Kingdom-owned and registered merchant fleet; and whether she is satisfied with the co-ordination between them.

The Prime Minister: The Department of Transport takes the lead in co-ordinating policies in respect of the United Kingdom merchant fleet, while other Departments may have a primary role in related policy areas. There is full co-ordination between Departments.

Crown Dependencies

Mr. Murphy asked the Prime Minister if she will set out the current administrative responsibilities exercised by Her Majesty's Government towards the Baliwick of Guernsey, the Baliwick of Jersey, and the Isle of Man; if Her Majesty's Government have any plans to seek to alter the present constitutional relationships between the United Kingdom and these three Crown dependencies; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Crown has ultimate responsibility for the good government of the islands and acts through the Privy Council on the recommendations of Ministers of Her Majesty's Government. By long-standing constitutional convention, the islands legislate for their own domestic affairs, but Her Majesty's Government have responsibility for the defence and the international relations of these dependencies of the Crown. We have no plans to alter the present constitutional relationships.

Engagements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 25 November.

Mr. Dormand asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 25 November.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 25 November.

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 25 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I shall attend a dinner in support of the Somerville college appeal.

Reptiles and Amphibians

Mr. Corbett asked the Prime Minister if she will list the Government Departments which have responsibilities for the preservation of wild reptiles and amphibians; and whether there are plans to increase their powers and scope of responsibility.

The Prime Minister: The Government Departments which have responsibilities for the conservation of wild reptiles and amphibians are the Department of the Environment, the Scottish Office, the Welsh Office and the Department of the Environment (Northern Ireland). The Government rely for scientific advice on the conservation of these and other wildlife species on the Nature Conservancy Council. There are no plans at present to increase the powers and scope of responsibility of the foregoing Government Departments. It is possible by order to add to the list of protected animals and plants and others likely to be in danger of extinction.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

"Comic Relief" (Prosecution)

Mr. Ron Lewis asked the Attorney-General if he will prosecute the authors and publishers of the book, "Comic Relief" for blasphemy.

The Attorney-General: The investigation of any alleged criminal offence is a function of the police. If the hon. Member considers that an offence of blasphemy may have been committed the proper course is for him to refer the matter to the police so that if, after proper investigation, it is appropriate a report may be submitted to the Crown Prosecution Service.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received from the General Synod of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland regarding the operation of the Anglo-Irish Agreement; and what has been his response.

Mr. Tom King: I recently received a letter from the clerk of the General Assembly and general secretary of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland, forwarding a resolution of the general board of the church. I shall reply to it shortly.

Harland and Wolff

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funds his Department will make available to Harland and Wolff in 1986-87.

Mr. Viggers: The Government have set the company's external financing limit, including trading losses and redundancy costs, at £68 million for 1986-87.

Maghaberry Prison

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) for what offences the prisoner who miscarried in October at Her Majesty's prison, Maghaberry was being held in custody;

(2) if he will outline the circumstances in which a prisoner in Her Majesty's prison, Maghaberry had a miscarriage in October.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986]: No prisoner miscarried in Maghaberry women's prison during the month of October. A prisoner who was committed to the prison on 27 October for seven days for non-payment of fines imposed for motoring offences was released on the following day on payment of the balance owing. It was subsequently reported in the press that she had a miscarriage on 29 October.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the practice of strip searching pregnant women in Her Majesty's prison, Maghaberry.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986]: All women prisoners are strip searched on initial reception and before discharge, and on certain other occasions; there are other circumstances in which searches are carried out on a random basis. Where a prisoner is known to be pregnant, a hospital officer is present during the search, but this did not happen in the case which gave rise to the question. However in this case, the prisoner was examined by the prison medical officer later on the day of her reception; no abnormalities were evident, and she made no complaints of any kind.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what medical or psychiatric evidence he has received concerning the extent to which strip searching was a contributory factor in the miscarriage of a prisoner in Her Majesty's prison Maghaberry in October.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986]: Naturally I regret that the woman should have had a miscarriage after her discharge from prison; but I am aware of no evidence to suggest that the searches carried out during the short period that she was in prison were in any way a contributory factor.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions a pregnant woman in Her Majesty's prison Maghaberry was subject to strip searches in the week before she miscarried; and if he will indicate the number of times over the previous seven days she was strip searched each day before her miscarriage.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986]: The prisoner was strip searched twice—on reception and prior to her discharge the following day.

Consultants (Fees)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what will be the spending of his Department on fees to outside consultants in the current year; and what it was in 1979-80 and in each intervening year.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 19 November 1986; c. 258]: The fees paid in the last two financial years are shown below together with the estimated expenditure for the current financial year. Information for the previous years would be available only at disproportionate cost.

Expenditure 1984-85	4,723,025
Expenditure 1985-86	5,029,849
Estimated expenditure 1986-87	5,960,050

HOME DEPARTMENT

Holloway Prison

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the current level of educational lessons held at Holloway prison since the beginning of the current year; what is the number of such lessons cancelled because of staffing difficulties; how these figures compare with the two previous years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: In the two months since the start of this academic year, 183 classes took place out of a planned total of 810. Prison officers, among other duties, escort prisoners to and from classes and supervise them. Cancellations of classes were due to the shortage of prison officers for such work. The comparable figures for September and October 1985 were 220 classes out of 927 and for the same period in 1984, out of approximately 800 proposed classes, none took place.

As part of a review of the deployment of staff with a view to providing as positive a regime as possible at Holloway, new arrangements, taking advantage of the accommodation offered in the new education centre, are being implemented to allow greater flexibility in the deployment of prison officers supervising education activities. These arrangements are expected to reduce the number of occasions when all classes have to be cancelled and to increase the opportunities for prisoners to take part in education. In addition, vigorous action is in hand to deal with the basic problem of the shortage of prison officers at Holloway including an intensive recruitment campaign in the London area.

Prison Deaths

Mr. Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, how many (a) men and (b) women prisoners have been found hanged in their cells in each of the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: The number of prisoners found hanged in prison establishments in England and Wales is as follows. Records held centrally do not show precise locations.

Year	Men	Women	Total
1981	18	—	18
1982	21	—	21
1983	22	—	22
1984	26	—	26
1985	27	1	28

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many baths, showers and toilets are available to prisoners in Wandsworth prison; how many baths or showers each prisoner is allowed per week; and how many changes of clothes each prisoner is allowed per week.

Mr. Mellor: The numbers of baths, showers and toilets available are as follows:

	Numbers
Baths	14
Showers	58
Urinals	165

Each prisoner is normally allowed one shower per week and an additional shower when he makes use of the gymnasium. Additional showers are available for prisoners employed on jobs of a physically dirty nature. When appropriate for medical reasons a bath is available instead of a shower.

Prisoners at Wandsworth have one change of clothes per week consisting of two shirts, one T-shirt, two pairs of socks, two pairs of underpants and two vests. Overclothing is changed as necessary.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the maximum number of prisoners who can be employed in Wandsworth prison on any one day.

Mr. Mellor: Seven hundred and twenty.

Prisons (Staffing)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the Prison Officers Association to ensure adequate staffing in prisons in England and Wales to seek to avoid the serious incidents that have recently taken place in prisons in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: It would be wrong for me to comment on the details or causes of incidents in Scottish prisons. Actions of those involved in these events may be the subject of criminal proceedings. As my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland has announced, general complaints about conditions and the treatment of prisoners at Peterhead prison are to be the subject of a special investigation by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons for Scotland.

There is frequent contact with the Prison Officers' Association about various aspects of the manning of prison establishments in England and Wales.

Criminal Trials

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any proposals for introducing statutory time limits for the presentation of criminal trials in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: Yes. Following field trials, we plan to introduce statutory time limits in three police areas — Avon and Somerset, Kent and the West Midlands — from 1 April next year. These limits will apply to the period for which an accused may be kept in custody—

(a) while awaiting summary trial or committal by a magistrates' court in proceedings for an indictable offence instituted in any of those areas on or after 1 April, or

(b) while awaiting trial in the Crown court at Bristol, Maidstone or Birmingham, having been committed on or after that date.

In the light of experience there we shall go on to apply custody limits throughout England and Wales. We have no immediate plans to exercise the powers to apply limits to periods when the accused is not in custody; these will come later.

Eavesdropping Equipment

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to render it a criminal offence to use mobile electronic eavesdropping equipment to obtain confidential information from commercial organisations for the purposes of deriving financial gain from such information; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: As my predecessor announced in the House on 12 March 1985, at column 157, the Government intend, when an opportunity occurs, to introduce legislation based on the Law Commission's proposals that people who obtain information by "improper means" — which includes the use of mobile electronic eavesdropping equipment and other surveillance devices — would be subject to an obligation not to use or disclose that information. Under the Law Commission's proposals a person who breached this obligation would not be committing a criminal offence but would be liable at civil law to an action for breach of confidence.

Crossbows

Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to extend restrictions on the use and sale of crossbows; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have been considering the matter, and my right hon. Friend will report our conclusions to the House shortly.

Ashwell Prison

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement on the steps being taken to implement the recommendations of the report by Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons regarding Her Majesty's prison, Ashwell.

Mr. Mellor: The report of Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons was published on 23 September 1986 with an accompanying statement by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, which outlined the action already taken to implement its observations. Work on implementing the report is continuing.

Prisoner Escapes (Salisbury)

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have escaped from the cells of Salisbury magistrates', court and the old and new Crown court in Salisbury in each of the last five complete calendar years and in the current year to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The only escapes from the cells of Salisbury magistrates', and Crown courts in the period concerned occurred from the Guildhall cells in 1985 and totalled three.

Prison Sentences

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people currently serving sentences in prison have served more than 15, 20 and 25 years, respectively.

Mr. Mellor: The latest readily available information is given in the table.

Population[1] of prisoners in Prison Department establishments in England and Wales on 30 September 1986 whose initial reception under sentence was 15 years or more earlier

Time since initial reception under sentence into a Prison Department establishment[2]	Number of prisoners
	All	Recalled[3]
15 years but less than 20 years	119	31
20 years but less than 25 years	43	24
25 years and over	19	12

[1] The figures are those recorded centrally and are approximate; detailed checking of individual cases would involve disproportionate cost.

[2] Includes time spent on licence by prisoners recalled after having been released on licence.

[3] Prisoners who had been recalled after having been released on licence.

Murder Convictions

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people convicted of murder, and given a life sentence since the abolition of the death penalty, have subsequently been found to be innocent of the charge and pardoned.

Mr. Mellor: No person convicted of murder since the coming into force of the Murder (Abolition of Death Penalty) Act 1965 has been granted a free pardon. Four men convicted of murder and given life sentences and one man convicted of murder and ordered to be detained during Her Majesty's pleasure have had their convictions quashed following a reference to the Court of Appeal by the Home Secretary.

Firearms

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the working group on the use of firearms by the police to report to him.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We expect to receive the report very soon.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Research

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the Medical Research Council to discuss research funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend met the chairman and secretary of the Medical Research Council on 5 November for a general discussion about the work of the council. The chairman drew attention to the financial pressures on the council. There was then a short discussion before turning to other topics.

Conductive Education

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his Department's attitude towards conductive education for certain categories of disabled children; and what advice he is giving local education authorities on the desirability of enabling such children to receive conductive education.

Mr. Dunn: Conductive education was developed in the context of the Hungarian educational system. The educational and other implications of introducing it here will need to be given very careful consideration before any encouragement can be given to the wider development of the system in this country. It is for the local education authority to decide what is the appropriate form of education for individual children who have special educational needs.

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the meeting of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) on Thursday 13 November with representatives of Rapid Action for Conductive Education.

Mr. Dunn: I was glad to have the opportunity to meet the representatives of Rapid Action for Conductive Education. They urged strongly that conductive education should be made generally available in this country for the benefit of disabled children and adults. In particular they requested that financial support should be given by central Government towards the four-year Anglo-Hungarian conductive education project which is to be established at Birmingham university. I assured them that their views would be given careful consideration.

Genetic Handicap

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether the Medical Research Council has been informed of or is involved in any current or proposed research project into genetic handicap which necessitates or would necessitate the use of human embryo;

(2) if he is aware of any publicly funded current or proposed research project into genetic handicap which involves or would involve the use of human embryo.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend is not aware of any such work. I understand that the Medical Research Council is not involved in such work, nor is the council aware of any.

Burton Manor College

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement concerning the future of Burton Manor college, Cheshire.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has considered a resolution submitted to him for confirmation by the governors of Burton Manor college seeking to terminate the agreement under which the college is administered. He did not regard it as a valid and effective resolution and therefore could not confirm it. He has invited representatives of the Liverpool local education authority and the college to discuss the future of the college with the Department.

Miss M. McGoldrick

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give directions under section 68 of the Education Act 1944 to Brent council to cease disciplinary proceedings against Miss McGoldrick.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend could use his powers under section 68 only if he were satisfied that the authority was proposing to act unreasonably. The present position is that the ad hoc disciplinary sub-committee of the council's education committee is to meet shortly to consider whether or not to proceed with a disciplinary hearing. My right hon. Friend will consider the position in the light of the outcome.

Teachers (Disciplinary Matters)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will introduce legislation to make school governing bodies the final arbiters on teacher disciplinary matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Education (No. 2) Act 1986 confirms that the power of teacher dismissal rests with the local education authority. That power can be exercised only after consulting the governing body and the head teacher. The power of suspension can be exercised by the governing body or the head teacher but a suspension must be ended at the direction of the local education authority. There are no plans to introduce new legislation on this matter.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Trade Deficits

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the first eight months of the current year at an annual rate the deficit on trade in (a) manufactures, (b) finished manufactures, (c) precious stones, (d) crude oil and (e) total trade less crude oil to the nearest £m; and if he will provide corresponding figures for (i) 1956, (ii) 1966, (iii) 1970 and (iv) 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available information is as follows:

United Kingdom visible trade balances—BOP basis, £ million

	1956	1966	1970	1979	[1] [2]1986
Manufactures	n.a.	+2,098	+2,562	+2,698	−5,194
Finished manufactures	n.a.	+1,707	+2,103	+1,964	−4,262
Precious stones	n.a.	n.a.	−47	−398	−80
Crude oil	n.a.	n.a.	−469	−685	+4,173
Total less crude oil	n.a.	n.a.	+435	−2,764	−11,922

Cigarette Sales

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what information he has concerning the total value of cigarette sales in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years; and if he will state in each of those years what percentage of the total figures was represented by sales of United Kingdom produced cigarettes and what percentage by imported cigarettes;

(2) what information he has concerning the percentage of the United Kingdom market supplied by United Kingdom manufactured cigarettes in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Butcher: Annual figures of the total value of cigarettes sales are given in National Accounts Blue Book, Table 4.8, a copy of which is in the Library. Comparable data are not available for imports as the import figures exclude duty and are valued at the point of import not at retail prices. Information on the value of United Kingdom manufacturers' sales is available in Business Monitor PQ 4290. These are valued at manufacturers' sale prices not retail prices, but include duty paid and are therefore also not comparable with imports.

Information is therefore not available on the proportions of the total value of sales accounted for by United Kingdom produced cigarettes and by imported cigarettes. Information is, however, available in respect of the numbers of cigarettes released for consumption in the United Kingdom as compiled by HM Customs and Excise and is as follows:

Quantities of cigarettes released for home consumption

per cent.

	Proportion accounted for by imports	Proportion accounted for by United Kingdom manufacturers
1981	1·4	98·6
1982	1·7	98·3
1983	1·9	98·1
1984	6·4	93·6
1986[1]	11·4	88·6

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has concerning the total number of cigarettes sold in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Butcher: The information available on quantities of cigarettes released for consumption in the United Kingdom as compiled by HM Customs and Excise is as follows:

Quantities of cigarettes released for home consumption

	Total clearances (million)
1981	109,822
1982	102,449
1983	102,611

BTR—Pilkington Bid

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he intends to appoint inspectors to investigate the suspected insider dealing which preceded the bid by BTR for Pilkington on 20 November.

Mr. Howard: If and when I obtain information suggesting that insider dealing may have occurred, I shall take appropriate action, which might include appointing an inspector under section 177 of the Financial Services Act.

Financial Services Act

Mr. Nelson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the provisions of schedule 12 of the Financial Services Act are likely to come into force.

Mr. Howard: The provisions will come into effect on 30 April. The necessary commencement order will be laid before the House shortly.

British Overseas Trade Board

Sir Peter Mills asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future funding of the British Overseas Trade Board.

Mr. Alan Clark: The BOTB net expenditure budget has been set at the following levels for the next three years.

1987-88	1988-89	1989-90
27·7	28·3	28·0

The budgets for 1987-88 and 1988-89 are £1 million above the previously planned levels. No budget had previously been set for 1989-90.

Bankruptcies

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many bankruptcies have occurred in Wales in each year from 1979 to 1986; if he will specify the size of the firms concerned, showing those employing (a) less than 20 workers, (b) between 20 and 50 workers, (c) between 50 and 100 workers and (d) over 100 workers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his reply, 24 November; col. 8.]: The number of bankruptcies in Wales in each year from 1979 to 1986 is given in the table below. No records are kept of the numbers of employees of individuals and partnerships declared bankrupt.

Year	Number
1980	231
1981	306
1982	334
1983	419

EC (Ship Scrapping Scheme)

Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the proposals for a Community ship scrapping scheme put to the European Commission by the European Economic Community Shipowners' Association.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have been asked to reply.

We have noted these proposals, which will be fully considered in discussions within the Community aimed at strengthening the position of Community fleets and improving their competitiveness.

WALES

Roads

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out the effects of the Chancellor's Autumn Statement on the construction and maintenance of national and local authority roads in Wales in 1986-87, 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90, giving comparable figures for the public expenditure White Paper for January.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given on 17 November 1986 in reply to the hon. Members for Brecon and Radnor (Mr. Livsey) and Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas), at columns 300-1.

Infant Schools

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been spent per pupil in Welsh infant schools since 1980; and what are the figures for each local education authority in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Figures giving expenditure per pupil in infant schools in Wales are not separately available. The equivalent figures for primary schools are given in the following table:

Primary pupil unit costs
Net recurrent institutional costs (£s at outturn prices)[1]

	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85

[1] Excluding school meals, milk, school transport and pupil support.

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales, for 1985-86 and 1986-87 respectively, what is the total budget and estimated expenditure for each county in Wales under the all-Wales strategy for mentally handicapped people.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information requested is given in the following table:

Approved grant and outturn expenditure reports 1985-86, 1986-87

	Approved grant 1985-86 £	Actual expenditure 1985-86 £	Approved grant 1986-87 £
Clwyd	669,000	591,900	829,000
Dyfed	310,000	221,400	664,600
Gwent	616,000	485,400	1,068,000
Gwynedd	[1]743,600	436,400	[1]1,320,000
Mid Glamorgan	[1]996,300	673,100	[1]1,762,000
Powys	268,600	187,700	360,000
South Glamorgan	735,000	706,700	825,000
West Glamorgan	783,000	762,400	900,000
Total	5,121,500	4,065,000	7,728,600

[1] Includes extra allocation for vanguard areas.

It it too soon to make reliable estimates of expenditure by counties in 1986-87.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress made so far under the all-Wales strategy for mentally handicapped people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: All 10 plans prepared by counties have been approved. The Department is currently reviewing progress and we intend publishing the conclusions in the new year.

Road Improvements

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state how many road improvement schemes on trunk roads in Wales have been abandoned during the past 12 months because acquisition of the necessary land would require a compulsory purchase order, although the Welsh Office had previously approved the scheme.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: One, a small footway widening scheme on the A487 at Heol-y-Dur, Gwynedd.

Football Violence

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state which grants are available to soccer clubs in Wales to improve their grounds in order to minimise risks of crowd violence.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The Football Grounds Improvement Trust makes grants to clubs of the Football League, including the four Welsh clubs, for ground improvements. The Football Trust makes grants for a similar purpose to non-league clubs and has done so for four Welsh clubs to date.

Spectacles

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many persons obtained spectacles through the National Health Service between 1 July and 30 September in Wales; and what was the comparable figure in the corresponding period in 1985.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Between 1 July and 30 September 1986, dispensing fees paid indicate that 16,157 persons were supplied with lenses; additionally 18,470 vouchers were issued for pairs of glasses. During the corresponding period in 1985, dispensing fees paid indicate that 30,400 persons were supplied with lenses.

Agricultural Development and Advisory Service

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed by the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service in Wales; what were the corresponding figures for the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The number of people employed by the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service in Wales on 18 November was 326½.

Information for earlier years can be provided only as at 1 April of each year. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Newport, West, (Mr. Robinson) on 22 April 1986, at column 93.

Housing

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his Department's estimate of the number of houses in multiple occupation in Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: It is estimated that there are approximately 11,700 houses in multiple occupation in Wales.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales what proportions of dwellings in Wales unfit for human habitation are (a) privately owned and (b) owned by local authorities.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Ninety thousand nine hundred dwellings were quoted as being unfit for human habitation in the 1981 Welsh "House Condition Survey". Of these, 61 per cent. were owner-occupied and 4 per cent. were owned by local authorities.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library the result of question 96 of the schedule section M of the Welsh "House Condition Survey" of 1981.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Yes.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if the 1986 Welsh house condition survey will be supplemented by a social survey.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Yes; the Welsh Office is conducting an inter-censal survey which will supplement the 1986 Welsh house condition survey.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report for each local authority in Wales his Department's estimate of (a) privately owned houses which are statutorily unfit for people to live in and (b) privately owned houses that are fit but in substantial disrepair.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information required is not currently available at district level. Information at county level is published in the Welsh "House Condition Survey 1981", a copy of which is in the Library of the House of Commons.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if the 1986 Welsh "House Condition Survey" includes a provision whereby the houses surveyed in 1981 will be revisited and surveyed again; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Three thousand seven hundred dwellings were surveyed during the 1981 Welsh house condition survey. All these dwellings were included in the Welsh inter-censal survey 1986, and those 86 per cent. that were successfully interviewed were then included with the sample for the 1986 Welsh house condition survey. Revisiting dwellings surveyed in 1981 provides the best measure of the change in conditions.

Defective Housing

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the net cost to date and in this financial year to the latest available date for each local housing authority in Wales of (a) refurbishment grants, (b) wholesale repurchases and (c) wholesale repurchases following rejection of a refurbishment grant application on the grounds of excessive cost under the Housing Defects Act 1984.

Mr. Mark Robinson [pursuant to his reply, 20 November 1986, c. 308-10]: There were, unfortunately, errors in the answer. The correct information is as follows:

The cost to date of reinstatement grants and repurchases is given in the following table. The reasons for repurchases by authorities are not held centrally.

SCOTLAND

Legal Aid

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications for legal aid have been refused for each of the years from 1979 to date.

Mr. Lang: The number of applications for criminal legal aid which were refused was:

	Number
1979-80	6,229
1980-81	5,924
1981-82	6,100
1982-83	6,183
1983-84	7,114
1985-86	9,297

Comparable details for civil legal aid are not readily available. The following table shows the number of applications received and the number of full legal aid certificates issued. The figures include applications for emergency certificates which may be refused even though legal aid may eventually be given on the normal basis and not all approvals result in the issue of a certificate.

	Total applications received	Full certificates received
1979-80	29,012	16,782
1980-81	32,843	17,621
1981-82	35,292	22,190
1982-83	31,006	19,475
1983-84	31,126	18,353
1984-85	31,953	16,596

Motoring Offences

Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether magistrates involved in trying motoring offences are expected either to have had or to possess a current driving licence.

Mr. Lang: No.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest information his Department has on the number of those unemployed in Scotland by social class; and what percentage of each social class these figures represent.

Mr. Lang: The latest available information, which comes from the "Labour Force Survey", is shown in the table below:

Numbers of people without a job and actively looking for work during the week prior to the survey and as a percentage of those economically active in each group
Scotland, Spring 1985

Previous Occupations	Number	Percentage rate
I Professional etc. occupations	[1] ..	[2] ..
II Intermediate occupations	20,000	4·2
III Skilled occupations	88,000	7·9
IV Partly skilled occupations	51,000	12·7
V Unskilled occupations	35,000	19·6
Not classified	[3] 129,000	[2] ..
All unemployed	[4] 324,000	[4] 13·4

[1] Less than 10,000.
[2] No meaningful rate can be computed for this group.
[3] Includes people looking for work for over three years who were not asked about their previous occupation.
[4] The total number and percentage unemployed according to the "Labour Force Survey" definition of unemployment may differ from the number and percentage unemployed given by the count of claimants at unemployment benefit offices. Differences arise because, for example,
a. some people who were looking for work were not claiming benefit;
b. some people who were claiming benefit were not actively looking for work in the week prior to the survey.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information is available from the 1981 census on the number and percentage out of work in Dundee by social class.

Mr. Lang: This information is not available in the form requested.

Migrant Workers

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information is available on the extent of migrant workers in Dundee, showing the numbers of those normally resident in the city but who travel outwith the Tayside regional boundaries for work.

Mr. Lang: The most recent information on migrant workers comes from the 1981 "Census of Population". About 1,900 people whose area of residence was in the city of Dundee were reported to be working in Scotland outwith Tayside region, or in England, Wales, Northern Ireland, overseas or at sea.

Dundee (Labour Statistics)

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information is available on the extent of migrant workers in Scotland who are normally resident in Scotland but who travel outwith of Scotland for work.

Mr. Lang: The most recent information on migrant workers comes from the 1981 "Census of Population". About 18,000 people whose area of residence was in Scotland were reported to be working in England, Wales, Northern Ireland, overseas or at sea.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has from the 1981 census showing the number and percentage of those unemployed in Dundee and Scotland with dependent children.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is available for Scotland only and is expressed in terms of heads of households. It is estimated that 66,150 economically active heads of household who were out of employment had dependent children, representing 52 per cent. of all economically active heads of household out of employment.

NHS (Expenditure)

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current expenditure on the National Health Service in Tayside per head of population; what was the corresponding figure in 1980-81; and if he will express both figures as constant figures.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is as follows:

	Gross NHS Expenditure At Cash Prices[1] £,000	Estimated Population Figures £,000	Cost Per Head At Cash Prices £	Cost Per Head At 1985-86 Prices[3] £
1980-81	119,718	396,825	302	411
1985-86[2]	163,452	394,322	415	415

[1]Comprising expenditure on hospital and community services, family practitioner services and capital.
[2]The most recent year for which detailed figures are available.
[3]As measured by GDP deflator.

Jobs (Tayside)

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of new jobs created in Tayside region in the latest available year; how many of these are part-time jobs; and how many of these are in manufacturing industry.

Mr. Lang: Comprehensive information on jobs created is not available. In 1985, some 1,060 new jobs and 2,170 safeguarded jobs were associated with offers of regional selective assistance made to businesses in Tayside region of which 2,200 in total were in the manufacturing sector. Similarly, some 1,100 new jobs, of which 1,000 were in manufacturing, were associated with offers of new regional development grant. It should be noted that some projects received both types of assistance. Information on the number of part-time jobs is not available.

Retail Developments

Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to publish the revised national planning guidelines on the location of major retail developments.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend and I are at present studying the comments received by the Scottish Development Department on the draft of the revised guidelines which was issued for consultation on 8 May 1986. We hope to reach conclusions soon.

Strathclyde Structure Plan

Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what submissions he has received from Strathclyde regional council concerning any formal alteration or addition to the Strathclyde structure plan 1981; and when he intends to respond.

Mr. Ancram: A second alteration to the plans was submitted in January 1985 and approved with modifications in December 1985. My right hon. and learned Friend has had no further formal submission but expects a third alteration to be submitted for his approval within the next month of two. The Scottish Development Department received a consultative draft relating to the proposed third alteration in September and responded on 15 October.

St. Enoch Square (Glasgow)

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the extent of involvement by the Scottish Development Agency in the Glasgow St. Enoch square development; and what efforts are being made to involve Scottish construction companies in the development.

Mr. Lang: The development is taking place on a site which was assembled by the Scottish Development Agency and then transferred to the developers on terms which give the agency a stake in the development's future success. Scottish companies have won a significant number of contracts so far and the project is being handled in such a way as to enable all Scottish companies which are interested to tender for specific jobs. The eventual success of such tenders will of course depend on price and quality.

Nurses (Duke Street Hospital)

Mr. Martin asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many qualified nurses are employed at the Duke street hospital in Glasgow; and how this compares with the authorised establishment.

Mr. John Mackay: On 31 October 1986 there were 89·2* qualified nurses in post and the funded establishment was 102·3*.

* Figures are whole-time equivalents.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is satisfied with the arrangements which presently exist for consultation between the Forestry Commission and the agriculture departments, the local authorities and the Nature Conservancy Council, respectively, in relation to current and new forestry grant applications in environmentally sensitive areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and learned Friend is satisfied that the discussions which are taking place between the Forestry Commission and the relevant statutory authorities will lead to mutually acceptable arrangements for consultations over forestry grant applications in environmentally sensitive areas.

Agricultural Advisory Services

Mr. Pollock asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future funding of the agricultural advisory services provided by the Scottish agricultural colleges.

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future funding of the agricultural advisory services provided by the Scottish colleges of agriculture.

Mr. Rifkind: I am pleased to be able to announce that following careful consideration of the funding position of Scottish agricultural colleges I have been able to make available an additional £0·75 million for the agricultural advisory services in Scotland in each of the years 1987-88 and 1988-89.

This additional sum takes account of the capacity of the services in Scotland to raise income in the initial years of charging.

DEFENCE

Discharged Personnel (Hearing Loss)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many people have been discharged from the forces with severe hearing loss in the last year for which figures are available; in how many cases the hearing loss was attributable to service in the forces; and if he will categorise the size of the pensions awarded according to the degree of hearing loss.

Mr. Freeman: In 1985, which is the last year for which figures are available, there were 10 medical discharges of United Kingdom regular service personnel in which the principal cause was under International Classification of Diseases (ICD) 388.1 (Noise effects on inner ear). A further 54 medical discharges were made under ICD 389 (Deafness). A few of these may have been due to Service attributable causes.

The further information requested is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services. I am advised however that in 1985 1,313 new awards were made by DHSS for hearing deficiencies attributable to service in the armed forces. Because there is no limitation on the period in which a person has to claim a war pension, those awards may have been made to any person who left the forces after the outbreak of hostilities in September 1939. The number of awards made to persons who left the services only during 1985 could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

I am further advised by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services that disablement is assessed in accordance with the requirements of the Service Pensions Order, notably Article 9 and Part V of Schedule 1, which requires a 100 per cent. assessment for absolute deafness. Other assessments of less disablement are based on the hearing acuity to conversational voice and audio-metric findings.

The use of the latter in assessing degree of disablement is on the basis of advice given to the DHSS by the British Associaton of Otolaryngologists. The basis of assessment from conversational voice is on advice from consultants, medical boards and tribunals.

Degrees of disablement assessed as above apply only to the deafness itself and additions have to be made in respect of complications such as chronic suppuration, tinnitus or vertigo due to the accepted condition.

If the right hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) has a particular case in mind, I am advised that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services would be pleased to look into the matter.

Overseas Personnel (Training)

Mr. David Howell asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether military personnel from Syria, Libya, Iraq and South Africa are being trained at present in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: Some members of the Iraqi armed forces are currently undergoing training at the Ministry of Defence establishments in the United Kingdom. No such training is being provided for members of the Syrian, Libyan or South African armed forces.

Nuclear Missiles

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for the continued need to station cruise and Pershing II missiles in Europe of any future removal of comparable Russian missiles.

Mr. Stanley: The extent to which it would continue to be necessary to station ground launched cruise missiles and Pershing II missiles in Europe would depend on the extent to which the Soviet Union was willing to eliminate its SS20 and SS4 missiles in the context of an INF agreement based on zero numbers, or equal numbers above zero, and which included effective verification procedures and the necessary collateral constraints on the short-range systems.

Aircraft (Early Warning System)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment his Department has made of (a) Nimrod's airborne early warning systems and (b) AWAC's G-3A ability to detect slow low-flying aircraft;

(2) what information he has on progress on the General Electric Company's avionics Nimrod airborne early warning programme in the areas of (a) design, (b) production of a new aerial, (c) transmitter reliability and (d) radar detection.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Flight trials of the Nimrod and E-3A systems have been carried out using a representative range of targets. These trials have also allowed us to make an up-to-date assessment of current system performance. We are now in the final stages of this competition and I would prefer not to comment on the relative merits of the two remaining contenders.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his assessment of the number of United Kingdom jobs which could arise from exports of Nimrod's airborne early warning system.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This is a matter for the company, but would, in any event, depend upon a number of factors, not least the number of orders received.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to take account of the worldwide export potential of advanced early warning systems in deciding which system to purchase.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The overseas sales potential of airborne early warning systems will certainly be a factor in the decision. But the major considerations in our evaluation of the two surviving candidates in our airborne early warning competition remain the ability of each to meet the Royal Air Force's pressing operational requirement and the comparative costs.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement giving details of the nature of the offset work offered by Boeing in its airborne early warning system bid;

(2) what assessment he has made of the offset work likely to be generated by buying AWACS.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As the Boeing Company has said, if we buy its AEW system it will be committed to offset in the United Kingdom 130 per cent. of our expenditure, within eight years. This commitment is one of the factors we shall take into account in reaching a final decision.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on progress on GEC avionics efforts to market the C-130 airborne early warning system.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This is really a question for the company, but we are monitoring progress carefully and will assist where possible.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the offset work likely to be generated by the Nimrod airborne early warning system for Britain's advanced technology industries.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The term offset normally refers to work carried out by the industry of a foreign customer country. However, in this instance I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the contribution made by the Nimrod AEW programme to the maintenance of Britain's advanced technology industries and I can confirm that this is a factor we shall take into account in our decision on the way ahead on the United Kingdom's AEW requirement.

Rapier 2000

Mr. Denzil Davies asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how much his Department plans to spend on Rapier 2000 in the 1987-88 financial year;

(2) how much will be spent on the Rapier 2000 system in the 1986-87 financial year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am unable to provide this information on grounds of commercial confidentiality.

Trident

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he made in 1979 of offset work generated by buying Trident; what is his latest estimate; and how much has been created to date.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is no offset agreement and no estimate of offset work was made in 1979. I refer to the answer given at column 422 on 11 December 1984.

To date, United Kingdom companies have succeeded in winning 200 contracts from the United States Trident programme and these are valued at a total of $47 million.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of work generated in the United Kingdom as a result of the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman) on 4 November at column 426.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Lamb

Mr. Terlezki asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he intends to take to protect lamb exports from (a) Wales and (b) Great Britain from action being taken by French farmers; if he will consider reciprocal action against French dairy products exported to Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I and my right hon. and hon. Friends protested very strongly to the French Government during the recent interference to our lamb export trade. I am glad to say that this interference has now ceased. The French authorities have undertaken to pay compensation for losses and damage done and have issued fresh and firm instructions to law enforcement authorities. We are continuing to watch the position carefully.

Dumping at Sea

Mr. Cohen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will prohibit the dumping of hazardous industrial waste in the North sea; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will prohibit the burning of hazardous industrial chemicals in the North sea ; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 provides that sea disposal or marine incineration may not take place except under the terms of a licence from the appropriate Government Department. Such licences are not issued unless scientific examination shows the operation in question to be acceptable in terms of its impact on the marine environment, the living resources it supports, and human health, and unless it conforms with the relevant international conventions.

Beef

Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest cost of storing the beef surplus.

Mr. Gummer: The provision in the European Community budget for 1986 for the cost of storing beef is 264 million European currency units (about £192 million) for public storage and 105 million European currency units (about £76 million) for private storage.

Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the most recent figure for the annual production and consumption of beef.

Mr. Gummer: In 1985 home-fed production of beef and veal in the United Kingdom was 1,121,000 tonnes and consumption of all forms of beef and veal, expressed on a carcase-weight equivalent basis was 1,231,000 tonnes.

Mr. Latham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on his policy regarding the continuation of the European Community variable beef premium; and what action he is taking in that regard.

Mr. Gummer: As part of this year's fixing decisions, the Council of Ministers agreed that the European Commission's proposals for reforming the beef regime should be studied further with a view to decisions being taken by 31 December 1986. The regulations governing the beef variable premium scheme were accordingly extended to that date. The Commission's proposal for changes to the beef regime include a Community-wide premium scheme which is intended to replace the variable premium. We are pressing the merits of a slaughter premium scheme in the negotiations which we intend to bring to a conclusion at the December meeting of the Agriculture Council if at all possible. The Commission has, however, undertaken to propose a continuation of the variable premium scheme, taking account of the budgetary situation, if changes to the regime are not agreed in time be brought into effect by the end of the year.

Mr. Latham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will list the countries from which beef taken from cattle with hormone implants is still being imported into the United Kingdom; and what action he intends to take in that regard.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The United Kingdom at present has no restrictions on imports of beef from countries which permit the use of hormone growth promoters, excluding stilbenes and thyrostatic substances, for fattening animals.

From 1 January 1988 intro-Community trade in meat from implanted animals will be prohibited. The EC Commission will negotiate arrangements with non-Community countries to provide equivalent guarantees in respect of their meat exports to the EC by the same date.

Bovine Somatotrophin

Sir Peter Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the effect of the introduction of bovine somatotrophin products to raise milk yields.

Mr. Gummer: The use of bovine somatotrophin to increase milk yields requires either an animal test certificate or a product licence under the Medicines Act 1968. If a product licence were applied for, evidence would have to be submitted as to safety (including the safety of consumers of milk) quality and efficacy.

Imports (Ireland)

Sir Peter Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will review the existing agreement on agriculture imports from Ireland and the effect on United Kingdom producers.

Mr. Gummer: Matters of this kind, including arrangements for payment of the beef variable premium, are governed by Community legislation. There is no bilateral agreement with the Irish Republic.

Livestock Allowances

Sir Peter Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will allow small milk producers to receive livestock allowances within the less-favoured areas in accordance with the European Economic Community structures directive.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We are currently reviewing the economic conditions in the hills and uplands, and in the light of that review we shall be determining hill livestock compensatory allowances for 1987. We shall be announcing the outcome as soon as possible.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Harris asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many ex-Spanish fishing vessels are now registered in the United Kingdom; what was the total 12 months ago; and how many have been removed from the register in the same period.

Mr. Gummer: Currently, out of 15,301 United Kingdom fishing vessels, 50 ex-Spanish fishing vessels are registered in the United Kingdom; a further 23 ex-United Kingdom vessels on the register are beneficially owned by Spanish interests.

At 17 November 1985, 48 ex-Spanish vessels had United Kingdom registration in addition to six ex-United Kingdom vessels which were beneficially owned in Spain. During the period 24 vessels have been removed from the register, but of this total, 11 have subsequently been reregistered.

Mr. Harris asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the Spanish fishing vessels which have been arrested in United Kingdom waters giving (a) their home ports, (b) where cases against them were heard and (c) what penalties were imposed since the information given to the hon. Member for St. Ives on 14 March 1985, Official Report, columns 263-64.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is set out in the table; it includes details of Spanish vessels prosecuted and found guilty up to 17 November 1986.

Name of vessel	Home port	Where case held	Penalty
1985
Almiketxu	Pasajes	Falmouth	£500 plus costs
Capredi Dos	Gijon	Falmouth	£8,500 plus forfeiture of excess by catch and £350 costs.

Name of vessel	Home port	Where case held	Penalty
Monte-Maigmo	Vigo	Falmouth	£35,000 plus £700 costs. A prison sentence of 12 months in default of payment of the fine was also imposed.
Elife	Gijon	Falmouth	£10,000 plus costs.
Ria De Aldan	Vigo	Falmouth	£6,000 plus forfeiture of by catch and £375 costs.
Legorpe	Qudarroa	Falmouth	£35,000 and £375 costs.
Jose Cesareo	Vigo	Falmouth	£4,000 plus confiscation of net and undersized fish.
1986
Rio Oitysen	Vigo	Falmouth	£15,000 plus £425 costs.
Toki Ali	Qudarroa	Falmouth	£20,000 plus £935 costs.
Promontoro	Santander	Falmouth	£2,000 plus retention of prohibited species and £350 costs.
Sargo	Vigo	Stornoway	£11,150.
Fato Sillero	Vigo	Stornoway	£6,900.
Mikel	Pasajes	Stornoway	£1,500 plus £245 value of illegal part of catch.
Olabarria	Pasajes	Cambleton	£2,500 plus £543 value of illegal part of catch.
Vera Cruz Segundo	Pasajes	Stornoway	£12,600.
Playa De Aldens	Vigo	Falmouth	£3,000 plus prohibited catch and £350 costs.
Vilarino	Vigo	Falmouth	£3,200 plus £350 costs.
Las Nives	Vigo	Plymouth	£750 plus £510 costs.
Foral	Marin	Falmouth	£2,650 plus £350 costs.
Uricen Uno	Pasajes	Falmouth	£2,750 plus £350 costs.

Departmental Initiatives

Mr. Silvester asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list initiatives by his Department which have been of benefit specifically to the north-east, north-west and Yorkshire and Humberside regions since 1979.

Mr. Jopling: My Department's concerns are to foster efficient and competitive agriculture, fisheries, food and drink manufacturing and distribution industries, to meet the needs of consumers and to ensure a reasonable balance between the interests of agriculture, the economic and social interests of rural areas, the conservation of the countryside and the promotion of its enjoyment by the public. This includes the very wide range of activities for the benefit of all parts of the country, from the provision and administration of support arrangements to disease eradication programmes and advice. There are a number of initiatives which have been of particular benefit to the regions listed. For example, these contain over half the holdings eligible for permanent special aids for less-favoured areas following the 22 per cent. extension of these areas negotiated in 1984. Other initiatives include exceptional weather aid in 1985, aid this year to compensate for losses arising from Chernobyl contamination, contributing to the Countryside Commission's Operation Groundwork, the launch to date of over 30 schemes approved under the farm and countryside initiative in England providing over 760 places for unemployed people, and specific flood alleviation projects. Also, a new animal health centre was opened at Barton Hall in 1985 providing services to the north-west and Yorkshire and we are establishing an environmentally sensitive area in the Pennine dales. Further, over £11 million or over three quarters of payments under schemes to restructure the fishing industry introduced in late 1983 have benefited these regions.

Sheepmeat

Mr. Latham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on his policy regarding the continuance of the European Community sheepmeat regime; and what action he is taking in that regard.

Mr. Gummer: The Community's sheepmeat regime benefits our producers and consumers through the provision of the annual premium payments on ewes and the variable premium system. The arrangements applied in the United Kingdom avoid the build-up of surplus production by enabling consumers to benefit from lower prices while providing the premium payments to make up producers' returns as necessary. At the same time the provide for continued import of lamb, especially from New Zealand, while our own industry can take advantage of its ability to supply export markets. We shall continue to resist changes which would be detrimental to United Kingdom interests.

Pesticides

Mr. Latham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on his proposals for the implementation within the county of Leicestershire of the Pesticides Regulations 1986; how many inspections of testers will be needed before the operative starting date; how many inspectors have been appointed; and how many of them are full-time.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The effective implementation of the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 is being achieved in stages. The regulations began to come into effect on 6 October and further measures will apply between now and 1 January 1989.

To assist implementation, we have embarked upon a policy of education allied to enforcement. My Department has so far issued an explanatory leaflet about the new controls and, in conjunction with the Health and Safety Executive, the book "Pesticides 1986" listing all the approved products. We have also prepared and circulated in draft codes of practice on the storage, supply and sale of pesticides and on their use and plan to bring these into effect next year.

For the purposes of enforcement in England, I have so far authorised 72 officers from my Department to enforce part III of the Act; 11 authorised ADAS officers are located in the Ministry's midlands and western region, which includes Leicestershire, and two of them deal with that county on a day-to-day basis.

Looking ahead to more comprehensive enforcement in the future I have invited the Health and Safety Commission to make the necessary arrangements and details of the relevant agency agreement are under consideration by them. My officials are also at the moment consulting the local authority associations, with a view to authorising local authority trading standards and environmental health officers to enforce part III of the Act at an early date.

Potatoes

Mr. Gale asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many tonnes of potatoes were exported from the United Kingdom to South America in 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mr. Gummer: A total of 11 tonnes of potatoes were exported to South America during this period, 5 tonnes in 1984-85 and 6 tonnes in 1985-86. The destination of both consignments was Venezuela.

Mr. Gale asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations the Potato Review Group has received from the Potato Growers Action Group, the Processed Vegetable Growers Association and the Federation of Agricultural Co-operatives (UK) Ltd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: All these organisations contributed to the review of potato support arrangements carried out in 1983-84. In announcing new support measures to enter effect on 1 July 1985 the Government made it clear that there would be a further review before the end of five years — that is to say, before 30 June 1990. Work on this second review has not yet begun, and no representations have so far been invited or received.

Monetary Compensatory Amounts

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply of 20 November, whether any monetary co-efficients fall to be applied to monetary compensatory amounts in respect of sales of beef under regulation 2670/88 and sales of butter under regulation 765/86; and what amount is involved in pence per pound.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when regulation 765/86 was considered by the management committee of the EEC's common agricultural policy; which nations fail to benefit from the special arrangements provided by the regulation; which nations have so far benefited from sales under the regulation; and how the representative of Her Majesty's Government on that committee voted on the regulation.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Badgers

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in implementing Professor Dunnet's recommendations on future research in relation to the problem of badgers and bovine tuberculosis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In the light of Professor Dunnet's recommendations, and with the benefit of advice from the consultative panel, my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Wales and I are now able to outline the broad programme of future research on badgers and bovine tuberculosis that will be undertaken by the agricultural departments. In determining that programme we have had to take into account the costs and objectives of each possible research project and the likelihood that particular projects will yield useful results within a reasonable time scale.

Like Professor Dunnet, we see as a first priority the development of a diagnostic test for tuberculosis in the living badger and I am therefore taking steps to strengthen the team at the Ministry's central veterinary laboratory (CVL) in order to accelerate work on this project. We are hopeful that parallel research also being conducted at the CVL may lead to an improved diagnostic test for the disease in cattle.

My right hon. Friend and I see as a second priority the continuation of field studies on badger biology and the transmission of tuberculosis being undertaken at the Ministry's Gloucestershire study area and we have therefore approved the continuation of these studies. We have also given careful consideration to the suggestion that there is a need for further field study sites but are bound to say that, having weighed the considerable costs against the possible benefits from such sites, at this stage we accept Professor Dunnet's view that they could not be justified.

However, despite the long-term nature of the study, we believe that the Ministry's collaborative programme of work with the Middlesex hospital into a possible badger vaccine should continue and we are making resources available for that purpose. We intend to take up Professor Dunnet's suggestion that further modelling and statistical studies should be undertaken with a view to increasing both our understanding of the epidemiology of tuberculosis and the likely effect of alternative control strategies. We also intend that the national survey of badger carcases for tuberculosis should continue in order to monitor the incidence of disease in the badger population.

Overall we are convinced of the need to maintain an effective and wide-ranging research programme on bovine tuberculosis in the hope that through it we will find a more selective means of badger control or, if possible, a means to tackle this serious disease without the need for any form of badger control. The research programme will be kept under continuous review with the consultative panel and details will continue to be published in the Ministry's annual reports on bovine tuberculosis in badgers.

Pressure Stock Licences

Mr. Steen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will investigate the extent to which pressure stock licences are being bought in the Plymouth area and transferred to Spanish fishing vessels; and if he will make a statement about the practice of transferring pressure stock licences from British boats to boats belonging to other countries but registered in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986]: I must emphasise that in exercising Ministers' licensing powers under the Sea Fish (Conservation) Act 1967 we are obliged to avoid any discrimination between different categories of vessels on the British fishing vessels register which cannot clearly be justified in terms of United Kingdom and Community law.

I am, however, concerned at the increasing pressure on a number of whitefish stocks subject to quotas in ICES area VII, which includes the Channel and other western waters. This situation could be seriously exacerbated as a result of the transfer of pressure stock licences from smaller vessels to larger ones. It is for this reason that I announced on 21 November an immediate moratorium on the transfer of area VII whitefish pressure stock licences from vessels below 80 ft in length to vessels over 80 ft. I shall review this before the end of the year.

In addition, we will be looking very carefully at the circumstances of all applications for pressure stock licence transfers in the light of the problems to which I have referred.

Mr. Steen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to restrict the issue of pressure stock licences to British nationals fishing from British boats.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Wantage (Mr. Jackson) on 9 December 1985, at column 482, in which I announced new licence conditions for vessels fishing against United Kingdom quotas, to ensure that the vessels have a real economic link with this country. Some of these conditions are currently subject to challenge in the courts, but I am giving serious consideration to such enforcement action as is open to us. It would be inappropriate to comment further at this stage.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Erith and Queen Mary's Hospitals

9. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to visit Erith hospital or Queen Mary's hospital, Sidcup.

Mr. Newton: Yes. I intend to visit Bexley health authority early in the new year and will seek to include Erith hospital and Queen Mary's hospital, Sidcup in the programme.

Warnock Report

12. Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the Government will be taking action to implement the recommendations of the Warnock report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if the Government have yet drawn up any proposals to deal with the contents of the Warnock report; and if he will make a stateent;

(2) if the Government have any plans to introduce legislation proposed by the Warnock report; and if he will make a statement;

Mr. Maclennon asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation to regulate the conduct of work in the fields of human fertilisation and embryology.

Mr. Newton: The Government intend to publish before the end of the year a consultation document inviting views about those issues on which the Warnock committee thought legislation was necessary or desirable, many of which have not yet been the subject of public debate in the same way as the Report's proposals concerning embryo research. The Government's aim is to bring forward legislation in the next Parliament, which will include alternative draft clauses on embryo research so that the House would have a clear opportunity to resolve this matter on a free vote.

Abortions

14. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the number of abortions carried out after 28 weeks.

Mr. Newton: After 28 weeks' gestation, the delivery of a baby by medical or surgical means is classed as either a still or a live birth. In neither case, does the information collected centrally permit a comprehensive analysis of the numbers resulting from induced as opposed to spontaneous delivery.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the number of abortions performed under the Abortion Act 1967 upon women who are normally residents of Northern Ireland in each of the years since the implementation of that Act; and if he will state in each of those years the numbers of those abortions which were performed in emergency to save the life of the mother.

Mr. Newton: The information is shown in the table. None of these abortions was notified as having been performed in emergency to save the life of the pregnant woman.

Number of notifications of legal abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967 to women usually resident in Northern Ireland, 1968-1985

England and Wales

Year	Number of notifications	Year	Number of notifications
1968	36	1977	1,244
1969	96	1978	1,311
1970	199	1979	1,425
1971	648	1980	1,365
1972	775	1981	1,441
1973	1,007	1982	1,510
1974	1,092	1983	1,460
1975	1,115	1984	1,530
1976	1,142	1985	1,637

Coronary Heart Disease

16. Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to seek to reduce the incidence of coronary heart disease among the Asian communities.

Mrs. Currie: This country has one of the worst rates of premature death from coronary heart disease in the world.

We are determined to improve the situation for all our people. We are planning a major heart disease prevention campaign, to be launched next spring, directed at all sections of the community.

Severe Weather Payments

17. Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will reconsider his decision to include a £500 capital limit in the criteria of eligibility for exceptionally severe weather payments.

Mr. Major: No. The £500 capital rule is in line with that for other single payments.

25. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the new severe weather payments will be made to all on supplementary benefit.

Mr. Major: Those who will be eligible, subject to the normal £500 capital rule, will be householders where there is a member of the family as assessed for supplementary benefit purposes who is aged 65 or over, chronically sick or disabled, or aged under two.

35. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total cost of the payments made last winter under the severe weather payments scheme.

38. Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many payments were made last year under the severe weather payments scheme.

Mr. Lyell: The information is not yet available. Local offices have been asked to make a return so that the number of payments and total amount paid can be calculated.

39. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate he has made of the number of payments of severe weather allowance which would have been made in 1985-86 using the new criteria recently proposed by the Government.

Mr. Major: It is not possible with hindsight to make a valid estimate since amounts paid would depend on claimants' capital holding and take-up in the affected area.

53. Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the new scheme for severe weather payments.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend, the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro), on 20 November at columns 326-27.

Domestic Assistance

18. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the cost of additional weekly payments for domestic assistance in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lyell: About £600,000.

Departmental Staff (Teesside)

19. Mr. Tinn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals he has to increase the staffing at his Department's offices on Teesside.

Mr. Lyell: As announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 7 March 1986 a full review of staffing levels is currently in progress, together with a review of social security tasks. The results of these two reviews will be taken into account in deciding manpower requirements of the social security organisation after April 1987.

Pending the results of these reviews more than 5,000 additional staff above the number produced by the agreed complementing arrangements have been added for the current year, at a cost of over £100 million. The offices serving the Teesside area have received their share of these additional posts and no further additions are envisaged until the results of the reviews are known.

Claimants (Penalties)

20. Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received concerning the penalties suffered by claimants who fail to sign on at the correct time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lyell: The law provides that where a person makes a late claim for unemployment benefit he cannot receive payment for days before he claimed unless he can show good cause for claiming late. We receive occasional representations from or on behalf of claimants who are not happy about the way the time limits affect their claims but I am not aware of any general dissatisfaction.

Disabled Persons

21. Mr. Lilley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will publish the findings of his Department's survey of disabled people.

Mr. Major: Publication of the full results is expected in 1988.

Solihull District General Hospital

22. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give an estimated completion date for the new Solihull district general hospital.

Mrs. Currie: Building work on Solihull's new district general hospital is due to start in September 1988 and is expected to be completed by April 1992.

Smoking

23. Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received proposing legislation to reduce the incidence of smoking.

Mrs. Currie: A total of 60 representations have been received since 1 April when the current voluntary agreement with the tobacco industry came into effect.

Southend Hospital

24. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many letters he has now received from the general public about the proposal of the North East Thames regional health authority to close the radiotherapy unit at Southend hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We have now received 13 letters which have been referred by hon. Members, together with about 166 letters direct from members of the general public. We shall take into account all representations received if we are required to make a final decision on the proposal to close the radiotherapy unit at Southend following public consultation.

Pharmaceutical Products (Packaging)

26. Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will seek powers to require pharmaceutical manufacturers to pack products in tamper evident containers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We do not at this stage believe that additional powers are needed. The majority of proprietary medicinal products available without prescription are already in tamper evident packaging.

We are currently in touch with the trade associations concerned as to how tamper evident packaging might best be extended to all medicinal products and within what timescale. We have at present no reason to believe that legislation will be necessary to achieve this.

Single Payment Allowances

27. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received regarding single payment allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lyell: We regularly receive correspondence and representations from individuals, organisations and right hon. and hon. Members, covering all aspects of social security benefits, including supplementary benefit single payments. On 23 October 1986 the hon. Member wrote to my right hon. Friend about a particular case involving a single payment for repairs to property; and I replied on 17 November 1986.

Child Benefit

28. Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether it is proposed to cease issuing forms for claiming child benefit to all mothers on the birth of their child.

Mr. Major: No. The ending of non-contributory maternity grant will lead to revised arrangements for the issue of child benefit claim forms. They will be issued by local social security offices upon request.

Wessex Regional Health Authority

29. Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last met the chairman of the Wessex regional health authority; and what was discussed.

Mr. Newton: My right hon. Friend meets all regional chairmen every two months to discuss a wide range of issues. The last such meeting was on 19 November 1986.

Hospital Waiting Lists

30. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received about the length of hospital waiting lists.

Mr. Newton: We receive regular representations from hon. Members, members of the public and others about both waiting lists and waiting times. My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, has launched a drive designed to make a major impact on the problem over the next three years.

Artificial Limbs

31. Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are waiting for artificial limbs to be (a) fitted or (b) repaired or adjusted.

Mr. Major: The artificial limb service does not operate a waiting list. As soon as a patient is referred to one of the Department of Health and Social Security artificial limb and appliance centres and following medical examination and prescription, arrangements are made for the supply of an artificial limb or limbs. Duplicate artificial limbs are generally provided to cover the eventuality of the need for repairs or other adjustments to the limbs in use. Once provided with their prostheses, patients are then given an on-demand service for repair and re-adjustments which vary greatly in the amount of work required; the majority are completed on the day. At any point in time approximately 9,000 artificial limbs are being constructed (4,500) or repaired (4,500).

In asking this question the hon. Member may have in mind the effect on patient services of the J. E. Hanger industrial dispute. Since the start of this dispute 78 patients have had their appointments postponed, several of which have now been re-instated. A larger number have experienced delay. Arrangements have been made to identify these countrywide and where necessary steps are being taken to deal with them in conjunction with the company. Additionally, I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist) on 17 November at column 75.

Services (Privatisation)

32. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many health authorities have put one or more services out to competitive tender; and if he will estimate the aggregate annual savings thereby achieved.

Mr. Fowler: Health authorities are continuing to make considerable progress in improving the cost effectiveness of their domestic cleaning, catering and laundry services. At 30 September 1986 virtually all health authorities had put some of these services out to tender resulting in savings of almost £73 million a year. This compares with savings of £29 million from the policy of competitive tendering only twelve months ago. Private contractors have been awarded a total of 173 contracts saving £24·6 million. In-house organisations have secured 773 tenders saving £48·1 million. The resources released are retained by health authorities and are now making a substantial contribution to the improvement of patient care services.

Hip Replacements

33. Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of patients who have been awaiting hip replacement operations for more than six months.

Mr. Newton: I regret that I cannot provide my hon. Friend with information in precisely the form he seeks. Information is not collected centrally on the intended method of treatment of cases on in-patients waiting lists. However, for patients discharged in 1984, the latest year for which figures are available centrally, the interval between the date the patient was placed on the waiting list and the date of admission was approximately six months or more in an estimated 8,840 cases admitted from the waiting list for total hip replacements and other arthroplasty of hip operations in National Health Service hospitals in England. This represents 23 per cent. of the estimated total of 37,970 cases undergoing hip operations.

Haemodialysis Units

34. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans regional health authorities have for the introduction of self-care haemodialysis units in hospitals.

Mrs. Currie: The plans submitted by regional health authorities to the Department do not include precise details as to how haemodialysis services are to be provided.

Cervical Cancer

36. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has for extending the scope of cervical cancer screening.

Mrs. Currie: The Government are committed to cutting death rates from cervical cancer by improving the effectiveness of the screening programme for all women. In January this year all health authorities were required to give priority to improving their cervical cancer screening programmes, including implementing computerised call and recall systems within two years, and ensuring that laboratories avoid backlogs. All women who are or have been sexually active should be regularly screened for cervical cancer.

Our guidance to health authorities within this framework is currently under review.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of deaths due to cervical cancer by (a) regional health authority and (b) district health authority for any available year post 1979.

Mrs. Currie: Figures for 1980-84 inclusive are published in Table 4 of "Mortality Statistics: area, series DH5" numbers 7-11, copies of which may be found in the Library. Information for 1985 is shown in the table:

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place the regional and district health authority reports on cervical cancer in the Library.

Mrs. Currie: Regional health authorities' "outturn reports" to the Department for 1985-86, which in turn are based on district health authority reports, cover a wide range of issues and are not intended for publication. The latest available information on the position on cervical cancer as at 31 March 1986, based on the information in regions, outturn reports, has already been published in my previous replies to the hon. Member and to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson).

AIDS

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many haemophiliacs tested for HIV have proved positive; and what proportion this represents of haemophiliacs receiving blood products from the National Blood Transfusion Service.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 17 November 1986, c. 78]: The most recent figures available show that:

Two thousand two hundred and twenty eight patients with Haemophilia A have been tested and 902 have been found with HIV antibody positive (40·5 per cent.)

Three hundred and eighty six patients with Haemophilia B have been tested and 26 have been found HIV antibody positive (6·7 per cent.)

Three hundred and twenty seven patients with von Willebrand's disease have been tested and nine have been found HIV antibody positive (2·7 per cent.)

No comparable figures are yet routinely available to demonstrate the absence of HIV infection in haemophiliacs treated exclusively with heat treated products whether made commercially or by the National Health Service.

Northern Region (New Hospitals)

37. Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much has been spent on new hospital schemes in the Northern region since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: The information is not available in precisely the form requested. I understand, however, that the Northern regional health authority's total expenditure, excluding joint finance monies, on all capital schemes during the period 1 April 1979 to 31 March 1986 was some £268,708,000.

This figure includes expenditure on the following hospital schemes costing over £1 million which were started on site between 1 April 1979 and 31 March 1986:

Skilled Staff

40. Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to increase the number of skilled staff currently available in the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The number of skilled staff which health authorities employ is a matter for them to determine in the light of local circumstances. Their plans for the future, however, do show a continuing growth in the number of skilled staff and particularly in the area of direct patient care.

Cancer (Black Report)

41. Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on his Department's planning of studies to implement recommendations 1, 2 and 3 of the Black report on the incidence of cancer in West Cumbria.

Mrs. Currie: No. I have nothing to add to my replies to the hon. Member on 6 November, at columns 593-94.

Mobility Allowance

42. Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance he gives to the medical adjudicating authorities about the assessment of claims for mobility allowances for patients suffering from conditions involving fluctuating conditions.

Mr. Major: Revised guidance notes for medical practitioners dealing with mobility allowance claims are in the course of preparation and contain the following information about the assessment of walking ability where a claimant has a fluctuating condition.

"Intermittent impairment of walking

Where a claimant's walking ability is only intermittently interrupted because of their physical condition, it is a question of degree and frequency whether this means they can be considered virtually unable to walk throughout any period for which an award might be made. For instance, if a claimant suffers from epilepsy or the effects of renal dialysis, you will need to consider whether the condition and its more continuous effects on walking ability (eg balance impairment, anaemia resulting in excessive tiredness, etc.) are so extreme as to render the claimant virtually unable to walk for most of the time".

AIDS

43. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the Government's policy towards acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend's speech to the House on 21 November at columns 801-10.

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, for purposes of planning the future allocation of resources within the National Health Service, what epidemiological assumptions he is using in respect of the increasing incidence of acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Mr. Newton: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people have died of acquired immune deficiency syndrome, and in which health districts.

Mr. Newton: By mid-November 565 cases of AIDS in the United Kingdom had been reported to the communicable disease surveillance centre, of whom 284 had died. A breakdown of deaths on a regional basis is as follows:

	Numbers
Northern Region	12
Yorkshire	3
Trent	2
East Anglian	3
North West Thames	126
North East Thames	43
South East Thames	17
South West Thames	13
Wessex	9

North Western	12
Wales	7
Northern Ireland	2
Scotland	9

Community Hospitals

44. Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many community hospitals have been opened in Britain since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: Comprehensive information is not available centrally in the form requested. Health building returns show that two community hospital schemes have been completed since 1979 and that nine more are due to be completed by 1989. This almost certainly underestimates the number of schemes planned or brought into use because

(a) full details of all health authority capital schemes costing between £1 million and £5 million have been collected centrally only since January 1986;

(b) community hospitals established by the adaption of existing premises with a capital cost of less than £1 million will not appear in health building returns.

My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales are responsible for community hospitals elsewhere in Great Britain.

Pensioners

45. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the changes in state support for pensioners in real terms as between 1979 and now.

Mr. Lyell: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Prestwich Hospital

46. Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has received any representations in connection with the proposed shopping development at Prestwich hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: One on 30 October 1986, from my hon. Friend. North Western regional health authority has wide ranging plans to improve its services for mentally ill patients, in particular to develop community services.

North Western regional health authority and the district health authority concerned do not believe they need to retain all the land at Prestwich hospital to provide these services. Some land, they believe, should be sold and the proceeds re-invested in developing services to patients. They are therefore seeking outline planning permission for retail, leisure and housing use for some of the land. My hon. Friend may wish to take up any particular concerns with the regional health authority chairman or with Bury metropolitan district council, the planning authority concerned.

Invalid Care Allowance

47. Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce measures to ensure that the invalid care allowance is paid to those widows and others who (a) do not currently qualify and (b) lose equivalent dependants benefits under existing arrangements.

Mr. Major: We have no plans to do so.

Health Authorities (Performance)

48. Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to improve the monitoring of health authorities performance.

Mr. Newton: The Department monitors regional health authorities' performance in a range of ways including scrutiny of regions' strategies and annual short-term programmes and implementation report; statistical and financial returns, and performance indicators. These information sources have been used in annual accountability reviews between Ministers and regional chairmen, supplemented this year by performance reviews held between the National Health Service management board and regional general managers. Next year we plan further developments to the review system. The introduction of new information systems for the National Health Service in April 1987 will also improve the timeliness and relevance of statistical returns, which in turn will assist the development of an improved performance indicator package.

NHS (Union Meetings)

49. Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what subjects he expects to discuss at his next meeting with trade union representatives of people employed in the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: There are no immediate plans for such meetings at a national level. When Ministers meet trade union repesentatives at a local level, for example in the course of visits to National Health Service facilities, the subjects for discussion would be a matter for the local staff to determine.

Preventive Medicine

50. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps his Department is taking to encourage preventive medicine.

Mrs. Currie: The Government recognise the essential role preventive medicine has to play in improving the nation's health. There is a wide range of preventive activity including vaccination and immunisation, health screening, health education, genetic counselling and medical research. All regional health authorities were asked to include policies for prevention in their 10-year strategic plans and all have done so. Implementation of these policies is monitored through the regional review process. We are also expanding our links with the Faculty of Community Medicine and the Royal College of General Practitioners in the field of prevention.

Our particular concern over the high incidence of premature death and disability from coronary heart disease, the major contributor to premature death in Britain, has led us to prepare a major heart disease prevention campaign to be launched next spring. We have been at pains to involve health professionals at an early stage by a series of conferences and seminars.

Wrightington Hospital (Children's Ward)

51. Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to make a decision about the future of the children's ward at Wrightington hospital, Lancashire.

Mrs. Currie: We hope to make an announcement shortly.

NHS (Expenditure)

52. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of spending on the National Health Service in 1986-87.

Mr. Newton: Spending on the National Health Service in Great Britain in 1986-87 is estimated to be £18,900 million, including the likely proceeds of National Health Service land sales. This represents an increase in real terms of 26 per cent. since 1978-79 and a growth in spending in real terms of 4·2 per cent. in the current year alone.

Unemployed Persons (Mortgage Interest)

54. Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to announce his proposals with regard to mortgage interest payments for the newly unemployed.

Mr. Major: We shall be making an announcement as soon as our considerations are complete.

Residential Homes

55. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make a statement on the permitted scale of supplementary benefit available to residents in (a) private sector nursing homes and (b) private sector residential retirement homes.

Mr. Major: In the spring of this year the Government reviewed the supplementary benefit limits for private and voluntary residential care and nursing homes in the light of the findings of an extensive programme of monitoring and research. There was no evidence to support a general increase in all of the limits but it was decided to make improvements in some areas. These were effective from 28 July. The changes were:

An increase in the basic limit for the elderly from £120 to £125.

A new limit for the very dependent elderly of £140.

A London premium of £17·50 on top of the appropriate limit for people in all homes in the greater London area.

An increase of up to £10 for people whose benefit is transitionally protected to meet increases in fees.

The revised schedule of limits is set out in the table.

Drugs (Over-prescribing)

56. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent steps he has taken to reduce over-prescribing of National Health Service drugs by doctors.

Mr. Newton: We are co-operating with the medical profession in initiatives to encourage more effective and economic prescribing by general medical practitioners, including encouraging doctors not to prescribe when no medicine is necessary. Our plans are outlined in the "Primary Care Discussion Document" published earlier this year, which is currently the subject of widespread public consultation.

Hospitals (Manchester)

57. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received concerning hospital services in Greater Manchester.

Mrs. Currie: Since 1 October there have been five parliamentary questions, 30 letters from hon. Members and 55 letters from members of the general public.

Mentally Handicapped Children

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many mentally handicapped children are currently in local authority care; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Information is not available centrally on the numbers of mentally handicapped children who have been received into or committed to local authority care since mental handicap in itself is not a reason for the admission of a child into such care.

However, in 1985 there were 1,500 mentally handicapped children in England under the age of 16 in local authority residential accommodation or in local authority sponsored places in voluntary or private homes or in private households. We do not know how many of those children had been formally placed in care.

NHS (Civil Defence Planning)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the existing guidance on civil defence planning in the National Health Service currently being revised.

Mrs. Currie: The Department invited comment from health authorities and other bodies on a draft consultation document issued in June 1985 about civil defence planning in the National Health Service. Having regard to the comments received, officials prepared revised guidance which has recently been forwarded to Ministers for consideration.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to include the new increased 13-week exclusion period of disallowance from benefit for industrial misconduct and so on as a period of exclusion from the one-year's entitlement to unemployment benefit.

Mr. Major: Section 18(4) of the Social Security Act, 1975 provides regulation-making powers to treat days of disentitlement or disqualification for receiving unemployment benefit as days of entitlement for the purpose of determining whether a person has exhausted his 312 days of benefit. The application of this power in connection with days of disqualification under section 20 of the Act in cases of voluntary unemployment, industrial misconduct and so on, is currently being considered.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy that any young person who is completing an A-level or other part-time further education course and who completes the declaration form to say he or she is genuinely prepared to withdraw from the course should an employment opportunity arise, will continue to be regarded as available for work and entitled to benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The current rules governing part-time study by people who are receiving supplementary benefit as unemployed are: the course must not be designated full-time by the institution and must not require more than 21 hours per week of supervised study; a qualifying period of three months in receipt of benefit or on a YTS course must be completed; and the claimant must be willing to terminate the course immediately if a suitable vacancy becomes available. We have no plans to change this policy.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many severely disabled people are estimated to be currently receiving additional payments with their supplementary benefit because of their disability which total more than the illustrative rates which the severely disabled will receive under the provisions of the Social Security Act.

Mr. Major: I refer the right hon. Member to tables 1A and 1B, and 10A and 10B of the technical annex to the White Paper, "Reform of Social Security" (Cmnd. 9691) and to pages 9-14 of the annex which explain the basis on which the tables were constructed. The tables illustrate the effect of income support on sick and disabled people eligible for the disability premium, as compared to their entitlement to supplementary benefit, including additional payments.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest estimate of the number of people claiming supplementary benefit board and lodging allowances.

Mr. Lyell: The latest available information on numbers of boarders is from the "Annual Statistical Enquiry" at December 1984. This shows 164,000 supplementary benefit claimants in ordinary board and lodging and hostels and 42,000 in private and voluntary residential care and nursing homes.

Medicines (Information)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money is spent by his Department on providing doctors with impartial information about medicines; what restrictions his Department places on the amount drug companies can spend on promoting drugs to general practitioners; and if he will express the amount allowed in terms of the amount per general practitioner.

Mr. Newton: In the financial year 1985-86 almost £2 million was spent by the Department on providing impartial information about drugs to professional staff working in the National Health Service. This expenditure is not broken down by professional group. It excludes the cost of advice given by the Committee on Safety of Medicines to doctors and also the arrangements under the Medicines Act for regulating the prescribing information to doctors by pharmaceutical companies. In addition, health authorities provide their own drug information services. It is not possible to separate the cost of such services from the total pharmaceutical services provided by health authorities.

Restrictions on drug promotion costs are not related to promotion to general practitioners only. They relate to all drugs provided to the NHS for prescriptions by doctors and dentists, whether in hospital or in general practice. The formula used has a differential effect for different companies but the overall limitation is 9 per cent. of the total NHS drugs bill in any year.

Drugs (Product Licences)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of the new drugs given product licences in each of the last five years were new chemical entities.

Mr. Newton: The figures for 1981 are not available in a comparable form. The published figures for the four most recent years are as follows:

	Total product licences granted	Total product licences containing a new active substance
1982	934	49
1983	783	26

Differences between the years in the number of licences containing a new active substance must be treated with caution since the year in which the licence was granted may be dependent on arbitrary factors and since the number of licences may depend on the number of dosage forms needed, and so on.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many people are in receipt of the higher rate attendance allowance; and what percentage live on their own;

(2) how many people are currently in receipt of the higher rate attendance allowance and are living alone; and for how many of these people there is someone receiving an invalid care allowance in respect of that person's care needs.

Mr. Major: At 31 March 1985, the latest date for which figures are available, the estimated number of people in receipt of attendance allowance at the higher rate is 222,000. It is not known how many live on their own. Information is not kept for either attendance allowance or invalid care allowance to indicate whether an attendance allowance beneficiary lives alone.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people have been denied the severe disablement allowance because of the 10-in-20-years test; and how many of these were members of service families.

Mr. Major: I regret that the information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Hospital Drug Formularies

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hospitals in the National Health Service are known to operate a drug formulary system; how many district health authorities have a system which applies to all their hospitals; how many regional health authorities have a policy on hospital drug formularies; and what is the policy of his Department on the use of such formularies.

Mr. Newton: Figures giving the number of hospitals using drug formularies and their distribution within the National Health Service are not held centrally. The introduction of a hospital drug formulary is a matter for district health authorities in the light of local circumstances.

To promote the rational and economical use of drug therapy the Department has encouraged the formation of local multidisciplinary drug and therapeutic committees. In appropriate circumstances the use of hospital drug formularies is one of the means these committees adopt to achieve this objective.

Drugs

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of drug substances available on the British market; and what is the minimum and maximum number that are on hospital formularies.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested. Medicines may contain single active substances or combinations and each strength of each dosage form is licensed individually. Not all licensed products will necessarily be available on the market at any point in time. As to the maximum and minimum number that are on hospital formularies, I regret that this information is not collected centrally.

Severe Disablement Premium

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received regarding the adequacy of the provision for a severe disablement premium in the Social Security Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Since Royal Assent we have received representations from the main organisations representing disabled people. I aim to meet them shortly to discuss our proposals for the severe disability premium.

Patients (Waiting Lists)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish a list of district health authorities in rank order according to the number of patients waiting for urgent treatment;

(2) if he will categorise district health authorities according to whether the number of urgent cases waiting for treatment is (a) zero, (b) one to nine, (c) 10 to 99, (d) 100 to 999, (e) 1,000 to 1,999 and (f) 2,000 or over; and if he will explain the reasons for the variations in the numbers on the waiting lists.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is given in the table. There are many possible reasons for the variations between districts in the numbers of urgent cases on the waiting list including the size and age structure of the population and differing local clinical judgments on what constitutes an urgent case.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department issues guidance on the criteria for deciding whether patients waiting for hospital treatment are to be treated as urgent or non-urgent cases.

Mr. Newton: No. Whether a patient waiting for hospital treatment is to be treated as an urgent or non-urgent case is a matter for clinical judgment.

Lithotripsy

Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the waiting list for treatment on the lithotripter at (a) St. Thomas's hospital and (b) among National Health Service patients using the machine at the Devonshire hospital.

Mr. Newton: About 1,000 patients are on the waiting list for treatment on the St. Thomas's hospital lithotripter. I regret that no information is available centrally about National Health Service patients awaiting treatment on the machine operated by the Devonshire hospital.

Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether it has yet been possible from experience of the lithotripter machine at St. Thomas's to assess the number of machines estimated for the total needs of the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Currie: There are many factors involved in assessing the number of lithotripters needed for the United Kingdom. These include whether the particular type of machine chosen can be used only for the destruction of kidney stones or whether it can be used for other purposes, whether the existence of the lithotripter will affect the balance between acute and conservative treatment for patients with kidney stones and whether the distance between the patient's home and the lithotripter centre affects length of stay and thus the balance between revenue and capital costs.

Experience at St. Thomas's hospital and information about new machines coming on to the market both indicate that a larger number of machines will be required than was at first suggested. It is for this reason that my right hon. Friend, the Member for Brentford and Isleworth (Mr. Hayhoe), announced in August that he had concluded that lithotripsy would best be developed as a regional service.

Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will issue guidelines as to the use of lithotripters under co-operative arrangements between health authorities.

Mrs. Currie: We have no plans at present to issue guidelines on co-operative arrangements for the use of lithotripters by health authorities. These arrangements are for the authorities to set up in the light of their local needs. Officials are, however, keeping a close eye on the development of the machines and possible extensions of their use and are willing to provide information and assistance to authorities who are deciding how they might provide a service.

Health Authorities (Staff)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many non-medical staff are employed by each regional health authority and each health district.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Conductive Education

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the recent meeting of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie), with representatives of Rapid Action for Conductive Education on 13 November.

Mrs. Currie: I was pleased to be present at the meeting between my hon. Friend, the Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn), and representatives of Rapid Action for Conductive Education. This Department will continue to liaise with the Department of Education and Science on this issue.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give for each tendering exercise completed following health circular HC(P3)IP the health authority, the hospital, the successful tenderer (naming the company where relevant), the saving achieved, the date of the tender's approval, and the service concerned, laundry, catering or cleaning;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report details of the progress made by health authorities in putting their services out to tender in the manner of the answer to the hon. Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr) on 12 June 1985, Official Report, columns 489-93.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986]: Health authorities are continuing to make considerable progress in improving the cost effectiveness of their domestic cleaning, catering and laundry services. At 30 September 1986 over two-thirds of these services had been subject to competitive tendering resulting in savings of almost £73 million a year. This compares with savings of £29 million from the policy of competitive tendering only 12 months ago. Private contractors have been awarded a total of 173 contracts saving £24·6 million. In-house organisations have secured 773 tenders saving £48·1 million. The resources released are retained by health authorities and are now making a substantial contribution to the improvement of patient care services. Details are as follows.

Table A summarises the progress and savings made by each health authority. Table B lists the results of tendering exercises of which we are aware.

ENVIRONMENT

Sheltered Accommodation

59. Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review charges for sheltered accommodation.

Mr. Tracey: Local authorities, housing associations and other public and private sector bodies provide a wide range of sheltered housing schemes, with varying facilities and support services. It is for them to decide the level and nature of rents and charges that are appropriate in particular cases subject to any statutory protection such as that afforded to tenants under the Rent Acts or to occupants of flats and maisonettes under the Landlord and Tenant Act 1985.

Housing Expenditure

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a breakdown of each local authority's housing gross capital expenditure on public sector provision and on support to the private sector by programme for each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Tracey: I am today placing a set of tables in the Library containing a breakdown, by programme, of each English local authority's housing capital expenditure as reported in their housing investment programme returns.

Angling

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the number of people who partake in the sport of angling.

Mr. Tracey: The latest figures available in the "General Household Survey 1983" estimate that 3·9 per cent. of the population in England and Wales—1·5 million people—over the age of 16 participate regularly in the sport. From these and other figures from the "General Household Survey" on participation in sports, the Sports Council concludes that angling is the third most popular outdoor sporting activity after walking/rambling and swimming.

Local Authorities (Political Propaganda)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce further legislation to make it illegal for local councils to issue political propaganda; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Boyson: The Government have made clear their intention to introduce legislation later this Session to restore the effects of amendments made in another place to the publicity provisions of the Local Government Act 1986.

Transport (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Cabom asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why the same per capita level has not been applied to every passenger transport authority for calculating the grant-related expenditure assessment; and why the grant-related expenditure assessment for south Yorkshire is the lowest measured on a per capita basis.

Mr. Chope: The grant-related expenditure assessments for passenger transport authorities are not made on a simple per capita basis. Factors relating to car ownership and density of settlement are regarded as being more appropriate in assessing the need for bus revenue support and concessionary fares. South Yorkshire's grant-related expenditure is the lowest measured on a per capita basis because it is the least densely populated of the passenger transport authority areas.

Mortgages

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many formerly owner-occupied properties were taken into possession by (a) building societies, (b) local authorities and (c) other mortgages in the 12 months ended June 1986; and how these figures compare in actual and percentage terms with those for each 12 month period for the 12 months ended June 1979 to the 12 months ended June 1985.

Mr. Tracey: The available information is as follows:

Properties taken into possession by building societies: United Kingdom

Year ending	Number	Per cent. of outstanding mortgage loans at end of period
December 1979[1]	2,530	0·048
December 1980[1]	3,020	0·056

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households with mortgages from (a) building societies, (b) local authorities and (c) other sources, were known to be more than six months in arrears at end of June 1986; and how these figures compare in actual and percentage terms with the figures for June 1979 and each June between then and 1985.

Mr. Tracey: The available information is as follows:

Imported Building Materials

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by value the major 25 imported building materials in 1985, stating the import as a percentage of the United Kingdom market and show how this compares by value and import penetration with the position five years ago.

Mr. John Patten: I will answer this question shortly.

County Expenditure

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish figures showing the cost per capita for each shire county of each of the following services: education, social services, county surveyors' departments and any other service consuming 10 per cent. or more of county council funds showing also total county council costs per capita in each case according to the numbers of population in the county at the time and the overall average in each case.

Mr. Chope: The net current expenditure per capita by service for each shire county in 1985-86 is as follows. Separate information on the cost of surveyors' departments is not available.

Shire counties' net current expenditure per head by service 1985-86 (£)

Forth and Clyde Canal

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the cost of maintaining the remaindered Forth and Clyde canal in each of the past five years; and what have been the receipts during the corresponding period.

Mr. John Patten: Responsibility for the maintenance of the Forth and Clyde canal is a matter of day-to-day management by the British Waterways Board. The figures are as follows:

	Total Direct Expenditure	Income
1981	200	100
1982	283	140
1983	365	119

Council House Sales

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council tenants in Great Britain have bought their homes under the right-to-buy provisions of the Housing Act 1980 and subsequent legislation in financial year 1980-81 and each subsequent year for which figures are available; and what are his estimates for such sales in future years.

Mr. Tracey: Following are the available figures of right-to-buy sales of dwellings by English local authorities:

	Number
1980-81	2,300
1981-82	105,200
1982-83	167,100
1983-84	106,300
1984-85	77,500
1985-86	[1]73,200
1986-87	[2]82,500
1987-88	[2]72,500

[2] Forecast.

For sales elsewhere in Great Britain, I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales.

Home Improvements

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to establish in Bradford one of the new centres to give advice about home improvements; what assessment has been made of the efficacy of agencies in Bradford already providing such advice; if he has consulted Bradford council on this matter; how the new centre will be funded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1986; c. 374]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs, and Construction gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Halifax (Mr. Galley) on 19 November at columns 244-45. The new schemes are to be established by the National Home Improvement Council (NHIC) and Care and Repair Ltd. It will be for them to establish the efficacy of existing agency schemes in consultation with the relevant local authority before setting up new projects. I understand that initial discussions have taken place between the NHIC and officers of Bradford city council, but no decisions have yet been taken.

Housing Staff College

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Environment if he has decided his policy towards the proposal by the Audit Commission in the report, "Managing the Crisis in Council Housing", for a housing staff college.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 17 November 1986, c. 46]: I agree with the Audit Commission that it is essential to improve the training of housing managers. A great deal is already being done by the local authorities, the Local Government Training Board, the National Federation of Housing Associations, the Institute of Housing and educational institutions.

We are providing studentships for two new post-graduate housing management courses at the LSE and Sheffield polytechnic and our intention is to extend this initiative to other regional centres.

I am not convinced that an entirely new body as the Audit Commission suggests, would be the most cost-effective solution. We are therefore discussing with the Institute of Housing and other bodies the best way in which the new grant powers in the Housing and Planning Act could be used in combination with existing resources to provide more effective training at all levels.

THE ARTS

Departmental Initiatives

Mr. Silvester asked the Minister for the Arts if he will list initiatives by his Department which have been of benefit specifically to the north-east, north-west and Yorkshire and Humberside regions since 1979.

Mr. Luce: My Department encourages and facilitates developments in the arts throughout the country. Recent initiatives in the regions referred to have included the following:

"Tate in the North" A new gallery to be housed in the Albert dock complex in Liverpool; being built 1985-88.

National Museum of Photography, Film and TV An outstation of the Science museum, recently opened in Bradford.

National Museums and Galleries on Merseyside Awarded national status and now funded from the central arts programme.

Greater Manchester Museum of Science and Industry Awarded national status and now funded from the central arts programme.

Henry Moore extension to Leeds City Musuem New gallery dedicated to Henry Moore's work.

Sculpture exhibition at the International Garden Festival, Liverpool, 1984 A major outdoor exhibition, forming a significant part of the festival.

Sculpture at the Gateshead Festival Gateshead is to put on a similar garden festival in 1988, and sculpture is already under way.

Phoenix Dance Company A major new company started in Leeds in 1982.

Yorkshire Dance Centre Adaptation of a disused factory in Leeds to incorporate six dance studios.

Dance City Newcastle A major teaching centre, in adapted industrial premises.

Cornerhouse, Manchester A new multi-media centre, with the emphasis on film and photographs.

In addition major arts companies such as Opera North, Northern Ballet and the Royal Exchange, Manchester, are funded in the regions concerned.

CIVIL SERVICE

Delegate Responsibility

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Minister for the Civil Service what steps have been taken to delegate responsibility within the Civil Service.

Mr. Luce: More delegation is one of the objectives of our reforms of personnel and financial management. The central departments have delegated a wide range of authorities to spending departments, while maintaining where necessary common standards and rules across the Civil Service. Departments in turn delegate many authorities to line managers. But we are doing more to give individual managers clear authorities and responsibilities for the people and resources that they manage.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Balance of Payments

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide his estimate of the balance of payments surplus or deficit for each quarter in (i) the current financial year and (ii) next financial year.

Mr. MacGregor: Figures published by the Department of Trade and Industry today show that the current account was in surplus by £379 million in the second quarter of 1986, and in deficit by an estimated £634 million in the third quarter. The current account was estimated to have returned to a surplus of £65 million in October. The Industry Act forecast published with the autumn statement projected the current account to be in broad balance for 1986 as a whole and to be in deficit by £1½ billion in 1987. In line with normal practice the quarterly path was not given but no further deterioration is expected in the current account in 1987 compared with the second half of 1986.

Cigarette Duty

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has concerning the average duty and excise which has been paid upon (a) United Kingdom produced cigarettes and (b) imported cigarettes in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Brooke: The excise duty on cigarettes consists of two elements: a fixed charge per 1,000 cigarettes and an ad valorem charge calculated as a proportion of the retail price. The following table shows excise duty as a proportion of the weighted average December price of both United Kingdom produced and imported cigarettes. Duty is calculated at the rates applicable in December of each year.

Excise duty as a percentage of price

	Imported	United Kingdom produced
1981-82	59·1	60·8
1982-83	59·8	60·6

	Imported	United Kingdom produced
1983-84	61·3	60·0
1984-85	63·6	61·0
1985-86	67·4	61·4

Mortgage Tax Relief

Mr. Cartwright asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many people claim mortgage tax relief; how many of these people also claim the married man's tax allowance; how many of those people who do not claim the married man's tax allowance claim mortgage tax relief in respect of the same property as another person who claims mortgage tax relief; and how many of those people who do claim the married man's tax allowance claim mortgage tax relief in respect of the same property as another person who claims mortgage tax relief;

(2) on how many dwellings mortgage tax relief is claimed; on how many of these dwellings two or more unmarried people claim mortgage tax relief; and on how many such dwellings mortgage tax relief is claimed on more than £30,000;

(3) what is the estimated saving to the Exchequer of limiting mortgage tax relief to individual residences rather than to individual taxpayers as suggested in Cmnd. 9756.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Independent Taxation

Mr. Meacher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will tabulate the number of winners and losers under the Green Paper on independent taxation; and how many will win or lose by less than (a) £1 per week, (b) £1-2, (c) £2-3, (d) £3-4, (e) £4-5, (f) £5-7, (g) £7-10, and (h) more than £10 per week.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to annex 4 of the Green Paper "The Reform of Personal Taxation", in particular tables 1-5 and 10-12. These provide information about the effects of introducing transferable allowances on two alternative assumptions.

Counterfeit Goods

Mr. Oakes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the value of goods in each of the last five years seized by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise as being counterfeit.

Mr. Lawson [pursuant to the reply, 24 November 1986]: The value of goods seized by Her Majesty's Custom and Excise under section 17 of the Trade Descriptions Act 1968 as being counterfeit in each of the last five years was as follows:

1981	Nil
1982	30,549
1983	6,000
1985	Nil

Customs have also seized considerable quantities of goods under section 16 of the Trade Descriptions Act, which prohibits the importation of goods bearing a false indication of the country of manufacture. Some of these goods have also been counterfeit, but the records available do not indicate which.

Direct Cosmetics Ltd

Mr. Latham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the letters sent to Mr. W. F. Doody of Direct Cosmetics Ltd of Oakham dated 28 April and 20 May by Mr. G. R. Burgess of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise advising Mr. Doody to take Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to court were sent with his authority; and on how many other occasions in 1986 officials of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise have written to taxpayers advising them to undertake litigation against Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986]: The advice was given to draw attention to Mr. Doody's right to an impartial review and was intended to be helpful. No authority to advise in this way was required. I regret that information on the number of occasions similar advice has been given is not available.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate has been made of the revenue consequences of applying value added tax to those areas which are currently zero-rated, but which are required by the European Community Commission to be subjected to value added tax; and what account has been taken of these estimates in preparing the Government's spending and borrowing plans.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) on 7 November at column 627.

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the Government's submissions to the European Court of Justice in respect of the application made by the European Community Commission to the court for a declaration concerning United Kingdom value added tax zero-rating; and if he will also publish any correspondence with the Commission on the same subject.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Heddle) on 6 November at column 516.

Media Advertising

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the estimated spending of all Government Departments and agencies on television, radio and newspaper advertising, respectively, and other promotional literature in the current year; and what was the total in 1979-80 and each intervening year.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1986, c. 363]: Expenditure by the Central Office of Information on behalf of all Government Departments since 1979-80 is listed in the table below.

£'000s

	Television Advertising	Radio Advertising	Press Advertising	Other Promotional Material
1979-80	8,143	299	13,187	2,141
1980-81	7,531	769	13,691	4,362
1981-82	8,676	329	10,718	4,826
1982-83	6,082	449	12,952	4,652
1983-84	10,173	299	12,270	8,679
1984-85	6,433	436	13,220	10,997
1985-86	7,547	907	13,820	8,367

Figures for current financial year are not available in the requested format.

PRIME MINISTER

Westland plc

38. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister why no disciplinary action has been taken against any member of her staff over their conduct in the disclosure of the Solicitor-General's letter to the then Secretary of State for Defence.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 17 November, at columns 49-50.

State Security

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister what is the estimated cost to public funds of Her Majesty's Government's case against Peter Wright in Australia which cannot be recovered regardless of the outcome of the judgment.

The Prime Minister: It is not possible at this stage to estimate the cost to public funds of Her Majesty's Government's case against Peter Wright in Australia which could not be recovered regardless of the outcome of the judgment.

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Prime Minister if she will refer the matter of conversations between the Attorney-General, the right hon. and learned Member for Wimbledon (Sir M. Havers) and Mr. Chapman Pincher on 1 January 1983 on security issues to the Security Commission; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. I have no reason to believe that the conversations referred to raise any matters of concern to the Security Commission.

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Prime Minister (1) if she will issue notes of guidance to Ministers drawing their attention to the inadvisability of discussing matters of security at social functions; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will issue notes of guidance to Ministers drawing their attention to the advisability of discussing security matters only on a need-to-know basis; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. Steps are already taken to draw Ministers' attention to these matters.

Mr. Winnick asked the Prime Minister what factors led to the decision to send Sir Robert Armstrong as Her Majesty's Government's principal witness in the Wright case in Australia; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Sir Robert Armstrong is my principal official adviser in relation to matters of security. He accordingly swore the affidavits which form a significant part of the evidence relevant to the case and has appeared as the Government's principal witness in the proceedings.

WALES

A44 (Aberystwyth-Llangurig)

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to improve the A44 trunk road between Aberystwyth and Llangurig during the next three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Improvements are planned at Capel Bangor and Penllwyn crossroads. Their timing will depend on the completion of statutory procedures and the availability of financial resources.

All Wales Committee on Drug Misuse

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he is in a position to announce the membership of the All Wales Committee on Drug Misuse, its aims and the date of its first meeting.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I have today announced the names of the 21 members of the All Wales Committee on Drug Misuse. The names and details of each member are contained in a press notice which I have placed in the Library.

The committee will be concerned with the development of prevention, treatment and rehabilitation services in response to the growing menace of drug misuse. The aims of the committee will be to keep under review the extent and nature of drug and solvent misuse in Wales; to help to disseminate good practice throughout Wales by advising statutory and voluntary local providers of service; and to suggest appropriate all-Wales responses to the problems identified. The membership, which is drawn from all over Wales, has a broad base of interests and includes a wide range of expertise and experience. I will inaugurate the committee on 4 December, when it will hold its first meeting.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Ahmadiyya Muslim Association

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in view of the problems faced by the supreme head of the Ahmadiyya Muslim Association on his arrival at Sheerness on 4 November, what action and discussion he has taken to ensure that such an incident does not take place again; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Mr. Hazrat Mirza Tahir Ahmad, the supreme head of the Ahmadiyya Muslim Association, arrived with a party of 10 other persons, all of whom were subject to immigration control. They were travelling in two cars, which arrived at the control kiosk towards the front of the queue of the 70 cars disembarking from the ferry. Only one immigration officer was immediately available to clear the car passengers. The passengers in the other cars were not subject to full immigration control and could be cleared more quickly. The chief immigration officer judged that the overall clearance rate of all vehicles would be more quickly achieved by requesting the party to wait until the other cars had been examined. The officer explained that his decision was based solely on grounds of operational efficiency and apologised for the delay. No discourtesy was intended to the supreme head of the Ahmadiyya Muslim Association and his party, and indeed the chief immigration officer was not aware of the very important position which Mr. Ahmad held, but I regret the delay and inconvenience caused. Suitable advice has been given to the staff at Sheerness to prevent a recurrence.

Holloway Prison

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of acknowledged mentally disturbed inmates of Holloway prison who have been punished at disciplinary hearings since the beginning of the current year; how this figure compares with the two previous years; if he has any proposals to stop this practice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The term "mentally disturbed" is not a medical term. Once a decision to charge any inmate has been taken, it is for medical officers to assess the inmate and bring to the governor's attention cases where the inmate is unfit for adjudication and punishment. Inmates who are mentally disordered are marked unfit for adjudication. Board of visitors adjudicating panels are provided with full medical reports, and it is always open to them to disagree with the assessment of fitness, and to defer or dismiss the charges. My right hon. Friend has no plans to change the current practice. Information on disciplinary hearings at Holloway prison is not available in the form requested. However, the following details are available for women in Holloway's psychiatric wing (C1 unit) and the main hospital (B4 unit).

	Number placed on report	Assessed as unfit by MO	Found Guilty	Found not Guilty	Other

Animal Welfare

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions were brought for cruelty to animals in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Information on proceedings for offences of cruelty to animals is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables, Volume 1" [table S1·1(A) of the 1985 issue under offence classification 108].

Crime Statistics

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many crimes in which a firearm was used there were in the United Kingdom in 1985 and 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The available information for England and Wales relates to notifiable offences recorded by the police in which firearms were reported to have been used and is published in table 3·1 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1985". The latest available figures for Scotland are for 1983 and were published in Scottish Home and Health Department "Statistical Bulletin", issue 4/1985.

Departmental Initiatives

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list initiatives by his Department which have been of benefit specifically to the north-east, north-west and Yorkshire and Humberside regions since 1979.

Mr. Hurd: Initiatives by my Department which have benefited these regions since 1979 include the crime prevention and community programme. Since this began in October 1985 some 61 community programme projects have been established, offering 2,904 places in the MSC north-west region, 28 projects offering 756 places in the MSC Yorkshire and Humberside region and 43 projects offering 1,419 places in the MSC northern region (comprising Northumbria, Tyne and Wear and Co. Durham). Five local crime prevention demonstration projects were also announced in October 1985; one of these is in Bolton and another in North Tyneside. These projects are designed to show how crime and the fear of crime can be reduced by co-ordinated action by local agencies and concentrate on particular local crime projects.

Following the announcement in 1985 that dedicated drugs wings would be created in all regional crime squad areas, drugs wings have been set up in three areas covering the north of England, providing seven wings, all of which are now operational. These wings are intended to increase the effectiveness of police operations against drug offences.

A substantial amount of building has also been undertaken in these regions since 1979. Capital allocations for police buildings, magistrates' courthouses and probation offices have been made to authorities in the areas named to enable them to provide in recent years some 40 major schemes which are now completed, under construction or in planning; a further 36 major schemes in these areas have been accepted for eventual inclusion in the capital allocation programmes. An extension to a protected underground control centre in Preston was completed in 1982 and a building with training facilities for UKWMO in Carlisle was completed in 1983.

Since 1979 my Department has completed three new prison establishments in these areas—Frankland, Thorn Cross youth custody centre and Lindholme—and two further establishments—Full Sutton and Garth—are still under construction. In addition, refurbishment and redevelopment work has been completed or is in progress at 13 existing prison establishments.

In respect of the Fire Service, for which I have a general statutory responsibility, during 1979 to 1985 major building projects were undertaken in these areas which included four brigade HQs, four control centres, seven fire stations and two training centres.

Arrangements have also been made for increased posts in some areas which fall within my Department's responsibilities. Since May 1979 the following increases have been approved in the police establishments of forces in these areas:

	Number of additional police posts
North East
Cleveland	63
Durham	8
Humberside	33
Northumbria	53
North Yorkshire	40
South Yorkshire	129
West Yorkshire	50
North West
Cumbria	42
Greater Manchester	208
Lancashire	40
Merseyside	228
Cheshire	40

In order to make special provision for services to persons of Commonwealth origin my Department has substantially increased since 1979 the amount paid to local authorities for posts funded under section 11 of the Local Government Act in these areas. The Home Office has also provided 80 per cent. specific grant towards the cost of increases in the manpower of area probation services in the North of England.

In addition, the Home Office dispersed over 300 posts to Merseyside between 1981 and 1983.

Child Abuse

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has concerning the number of prosecutions for child abuse which were brought in the last year for which figures are available; and how many of the defendants in these cases were (a) the natural father of the child, (b) the natural mother of the child, (c) the stepfather of the child and (d) the stepmother of the child.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information for 1985 is brought together in the following table. For other types of offences of violence and sexual offences it is not possible from the records of the results of court proceedings to distinguish the age of the victim. Similarly, the data collected centrally do not contain details about the relationship between offender and victim, except in cases of homicide.

The information provided on those offences marked with an asterisk is published annually in "Criminal statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary tables, Volume 1" [table S1.1(A) in the issue for 1985].

Defendants proceeded against at all courts for certain violence against the person or sexual offences where the victim is known to be aged 16 or under

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what information he has concerning the number of suspected child abuse cases which have been reported in each region in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and how many of these reported cases involved children who were either illegitimate or members of single-parent families;

(2) what information he has concerning the numbers and percentages of all child abuse cases in the latest year for which figures are available in which the child concerned had been born illegitimate.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not collected centrally. Estimates of the numbers of children under 16 who were victims of certain violent and sexual offences recorded by the police in 1984 have been published in table 2 of Home Office "Statistical Bulletin" issue 29/86.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Domestic Violence

36. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he will make a statement on the new guidelines issued to the police on domestic violence.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: The revised guidelines have been made public. I have already arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library and copies are being made available to parties on request.

Mr. Alan J. Pocock

Mr. Kennedy asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he is yet in a position to make a statement on the case of Mr. Alan J. Pocock.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: The case is being referred to the High Court by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland in terms of section 263 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1975.

EMPLOYMENT

Enterprise Allowance

Mr. Colvin asked the Paymaster General if he will make the enterprise allowance available to those working in agriculture.

Mr. Trippier: The enterprise allowance is available to all unemployed people who can fulfil the eligibility conditions of the enterprise allowance scheme. Currently 4 per cent. of scheme participants are engaged in businesses in agriculture and horticulture.

Small Businesses

Mr. Ashdown asked the Paymaster General if he will give the latest estimate of the total size of the small business sector, including that represented by the self-employed; and if he will give the latest estimate of those employed within this sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: While accurate information is not available, small firms probably account for around 96 per cent. of the 1·4 million firms registered for VAT in the United Kingdom.

In June 1986 and estimated 2·7 million people in the United Kingdom were in self-employment, some of whom will have been in firms registered for VAT. In all, small firms probably provide employment for over one quarter of the employed labour force.

Self-employed Persons

Mr. Ashdown asked the Paymaster General if he will give the latest figures available for the total number of self-employed; and if he will indicate what trades and professions are represented in that total.

Mr. Lee: The latest provisional estimate of the number of self-employed persons in Great Britain, as shown in the regular quarterly self-employment series, is 2,665,000 as at June 1986. This series is not classified by occupation.

The labour force survey provides information on a different basis but allows an analysis by occupation. Estimates from the 1985 labour force survey are given in the table.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Frank Field asked the Paymaster General if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing quarterly levels and changes in the United Kingdom employed labour force since 1979, together with the estimated average hours worked by each category of workers and the full-time equivalent level of the employed labour force for each quarter, identifying separately (a) employees in employment, (b) the armed forces and (c) the self-employed and, where possible, giving a breakdown of these categories by hours and sex.

Mr. Lee: The available estimates of the employed labour force are given in table 1.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Paymaster General if he will list the 50 constituencies in which unemployment shows the largest fall over the past 12 months.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the 50 parliamentary constituencies in Great Britain at 9 October 1986, where in percentage terms unemployment had the greatest fall in the previous 12 months.

Note: Comparisons of unemployment between October 1985 and October 1986 are affected by the change in the timing of the compilation of unemployment statistics in March 1986.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Paymaster General if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing information available to him on the size of the employed labour force or the nearest alternative statistic in 1979 in each country in the European Community and in each subsequent year up to 1985 including estimates or projections where official data are not available, and showing (a) the source and coverage of all figures and (b) the time frame of each figure.

Mr. Lee: The employment information requested is given in the attached table.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Wigley asked the Paymaster General whether he has received any representations from any disablement organisation in relation to the recent European Community recommendation on the employment of disabled people; whether these representations express satisfaction or otherwise with the contents of the recommendations; and whether Her Majesty's Government supported or opposed the changes which took place in the final recommendation from the provisions of the earliest draft recommendation.

Mr. Lee: My Department received comments on the draft recommendation from the national advisory council on employment of disabled people and from the Spastics Society. Both organisations broadly supported the recommendation but expressed some reservations on points of detail. Ministers and officials took an active part in negotiations on the recommendation, and I believe the final text provides a clear but flexible framework for the continued development of measures to help the employment of disabled people.

Dock Workers

Mr. Lawler asked the Paymaster General how many new registered dock workers have entered the national dock labour scheme in each of the last three years; and how many he estimates to be needed in the next three years.

Mr. Lee: The figures are:

	Number
1984	74
1985	37

[1] to date.

Of these new entrants, the majority replaced men who had left the industry through natural wastage. While it is not possible to predict requirements over the next few years, they are unlikley to be significantly different in scale.

Benefits

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Paymaster General whether he will take steps to ensure that the questionnaire designed to discourage those who are not available for work from claiming benefits does not discourage claimants from taking up voluntary work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The introduction of the new procedures has made no change at all to the long-standing requirements for people who undertake voluntary work whilst claiming unemployment benefit to be available for work.

The established legal rules have always provided that voluntary work in itself does not prevent payment of benefit providing a claimant:

(1) can be readily contacted about a job opportunity;

(2) can on each day of their claim obtain release from the voluntary work to attend a job interview, or an interview in connection with employment prospects given at least 24 hours notice;

(3) can on any day of the claim relinquish the voluntary work to take up a suitable job given 24 hours notice;

(4) in respect of voluntary work either clearly:

(a) does not receive payment, or

(b) satisfies the "engaged in employment" rules (if claiming unemployment benefit).

In addition to the new availability questionnaire, all new claimants are issued with leaflets [UBL18 and NI 12] which draw their attention to the separate rules affecting voluntary work. A further and fuller leaflet [NI 240] is also issued on request.

Tooting

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Paymaster General (1) what is the number of (a) male and (b) female disabled people who have been interviewed by his officials in the Tooting constituency as part of the availability for work scheme;

(2) what is the number of people over the age of 50 years who have been interviewed by his officials in the Tooting constituency as part of the availability for work test;

(3) what has been the number of people interviewed by his officials in the Tooting constituency as part of the project to see which people are available for work;

(4) what has been the number of people living in the Tooting constituency who have been refused benefit after being interviewed by his officials under his availability for work test.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Tooting A and B unemployment benefit offices took part in the experimental testing of the availability for work of new claimants and also those existing claimants over the age of 50 years who attend quarterly. The Tooting A office was a control for the experiment carried out in Tooting B office.

The information collected in the experiment is not available in the form requested. In the new claims experiment a total of 2,139 people completed questionnaires. Only in those cases where doubts arose about availability for work were interviews carried out but we do not keep a separate total of the number of interviews.

Similarly, we did not collect separate information about the numbers of disabled people involved.

The number of people who were subsequently disallowed benefit by the independent adjudication authorities on availability grounds was 44.

The experiment with those over the age of 50 years who attend quarterly is not yet complete but 338 questionnaires have been issued. The claim of one claimant in receipt of benefit has been disallowed and the crediting of a further 40 claimants in receipt of national insurance credits only, have been disallowed.

Restart Scheme

Mr. Raynsford asked the Paymaster General how many long-term unemployed people there were in the Fulham constituency before the introduction of the restart scheme; how many there are currently; and how many have in the meantime been interviewed as part of the restart scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: On 10 April 1986, the last date before the restart scheme was introduced nationally for which an analysis of unemployment by duration is available, the number of claimants in the Fulham constituency who had been unemployed for over one year was 2,176. The comparable figure on 9 October 1986 was 2,193. We do not have figures for the number of people who have been interviewed and offered help and advice as part of the restart scheme in the Fulham constituency, but the Hammersmith restart team which covers the boroughs of Hammersmith, Fulham and Kensington and Chelsea has interviewed 4,764 people up to 13 November 1986.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers

Sir Peter Mills asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further measures he has taken to improve the supply of mathematics, physics and craft and design and technology teachers since the publication of the recent consultative document.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Since the publication of the consultative document, I have asked the National Advisory Body to allocate expenditure—amounting to £2·1 million in the first year 1987-88 — for the development of courses by local authority institutions of higher education to increase the supply of teachers of the shortage subjects, namely mathematics, physics and craft, design and technology. The voluntary colleges have been allocated £250,000 in 1987-88 to enable them to participate in this initiative. The UGC, at my request, has set aside £1 million a year from 1987-88 onwards for similar initiatives in the universities. The Open University will receive up to £1·5 million in grant over the next three financial years for new work in support of shortage subject teachers, including the development of an in-service training package for physics.

The new in-service training grant power provided by the Education Act that reached the statute book earlier this month will permit local authorities to claim 70 per cent. central Government grant for in-service training schemes in national priority areas. Expenditure totalling £16·5 million on maths, science and CDT teachers will be eligible for such grants in 1987-88.

The Government and the local authorities are setting up a national unit to publicise career opportunities in teaching. Mr. J. Dodds, the assistant director of education of Kirklees, has been appointed to head this unit on secondment from his authority.

My right hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury is today announcing that in future expenditure on industrial secondments to local education authorities, and educational institutions maintained by them, will be deductible for tax purposes. This new tax relief will complement the existing relief, introduced in 1983, for secondments to charities including universities, many other educational institutions, and, prospectively, the new city technology colleges. The new tax relief will encourage firms to offer help and British Petroleum, for example, has already decided to second employees to work in two local authorities to help relieve teacher shortages. British Petroleum has also joined the Government in sponsoring the Open University's physics pack for teachers.

With the support of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Industry, I have commissioned BBC Schools Television to produce a set of programmes to help maths and science teachers develop new and more effective ways of teaching their subjects and to respond positively to the challenge of the GCSE.

I am greatly encouraged by the number of proposals for action that the Department has received from many quarters. I shall be giving careful thought to all these suggestions. My aim is to develop policies that will tap new sources of supply, including women with family responsibilities who need part-time training opportunities and students changing from non-shortage subjects.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing (a) current non-clinical academic university salaries, (b) salaries for school teachers as foreshadowed in his statement of 30 October and (c) the salaries in the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service agreement of 15 November, showing starting salaries and salaries at age 27 years.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is set out in the following table:

	(a) Non-clinical academic university salaries	(b) School teacher salaries proposed in the Secretary of State's 30 October statement	(c) School teacher salaries proposed in 15 November ACAS agreement
	1 April 1985	1 October 1987	1 September 1987
Starting Salary	8,020	8,500	7,893
Salary at 27 years	9,495	11,400	10,800

1. The starting salary for university non-clinical academics is the minimum of the assistant lecturer/lecturer grade. The minimum salary at age 27 is three incremental points further up that scale.
2. Under the Government's proposals a good honours graduate would enter teaching at a salary of £8,500. In 1985 74 per cent. of new entrant teachers entered at the equivalent level or better. By age 27 such an entrant would rise another four incremental points on the main scale, to £11,400.
3. Under the proposals outlined in the 15 November ACAS agreement, (signed by NUT, AMA, SHA, and PAT on 21 November) new entrants to the teaching profession would all start at £7,893. There are no automatic increments for higher academic qualifications. By age 27 salary would rise another four incremental points on the main scale, to £10,800.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

GCSE

Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure that information about the GCSE is available to parents whose first language is not English.

Mrs. Rumbold: Leaflets for parents explaining the new GCSE are being issued this week by my Department in the following translations: Bengali, Chinese, Greek, Gujerati, Hindi, Punjabi, Turkish and Urdu. This is part of the continuing process of explaining the new examination to parents and employers.

Research

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his policy towards the funding of scientific research in each of the Welsh universities.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has endorsed the UGC's policy of selectivity in research funding and the committee's plans for developing that policy in conjunction with the research councils, as described in the Official Report for 6 November at columns 494-496. The funding of scientific research in the constituent institutions of the University of Wales will depend upon decisions made by the University Grants Committee and by the institutions themselves, and their success in attracting funds from the research councils, industry and other sources.

Student Support

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total amount spent on student support for each year since 1976 both in cash terms and in real terms.

Mr. Dunn: Total expenditure on student maintenance excluding fees was as follows:

England and Wales

Academic years	Cash terms £ million	Real terms £ million
1976-77	227·5	495·6
1977-78	280·6	542·7
1978-79	327·9	570·3
1979-80	395·8	577·9
1980-81	467·4	590·1
1981-82	519·5	604·1
1982-83	557·3	609·1
1983-84	594·9	622·3
1984-85	579·0	579·0

Education Costs

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will initiate a review of the implications of transferring all the costs of the state sector of education to the national Exchequer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave to him on 5 November at column 435.

Special Needs Project

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has received the report by the Institute of Education on the Education Act 1981. "Policy and Provisions for Special Needs Project"; what action he proposes to take; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The report was received on 31 October. Its findings were presented at a national seminar held at the University of London Institute of Education on 10 November. My right hon. Friend now intends to study these, along with the findings from two complementary projects, with a view to considering whether amendments are needed, either to the legislation or to the current guidance issued to authorities.

ENVIRONMENT

Low-spending Councils

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the county councils currently regarded by his Department as low spenders.

Mr. Chope: In the Government's view every local authority has scope to obtain better value for money through increased efficiency. Therefore no local authority can be described as a low spender in the sense that it cannot make further economies.

Nuclear Installations

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on making available to independent researchers all records held by his Department of environmental monitoring around licensed nuclear installations, for all years that records exist; and if he will describe the arrangements under which such records may be used by independent researchers.

Mr. Waldegrave: The records which are held by this Department of environmental monitoring carried out near nuclear installations include information obtained by nuclear site operators. This information remains the property of the operators and requests to consult it should be addressed to them. Information gathered directly by this Department is obtained as a check on the accuracy and reliability of the operator's measurements. This material can be made available for inspection by independent researchers on written application to Her Majesty's Radiochemical Inspectorate.

Housing Expenditure

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of repairs and special grants to private owners were mandatory grants in each calendar year since 1979 in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) London.

Mr. Richard Tracey: Mandatory grants were introduced by provisions in the Housing Act 1980 and figures were first collected from English authorities for the June quarter of 1981; after the March quarter of 1986, numbers of mandatory repairs grants are to be reported annually. The available estimates are as follows. For Welsh figures, I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mandatory repairs grants as per cent. of all repair grants[1]

	England	London
April to December 1981	9	21
1982	6	18
1983	4	11
1984	5	8

1984	79	87
1985	86	89
1st half 1986	91	93

[1] Mandatory grants to owners are not separately reported.

Notes: Percentages are based on numbers including estimates for missing returns.

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish in the Official Report the number and amount of special grants paid to the owners of houses in multiple occupation in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) London;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report the number and amount of renovation grants paid by type of grant, to (a) owner-occupiers, (b) landlords and housing associations, (c) private sector tenants and (d) public sector tenants in : (i) England, (ii) Wales and (iii) London.

Mr. Tracey: Estimated figures for 1985 and first half 1986, with additional details for second quarter 1986, are given for England and London. For Welsh figures, I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Angling

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will seek to make further facilities available for the sport of angling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: The responsibility for considering the general need for further facilities lies with the Sports Council, with of course the angling bodies. Although most of the existing and potential amenities are owned by the British Waterways Board and local and water authorities. The Sports Council recognises angling's importance as a popular sport and provides financial and other support to aid its development.

Housing (Energy Efficiency)

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice on energy efficiency will be available from the new housing advice centres which his Department is to fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: Both the organisations which the Department is to fund, Care and Repair Ltd. and Neighbourhood Revitalisation Services (NRS), are aware of the importance of energy efficiency measures to the repair and improvement of the housing stock. NRS already works closely with Neighbourhood Energy Action and is shortly to employ an energy surveyor to promote energy efficiency at its pilot project in Hillsborough, Sheffield. NRS hopes that experience in Sheffield will provide a model for incorporating energy efficiency into future projects. Care and Repair projects also give clients advice on and help with improved insulation and other efficiency measures and expect to liaise with existing specialist agencies, such as those run by Neighbourhood Energy Action, in the areas where schemes are established.

Homeless Young Persons

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish statistics on the numbers of homeless young people; and what advice he has given to local authorities on the subject of housing provision for such young people.

Mr. Tracey: The statistics that we collect from local authorities on homelessness do not contain a breakdown by age or household composition.

Individual homeless young people may fall into one of the priority need categories (including the vulnerable) for whom authorities have a duty to secure accommodation. In our code of guidance we have asked authorities to treat as vulnerable young people at risk of sexual or financial exploitation, and, where resources permit, to do all they can to ensure that accommodation is secured by homeless people outside the priority need categories. Authorities also have a duty under section 22 of the Housing Act 1985 to give a reasonable preference to homeless people among others in the selection of their tenants, and we have urged authorities to allocate tenancies on the basis of housing need. It is, however, for individual authorities to decide on their own housing priorities within their areas.

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action his Department is taking to deal with the problem of homeless young people.

Mr. Tracey: Young people stand to benefit from a range of Government measures, including new housing association schemes for young people wishing to move to take up employment, our hostels initiative, the facilitating of subletting by council tenants and other more general measures to relieve homelessness. We are also helping to fund a leaflet by the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless Trust aimed at preventing homelessness among young people and advising them on accommodation prospects before they take the decision to leave home.

Chemical Compounds

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if Her Majesty's Government conduct research designed to discover the possible environmental effects of all new chemical compounds (i) known to be entering the environment and (ii) upon commencement of production with a view to their inclusion on either black or grey lists of the Oslo commission, Paris commission or the European Economic Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: New chemicals are subject to the provisions of the Notification of New Substances Regulations 1982. These implement European Community directive 79/831/EEC which requires manufacturers or importers to submit a package of information and technical data on new substances prior to placing them on the market in the European Community. The information submitted covers environmental effects and the onus is on the notifier to carry out the appropriate tests to get the information required to satisfy the competent authority (the Health and Safety Executive and my Department acting jointly). It is not necessary for the Government to commission research, therefore. The information submitted is assessed by my Department to establish the potential environmental hazards of the notified substance. If the assessment of a substance showed that it met the criteria laid down by the Oslo or Paris commissions or by the European Community, this could lead to a recommendation that the substance be included on the black or grey lists.

Play Board

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the East Midlands Play Association opposing his decision to integrate Play Board with the Sports Council; and what reply he has sent.

Mr. Tracey: None. However, I am aware that the proposals to merge Play Board's functions with those of the Sports Council have not been fully understood and, as a result, have caused some concerns. The proposals are not, as seems to be widely believed, designed to merge "play" into "sport"; they are aimed at achieving a strengthening of the campaign to raise the profile of play.

Over the past three years Play Board has succeeded in bringing to the fore the needs of children for proper play facilities and opportunities. I agree with the board that more remains to be done and a national focus for play remains important. I believe, however, that this role needs to be given added impetus through having an ability to grant-aid facilities and projects, for which additional funds from the private sector should be generated. It is for this purpose that I consider play should be brought within the structure and role of a major, established body—one with a track record for achieving results, for raising private sector funds, and value for money.

Consequently I have proposed to Play Board that its function and role should be merged with the Sports Council. The two bodies have agreed to enter into negotiations with us to identify the best way forward acceptable to both parties and to the Government. Those negotiations started on 25 November and I know that "play's" separate identity and needs are going to form an important part of the future discussions. Nevertheless, I am hopeful that the two organisations will reach agreement on future arrangements for the greater benefit of children's play.

Political Propaganda

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will now introduce legislation to repeal sections in the Local Government Act 1986, concerning political propaganda on the rates;

(2) if he will seek to redefine "prohibited material" in the Local Government Act 1986 to include partisan as well as party political propaganda on the rates.

Dr. Boyson: I refer to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on Tuesday 25 November 1986. My right hon. Friend will consider all the options for restoring the effects of the words deleted by their Lordships.

Private Lettings (Fair Rents)

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the total number of lettings by private landlords, excluding housing associations, currently in existence in Greater London, and as to what percentage of these involve fair rents set by the rent officer.

Mr. Tracey: From the annual "Labour Force Survey" it is estimated that there were some 400,000 households in Greater London renting from private landlords in the spring of 1984; these included job—or business-related lettings and other lettings to which the Rent Act does not apply. There were an estimated 130,000 regulated tenancies in London at the end of June 1984, for which a fair rent had been registered within the previous 24 months.

Camden (Housing)

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will use his powers under section 23 of the Housing Act 1980 in respect of the London borough of Camden; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I am most concerned over the council's inadequate performance in the handling of right-to-buy applications, which is formally monitored by the Department. The case for advising the Secretary of State to use his powers of intervention will be kept under review. I shall write to my hon. Friend.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Rolls-Royce plc

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations he proposes to have with employees of Rolls-Royce prior to privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: Consultation with the employees of Rolls-Royce is a matter for the company.

Calor Gas (Takeover)

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has recently received concerning the proposed takeover of Calor Gas.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend and I have received a number of representations from hon. Members and others about this proposed acquisition. They have been drawn to the attention of the Director General of Fair Trading, who is currently examining the proposal with a view to advising my right hon. Friend whether the proposal should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for investigation.

Takeover Bids

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his Department's policy towards the conditional disposal of assets proposed in takeover bids of British companies by overseas concerns.

Mr. Howard: The current policy on references of merger proposals to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission is that they are made primarily on competition grounds, but under the Fair Trading Act 1973 each qualifying merger proposal is considered individually on its own merits. Any proposals for the conditional disposal of assets would be included in this consideration, but there is no presumption that such disposals are intrinsically objectionable, whatever the nationality of the bidder.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hong Kong

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to provide for the principle of one-person one-vote in future internal elections in Hong Kong; if he has discussed this matter with the Chinese Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: There will be a review of the further development of representative government in Hong Kong in 1987. This review will consider all aspects of the subject, including the question whether direct elections to the Hong Kong Legislative Council should be introduced. Decisions on this must await the outcome of the review. My right hon. and learned Friend explained our position on the review to Chinese leaders when he visited China with Her Majesty the Queen.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place with the Chinese Government, or are planned, about the future of the walled city in Hong Kong.

Mr. Renton: There is a very wide range of issues affecting Hong Kong which we are or will be discussing with the Chinese Government. Such discussions are, however, confidential unless otherwise agreed.

Daya Bay Nuclear Reactor

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the proposed Daya Bay nuclear reactor; if he has raised this issue with the Chinese Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: One. During his recent visit to China my right hon. and learned Friend discussed the proposed nuclear power plant at Daya Bay with senior Chinese officials. They assured him that the Chinese Government are fully alive to concerns of Hong Kong people about safety aspects of the project. We shall remain in touch with the Chinese authorities, both on our own behalf and on behalf of Hong Kong.

Elgin Marbles

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations

Her Majesty's Government have received during the past 12 months concerning restitution of the Elgin Marbles to Greece.

Mr. Eggar: We have not received any official representations concerning the restitution of the Elgin Marbles to Greece since a reply was given to the request for their return through UNESCO in October 1985. We have received 12 separate representations from private groups and individuals on this subject within the past 12 months.

Indonesia (Political Prisoners)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received, in the context of the Foreign Ministers' meeting at Jakarta last month, concerning political prisoners in Indonesia; whether he took these questions up with the Indonesian authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Several hon. Members have written to me about the recent executions of nine people in Indonesia. In early October Her Majesty's ambassador in Jakarta expressed to the Indonesian authorities at a high level the collective concern of the Governments of the member states of the European Community about these executions. He also lodged a strong appeal for clemency for others currently under sentence of death. The Indonesian Government were fully aware of our views when my right hon. and learned Friend visited Jakarta for the EC-ASEAN Foreign Ministers meeting. He did not therefore raise the matter with them again on that occasion.

Iran

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place between Her Majesty's Government and the United States Administration on the co-ordination of their embargoes on lethal arms sales to Iran.

Mr. Renton: None. Our policy remains as described by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 18 November that:

(i) We should maintain our consistent refusal to supply any lethal equipment to either side;
(ii) Subject to that overriding consideration, we should attempt to fulfil existing contracts and obligations;
(iii) We should not, in future, approve orders for any defence equipment which, in our view, would significantly enhance the capability of either side to prolong or exacerbate the conflict;
(iv) In line with this policy, we should continue to scrutinise rigorously all applications for export licences for the supply of defence equipment to Iran and Iraq.

Cambodia

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to give assistance to forces which are resisting the Vietnamese occupation of Cambodia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to him on 20 November, at column 312. It is our policy to continue to give humanitarian assistance to the non-Communist resistance. We have pledged £200,000 for this purpose in 1986-87. We do not provide military assistance nor assistance in cash. Nor do we provide any assistance to the Khmer Rouge.

Electoral Register

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many overseas electors' declarations have been attested at British consulates under the terms of the Representation of the People Act 1985, with a view to inclusion in the Electoral Register coming into force on 16 February 1987.

Mr. Eggar: The provisional total for the number of declarations attested between 11 July when the regulations governing the Act came into force and 10 October, is 12,207.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

State Security

Mr. Winnick asked the Attorney-General what contacts he has had with the Australian authorities regarding the Wright case; if he will set out the dates of the relevant letters and telephone conservations; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Discussions on these matters between the Australian authorities and Her Majesty's Government are confidential.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Attorney-General what consideration he has given to proceeding against (a) Mr. Arthur Franks, formerly head of MI6, and (b) Lord Rothschild for breach of confidence in relation to information on matters of state security given to authors.

The Attorney-General: I am considering with the Director of Public Prosecutions the allegations made in respect of the two named individuals.

DEFENCE

European Community (Service Personnel)

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has for each European Economic Community country, as to the total number of (a) regular service personnel, (b) reservists and (c) national service personnel.

Mr. Freeman: Details for the United Kingdom are as follows:

	Number
Regular service personnel	[1]322,614
Reservists	[2]306,812
National service personnel	Nil

[1] At 30 September 1986.
[2] At 31 March 1986.

For detailed information on the armed forces of the other countries of the European Economic Community I would refer my hon. Friend to the International Institute for Strategic Studies publication "The Military Balance 1986-87", a copy of which is in the Library.

Edinburgh Festival

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the extent of the contribution of the British armed services, in the context of Edinburgh castle, to benefit the Edinburgh Festival and the public perception of the armed forces in Edinburgh and Scotland, through the Edinburgh military tattoo and in other ways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: For centuries the public has been familiar with the sight of the daily mounting of the Edinburgh Castle guard and other public ceremonial duties. More recently, the Armed Forces have organised the Edinburgh military tattoo, which involves over 350 military personnel in August each year at the time of the Edinburgh Festival. The military presence at Edinburgh castle is an integral part of the Edinburgh garrison. It includes a number of military units, and houses the operational headquarters of 52 Lowland Brigade, for which we foresee a continuing role in the future.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Newry-Dundalk Road

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals there are for the improvement of the Newry to Dundalk road; what proportion of the total cost will be borne by Northern Ireland; if he will make available a map delineating this proposed route of this road; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: This major cross-border route has been the subject of discussion between the relevant authorities in Northern Ireland and the Republic. There is agreement that the existing road should be maintained as the main link between Newry and Dundalk, and that there should be further discussions.

Traffic Densities

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the most up-to-date census figures for traffic density at (a) the boder on the Newry-Dundalk road and (b) on the Antrim-Ballymena road.

Mr. Needham: Traffic density, measured during 1986, was 8,000 and 15,000 vehicles per day respectively.

Violent Deaths and Injuries

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total number of deaths and injuries arising from violence in Northern Ireland in each of the two periods of 12 months ended 15 November 1985 and 15 November 1986.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 17 November 1986, c. 57-58]: Between 16 November 1984 and 15 November 1985 56 people died and 933 were injured as a result of the security situation in the Province. The corresponding figures for the succeeding 12 months are 64 and 1,429.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many plastic bullets were fired by the Royal Ulster Constabulary; and how many members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary were injured in street disturbances in each of the two periods of 12 months, ended 15 November 1985 and 15 November 1986.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 17 November 1986, c. 57-58]: The information sought is as follows:

	12 months ended 15 November 1985	12 months ended 15 November 1986
Plastic baton rounds fired by the RUC	918	1,463
RUC (including RUC reserve) injured	319	632

Departmental Publicity

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what will be the estimated spending by his Department on television, radio and newspaper advertising respectively, and other promotional literature in the current year; and what was the total in 1979-80 and each intervening year.

Dr. Mawhinney [pursuant to his reply, 19 November 1986, c. 257]: The total figures for the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments are as follows:

1979-80	1,341,237
1980-81	1,069,135
1981-82	1,593,435
1982-83	1,607,005
1983-84	2,912,239
1984-85	2,705,857
1985-86	3,721,919
1986-87	[1]3,428,850

SCOTLAND

Teachers' Dispute

14. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to meet representatives of the teaching unions to discuss the issues involved in the current teachers' dispute; and if he will make a statement.

21. Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations he has recently had with the Educational Institute of Scotland concerning a settlement to the teachers' dispute.

31. Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make a statement about the teachers' pay dispute.

33. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Scottish teachers' dispute.

Mr. John Mackay: I refer my hon. Friend, the right hon. Member and the hon. Members to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Hirst) earlier today.

Advanced Manufacturing Technology (Lanarkshire)

16. Dr. Bray asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what initiatives he is taking to promote advanced manufacturing technology in the engineering industry in Lanarkshire.

Mr. Lang: The Government have a number of schemes to promote awareness of advanced manufacturing technology throughout the United Kingdom, including assistance towards feasibility and implementation studies. In addition, there is available in the assisted areas a range of regional measures to help encourage companies to invest in advanced manufacturing technology.

Teachers (Pay and Conditions of Work)

17. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress being made on the question of teachers' salaries and conditions of work.

Mr. John Mackay: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Hirst) earlier today.

Glasgow Airport

18. Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the economic impact in Scotland of the proposed development of Glasgow airport.

Mr. Rifkind: The British Airports Authority considers the proposed expansion of facilities at the airport necessary in the context of the substantial increase expected in existing European traffic over the next 10 years. Such a development can only be of benefit to Strathclyde and to Scotland as a whole.

Glasgow (East End)

19. Mr. Martin asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to build a new geriatric facility which would provide for the needs of the elderly in the east end of Glasgow.

Mr. John MacKay: There have been proposals for some time to build a new hospital facility for the elderly at Belvidere hospital, Glasgow. These proposals are, however, being reviewed by the Greater Glasgow health board as part of the board's consideration of geriatric services for its area as a whole.

Council of Fisheries Ministers

20. Mr. Pollock asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he attended the Council of Fisheries Ministers on 5 November: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: My hon. Friend, the Member for Argyll and Bute (Mr. MacKay) attended this meeting.

Council House Sales

22. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he is satisfied with the progress being made with the sale of council houses in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: Yes. Since 1979 over 88,000 public sector tenants have bought their houses; binding contracts of sale have been concluded in a further 3,300 cases; and there are approximately another 6,600 applications at an earlier point in the pipeline. Local authorities are also increasingly appreciating the need to process sales quickly. The average time taken to complete transactions has fallen to approximately 7.5 months. Increased discount provisions for tenants of local authority flats which will come into effect on 7 January should further encourage sales.

AIDS

23. Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the incidence of acquired immune deficiency syndrome in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall) on 4 November at columns 397-8.

30. Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the numbers of (a) males and (b) females, who are carriers of the acquired immune deficiency syndrome virus in (i) Scotland, (ii) Strathclyde and (iii) Glasgow; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: It is not possible to estimate the total number of carriers of the AIDS virus in Scotland. However, by 30 September 1986, reports were received from Scottish laboratories of 619 males and 235 females who were found, on having their blood tested, to have antibodies to the virus. Of these, 140 males and 40 females were the subject of tests carried out by laboratories in Glasgow; but since patients are not identified in reports on these tests their place of residence is unknown.

Road Construction and Improvement

24. Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many miles of motorway or trunk road have been constructed or improved during the past seven years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Since May 1979 about £600 million has been invested in new construction and improvements of motorways and trunk roads in Scotland. During this period 77 major schemes, each costing over £1 million, have been opened to traffic. These have provided 22 miles of new motorway and 195 miles of new or improved trunk road. The reconstruction of the A9 from Perth to Easter Ross had been completed and substantial progress has been made on other routes, including the Perth to Aberdeen route (which has been largely upgraded to dual carriageway standard) and the A75 Gretna to Stranraer route. Altogether 24 bypasses have been opened, relieving communities of through traffic. A further 21 miles of motorway and major trunk road improvements, including three bypasses, are under construction. Over 100 major schemes, including 40 bypasses, with a total value of £580 million are at various stages of preparation. When completed they will provide a further 279 miles of new or improved road. These figures underline the Government's commitment to improving Scotland's network of main roads.

Steel Industry

25. Mr. James Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will next meet the chairman of the British Steel Corporation to discuss the Scottish steel industry.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend and I met the chairman of the British Steel Corporation on 4 November. There are no immediate plans for another meeting although, as indicated previously, we hope to continue to meet on a regular basis.

Health Boards (Financing)

27. Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chairmen of the health boards in Scotland to discuss their future financing.

Mr. John MacKay: My noble Friend the Minister of State met health board chairmen on 10 November when the funding of boards was one of the topics discussed. My noble Friend's next meeting with chairmen as a group will take place on 10 March 1987. He expects to meet many chairmen individually before then during his programme of visits to boards.

National Tree Week

28. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what initiatives his Department has taken to promote national tree week from 29 November to 7 December.

Mr. John Mackay: The work of the Tree Council, which is sponsoring national tree week, does not extend to Scotland. Amenity tree planting in Scotland is actively supported by the Countryside Commission for Scotland on a continuous basis.

Peterhead Prison

29. Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to visit Peterhead prison.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has no immediate plans to visit Peterhead prison. I visited the prison on 14 October 1986.

Autumn Statement

32. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the likely impact upon unemployment in Scotland of the Government's autumn statement.

Mr. Lang: The outlook for the United Kingdom economy as given in the autumn statement is for faster economic growth during the course of 1987 with inflation remaining at low levels. Scotland stands to benefit from faster United Kingdom and world growth because of the importance of the rest of the United Kingdom and overseas as markets for Scottish goods and services.

Private Health Care

34. Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has had any discussions on private health care with the area health board executives.

Mr. John MacKay: The Scottish Home and Health Department issued to general managers of health boards a consultative paper on the management of private practice in Health Service hospitals in July 1986. The paper introduced a handbook which revised and drew together in one document all previous guidance relating to control of private practice in National Health Service hospitals in Scotland. The comments received are presently being considered. I expect the handbook to be issued early next year.

Health boards are also to be consulted very shortly about new draft regulations relating to the registration of private hospitals and nursing homes.

Torness Power Station

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what further training exercises for emergencies at Torness nuclear power station are required by Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate before commissioning is due to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: One further full demonstration exercise at Torness power station is required by Her Majesty's Nuclear Installation's Inspectorate during commissioning. The South of Scotland Electricity Board will also carry out any other demonstrations of emergency arrangements deemed necessary by Her Majesty's Nuclear Installation's Inspectorate before commissioning is complete.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what training exercises for emergencies have been held at Torness nuclear power station in the presence of one or more inspectors of Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate; what was the date and the nature of each exercise; and what reports have been made by inspectors.

Mr. Lang: A team of inspectors from Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate observed a demonstration of the Torness nuclear power station emergency arrangments on 18 September 1986. Formal comments on the exercise were made by the inspectorate and these are being acted upon.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the simulators being used for training of management and staff at Torness nuclear power station (a) accurately reflect the behaviour of reactors, boilers and turbines of Torness power station and (b) are used to provide training for management and staff on fault condition specific to the period of commissioning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I am advised by the South of Scotland Electricity Board that Torness staff have received training on the AGR simulator at the CEGB nuclear power training centre at Oldbury. This simulator is generically characteristic of all AGRs and can demonstrate the fundamental principles of performance during fault conditions including those which may occur during commissioning.

Chernobyl Accident

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether at any time following the Chernobyl accident on 26 April 1986, any form of advice was given by any Government office or agency in Scotland to the Milk Marketing Board or to any other body involved in milk distribution, that any non-routine arrangements should be adopted for the pooling of milk supplies from different areas.

Mr. John MacKay: No.

North Sea Oil (Highlands and Islands)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will assess the impact on the economy of the Highlands and Islands of the rundown associated with the North sea oil and oil-related industry; if he will announce any Government initiatives in the light of such developments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Within the Highlands and Islands, employment wholly associated with North sea oil was 5,573 in December 1985 and 5,783 in June 1986. Since then 550 redundancies have been reported at McDermotts and the Howard Doris yard, employing around 700, has gone into receivership.

The Government are of course concerned about the effects of low oil prices, particularly on jobs, but it should be borne in mind that the oil industry still presents major opportunities for Scottish industry and will continue to do so for many years to come.

Forestry Grant Applications

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what new initiatives the Forestry Commission has implemented to achieve a reasonable balance between the development of afforestation and nature conservation when approving forestry grant applications (a) generally and (b) in the flow country of Sutherland and Caithness;

(2) if he will take steps to ensure that, in relation to the flow country of Sutherland and Caithness, the Forestry Commission undertakes full consultations with the Nature Conservancy Council on all forestry applications both within sites of special scientific interest and the wider countryside within those districts.

Mr. John MacKay: The Forestry Commission's consultation arrangements for forestry grant applications are kept under review to ensure that they continue to meet their long-standing objective to achieve a reasonable balance between forestry and other land use interests, including nature conservation. Since the passage of the Wildlife and Countryside (Amendment) Act 1985, which placed a new duty on the forestry commissioners regarding the balance between forestry and the environment, the commission has given added emphasis to the need to satisfy itself as far as possible that proposals contained in grant applications are sensibly drawn on silvicultural, land use, nature conservation and landscape grounds before the consultation process is started. This is done against the background of the commission's own knowledge, which, in the case of nature conservation, is being assisted through the setting up of local consultative panels to provide a forum for discussion of environmental issues affecting forestry in their areas, and by advice as appropriate from the Nature Conservancy Council. The commission is also in the course of reviewing the composition and procedures of its regional advisory committees.

As regards the flow country of Sutherland and Caithness, the commission has extended its normal arrangements for consulting the Nature Conservancy Council to include not only planting proposals in SSSIs but also those in areas identified by the council as possible candidates for future notification. These arrangements are being kept under review in the light of discussions at present taking place between the Forestry Commission, the Scottish Office and the Nature Conservancy Council.

School Clothing Grants

26. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to change the current provisions for school clothing grants to be made by education authorities in Scotland.

Mr. John Mackay: No.

TRANSPORT

Trading Vessels

Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest forecast of the proportion of the United Kingdom-owned merchant trading fleet registered in the United Kingdom mainland ports.

Mr. Michael Spicer: In August about 55 per cent. of the shipping directly owned by United Kingdom companies —as measured by total deadweight—was registered in the United Kingdom. The figures used include ships owned by United Kingdom subsidiaries of foreign companies and exclude ships beneficially but not directly owned by United Kingdom companies.

Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the tax reliefs, grants and preferential loans available to an investor in a coastal or short sea trading vessel in the United Kingdom; and what information he has as to comparable incentives in the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Investors in merchant vessels—coastal, short sea or other—in the United Kingdom are normally eligible for annual writing-down allowances of 25 per cent. of the capital cost on a reducing balance basis. The allowances can be carried over into future years and taken at will. United Kingdom owners investing in United Kingdom newbuilt ships are eligible for loans under the home shipbuilding credit scheme for 80 per cent. of the capital cost at a fixed rate of interest of 7·50 per cent. over 8½ years. Early repayment of such loans attracts a discount. The business expansion scheme covers companies engaged in shipping including ship chartering, subject to certain conditions. Under the scheme individual investors may get income tax relief for amounts up to £40,000 per year subscribed to new full risk equity.

In the Federal Republic of Germany investors in merchant ships receive grants of up to 12·50 per cent. of the cost of new vessels (20 per cent. of conversions) provided they operate under the national flag for a minimum of eight years. Interest-free loans are also available under certain circumstances. More generally, credit arrangements for domestic orders are available; they are understood to be equivalent to those permitted under OECD rules. Both the straight line and declining balance methods of depreciation are permitted. If the straight line method is chosen, a shipowner may claim in addition an accelerated depreciation allowance of up to 40 per cent. of the purchase price of the vessel during the year of delivery or the following four years.

Untraced Drivers

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ensure that, in the case of payments made under the untraced drivers agreement he entered into with the Motor Insurers' Bureau interest is paid to applicants on any sum paid to them.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. The agreement means that people injured by unidentified drivers are able to claim compensation from the Motor Insurers' Bureau, when otherwise they would have no redress. But the bureau is not the guilty party. Its need to investigate before offering to settle does not parallel a driver's decision to contest a claim in court, from which the payment of interest stems.

I am satisfied that the bureau's practice strikes a reasonable balance between claimants and the insured motorists who finance the bureau through their premiums.

A30

Sir Peter Mills asked the Secretary of State for Transport when work will start on the preferred route of the A30 Sourton-Launceston road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This scheme is in the national programme for a start of construction in the period from April 1989 onwards. It is not yet possible to give a more precise indication of the likely timetable.

South Yorkshire PTA

Mr. Cabom asked the Secretary of State for Transport why the expenditure level for 1987-88 for the South Yorkshire passenger transport authority has been set 23 per cent. lower than the expenditure level for 1986-87.

Mr. David Mitchell: The expenditure level of £45·7 million determined in July for South Yorkshire passenger transport authority was determined in accordance with the provisions of the Rates Act 1984. It requires a reduction in expenditure on public transport, as has been proposed in advice given to the PTA and the former South Yorkshire county council many times over the last decade. The PTA has applied for the expenditure level to be redetermined at £55 million, and we are now giving careful consideration to that application.

British Rail

Mr. Leadbitter asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in convenient categories of employment the total work force in British Rail from 1976 and the latest available date.

Mr. David Mitchell: Details of staff numbers in British Rail can be found in the Department of Transport's publication "Transport Statistics in Great Britain 1975-85" (Table 3.8) a copy of which is deposited in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Leadbitter asked the Secretary of State for Transport what improvements he expects to see in the efficiency and comfort of British Rail services arising from the proposed increase in fares.

Mr. David Mitchell: We have set the board objectives which call for improved services and efficiency. We are underpinning this with massive investment. We have also asked the board to reflect increasingly, in its fares structure, improvements in the quality of service.

Settle-Carlisle Line

Mr. Leadbitter asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report the number of representations made to him objecting to the proposal to close the Settle to Carlisle line and the dates of those representations; what meetings he has had with organisations and persons and with British Rail; if he will indicate what further consideration is planned; and when a decision is likely to be made.

Mr. David Mitchell: Since the British Railways board announced its proposal to close the Settle to Carlisle line in December 1983 the Department of Transport has received around 1,800 individual representations about the proposal, most of which oppose closure. We have also received a petition of over 40,000 signatures against the proposal. It would be an unjustifiable expense to list the date of each objection.

I have had a number of discussions about the proposal with various organisations, including the board. I have attended meetings of local representatives in Carlisle, Appleby and Settle, and inspected stations and structures on the line.

In reaching our decision we shall consider all the relevant factors including the representations made to us, the board's case for closure, the report of the transport users consultative committees on hardship, and the wider social and economic considerations. I cannot say how long this will take.

Travel Concessions

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has offered any advice to county and district councils and transport authorities, as regards consultation with the appropriate national voluntary organisations when selecting travel concessions for disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Local councils and transport authorities involved in establishing travel concession schemes have general duties to have regard to the needs of members of the public who are elderly or disabled in formulating their transport policies. To fulfil these duties they may well wish to establish local consultation arrangements with voluntary organisations and others. My Department has issued no central advice on how such consultation might take place.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements he has made to arrange monitoring of the implementation of the provisions of the Transport Act 1985 regarding the provision of travel concessions to disabled people; and if he will publish a report.

Mr. David Mitchell: Earlier this year my Department, together with the Scottish Development Department and the Welsh Office, undertook a survey of local authorities to establish what schemes for concessionary fares to the elderly and disabled they had established or intended to establish under the 1985 Transport Act, and what schemes had been in operation before. Almost all authorities indicated that they planned to maintain concessions for handicapped people provided under earlier legislation, and a significant proportion planned to extend them.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek to involve voluntary organisations in publicising travel concessions for disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The authority or authorities which establish a travel concession scheme are responsible under the Transport Act 1985 for publishing full particulars. It is for them to involve local voluntary organisations where they see fit. I am aware that a number of authorities do so and I welcome this.

Airport Consultative Committees

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the future of airport consultative committees under the Airports Act 1986.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Ross) on 21 November at col. 362. The provision for statutory consultation at designated airports is contained in section 35 of the Civil Aviation Act 1982, and is unaffected by the Airports Act 1986 except for the removal of the exemption of airports managed by BAA. My right hon. Friend designated the airports belonging to BAA plc under the amended section 35 of the 1982 Act on 31 July 1986.

Roads

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all those trunk schemes for which a public inquiry ended before 1 January but upon which his decision is still outstanding.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Decisions remain outstanding on the following trunk road schemes for which public inquiries ended before 1 January 1986:

M3 Bar End—Bassett;
A3 Liphook and Petersfield Bypasses;
A11 Thetford Bypass;
A23 Warninglid—Brighton;
A43 Kettering Northern Bypass (Note 1)
A406 Popes Lane—Western Avenue;
A423 Maidenhead Thicket—Burchetts Green;
A604 M1-A1 Link
(Note 1—This scheme was taken to public inquiry with A604 M1-A1 link).

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the schemes included in "National Roads England 1985" for starts in the programme to March 1987 which have not yet started; and if he will give his latest estimate of their starting dates.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Of the 91 schemes listed in "National Roads England" for starts up to March 1987, 47 have been started and 13 are expected to start in or before that month. The information requested for schemes not yet started is as follows:

i. Schemes expected to start before March 1987

M5 Warndon—Rashwood.
A17 New Washway road.
A27 Fontwell bypass.
A30 Blackwater improvement.
A35 Bridport link road.
A35 Dorchester bypass.
A36 Warminster bypass.
A47 Wardley hill improvement.
A303 South Petherton—broadway.
A361 North Devon link stage 2A Tiverton-Newtown.
A419 Blunsdon—Cricklade dualling.
A483 Chester southern bypass—Welsh border.
A650 Airedale route (Victoria park—Crossflatts).

ii. Schemes expected to start after March 1987

a. 1987-88

M3 Compton—Bassett widening.
M63 Stretford—Eccles improvement stage 4.
A3 Compton—Shackleford improvement.
A10 Melbourn bypass.
A17 Fosdyke bridge improvement.
A34 Hanford grade separated junction.
A34 Whitway diversion.
A39 Barnstaple bypass.
A42 Measham—Ashby bypass.
A43 Peartree hill—Wendlebury improvement.
A46 Coventry eastern bypass.
A46 Newark relief road.
A47 Eye bypass.
A47 Guyhirn diversion.
A49 Leominster bypass.
A69 Newcastle western bypass.
A69 Horsley—Corbridge improvement.
A361 North Devon link stage 2B Newtown-Barnstaple.
A406 Great Cambridge road grade separated junction.
A417 Birdlip bypass.
A435 Alcester bypasses.
A696 Woolsington and Kenton bank foot bypass.

b. 1988-89

M3 Bar end—Compton.
A5 Telford—Shrewsbury.
A36 Steeple Langford bypass.
A43 Kettering northern bypass.
A46 Bath (Upper Swainswick—A420).
A66 Bowes bypass—County boundary improvement.

c. 1989-90

A11 Thetford bypass.
A523 Macclesfield inner relief road.

d. 1990-91

A423 Southam bypass.

Delays to those schemes held up have been caused by problems with procedures, dealings with affected parties, technical factors or a combination of these.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those ports in the United Kingdom at which reception facilities for residues and mixtures of oily and noxious liquid wastes from vessels have been established.

Mr. Michael Spicer: United Kingdom ports are required to provide reception facilities to receive residues and oily mixtures from vessels using the port. An assessment undertaken on the availability and use of oil reception facilities shows that United Kingdom ports in general are adequately provided for in this regard.

There is at present no legal requirement for United Kingdom ports to provide reception facilities for noxious liquid wastes arising from ships, therefore, no information is available as to established facilities. Such facilities will, however, be required in certain ports for wastes from a limited number of noxious liquid substances carried in bulk by ships after implementation of MARPOL. (Annex II, on 6 April 1987).

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the steps Her Majesty's Government have taken in the last three years towards prevention of marine pollution due to operation of vessels (i) in the North sea and (ii) in British coastal waters bordering the North sea.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Regulations for prevention of pollution of the marine environment are contained in the international convention for the prevention of pollution from ships, 1973, as modified by the 1978 Protocol (known as MARPOL 73/78).

Domestic legislation to implement the various annexes of the convention was made as each annex comes into force.

At the moment only annex I of MARPOL 73/78 which relates to prevention of pollution by oil is in force. It imposes strict discharge requirements generally, but particularly limits the quantity and concentration of oil that may be discharged into the sea.

With respect to prevention of marine pollution due to operation of vessels carrying noxious liquid substances in bulk, Her Majesty's Government have been involved in developing practical international regulations at IMO. Such regulations will be implemented internationally and by the United Kingdom on 6 April 1987.

Regulations covering oil and noxious liquid substances will apply to ships operating in the North sea and British coastal waters.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport if Her Majesty's Government intend to take any steps to declare the North sea a special area under the MARPOL convention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Her Majesty's Government have not taken any steps to support a declaration for the North sea to become a special area under the MARPOL 73/78 convention. The matter is under review as a result of the first international conference on the protection of the North sea held in 1984 and will now be for consideration by a second conference scheduled for November 1987.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport what reporting system exists for ships, whose cargo, including radioactive substances, poses a potentially grave threat of marine pollution in the North sea.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Two mandatory reporting-in systems exist in the North sea:

1. EEC and national regulations specify compulsory reporting for tankers of 1,600 gross tonnage and over carrying cargoes of chemicals, gas or oil in bulk when entering or leaving ports.
2. Under the law of the Federal Republic of Germany it is understood that vessels loaded with dangerous goods in bulk, entering the extended territorial waters of the German bight, must report in to the authorities.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the new steps Her Majesty's Government have taken in the last three years to ensure that marine transportation of radioactive substances and wastes is carried out in a safe way.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government are taking a leading role within the International Maritime Organisation in reviewing the section of the international maritime dangerous goods code which deals with radioactive materials, taking account of new international regulations. We have also sponsored research work to ensure that the revised regulations continue to provide adequate safety.

In October 1985 the Secretary of State for Transport set up the advisory committee for the safe transport of radioactive materials (ACTRAM) to provide him with advice on safety arrangements for all modes of transport. Following a recommendation of the Environment Select Committee on Radioactive Waste, ACTRAM is currently considering whether any changes in practice are needed to ensure the greater control and safety of the transport of radioactive materials through the English channel.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport what evaluation Her Majesty's Government have made within the last three years of the effects of the Marpol convention 73-78 on the quality of the North sea.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Department of Transport is currently evaluating the quantity of oil that is being discharged into the North sea following the entry into force of annex I of MARPOL 73-78. First indications are that the quantity of oil entering the North sea from ships has been drastically reduced.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport what penalties are imposed on parties found to be discharging residues and mixtures of oily and noxious wastes into (i) British coastal waters and (ii) the North sea.

Mr. Spicer: The illegal discharge of oil or oily mixture by any vessel within the United Kingdom territorial waters and by United Kingdom registered vessels wherever they may be is prescribed by the Merchant Shipping (Prevention of Oil Pollution) Regulations 1983. The discharge of certain oil from oil exploration operations and underseas pipelines in designated areas is prescribed by the Prevention of Oil Pollution Act 1971. Any person found guilty of any such offences shall be liable to a fine not exceeding £50,000 or on conviction on indictment to a fine of no declared limit.

For a foreign-registered vessel discharging oil outside United Kingdom territorial waters, the penalties will be as established by the flag state of the vessel concerned. For other noxious wastes, there are at present no prescribed penalties for discharging.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport, what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the prosecution of parties found to be discharging residues and mixtures of oily and noxious wastes from vessels (a) in the North sea; and (b) in other British coastal waters.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The policy of Her Majesty's Government is to identify and prosecute, when sufficient evidence is available to enable proceedings to be taken, all vessels suspected of illegally discharging oil in United Kingdom territorial waters. If a United Kingdom-registered vessel is reported as having discharged oil in the North sea she will be prosecuted similarly. Foreign registered vessels identified by United Kingdom sources as discharging oil in the North sea are reported to their flag state with a request for the report to be investigated and dealt with.

For other noxious wastes there are currently no specific powers for prosecution.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all incidents detected in the last three years where vessels have been found to be discharging residues and mixtures of oily and noxious wastes (i) in British coastal waters; and (ii) in the North sea.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Since 1 January 1984, the Department of Transport's marine pollution control unit has received sighting reports of 44 incidents where a vessel has been suspected of illegally discharging into the sea. Of these 32 were inside United Kingdom territorial waters and 18 were in the North sea.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport what measures Her Majesty's Government use to detect ships discharging residues and mixtures of oily and noxious liquid wastes (i) into the North sea; and (ii) in British coastal waters.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Merchant Shipping (Prevention of Oil Pollution) Regulations 1983 requires the master of any ship within 200 miles of the United Kingdom to report whenever an incident involves any discharge or probable discharge of oil or oily mixtures.

The Bonn agreement for co-operation in dealing with pollution of the North sea by oil and other harmful substances has as members all the countries bordering the North sea and English channel sea areas. The contracting parties, including the United Kingdom, have undertaken to instruct its ships and aircraft to report any casualty incidents or sightings of oil. Furthermore the agreement requires each country to notify any other member country if it becomes aware of any pollution which is likely to pose a threat to that country's coast or related interest.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken within the International Maritime Organisation to ensure that appropriate international regulations on harmful substances in packages from ships, annexes III and V of the MARPOL convention 73/78, enter into force as soon as possible.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Notification of acceptance of annexes III and V of the international convention for the prevention of pollution from ships, 1973, as modified by its 1978 protocol (MARPOL 73/78) was made by Her Majesty's Government in May 1986.

The provisions of the annexes do not come into force until they have been ratified by a certain proportion of maritime nations. With these acceptances by the United Kingdom that proportion should soon be reached.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what research Her Majesty's Government have conducted in the last three years to develop new or improved airborne surveillance equipment which can function during daylight hours for the detection of marine pollution;

(2) what research Her Majesty's Government have conducted in the last three years to develop new or improved airborne surveillance equipment which can function at night for the detection of marine pollution.

Mr. Michael Spicer: An operational airborne remote sensing research programme continues to be carried out by the marine pollution control unit to evaluate the capabilities of sideways looking radar, infra-red and ultraviolet remote detection equipments. All these equipments have a day/night capability except ultraviolet which does not operate at night. These systems are already proven in respect of large oil spills arising from shipping casualties, but further trials are programmed to evaluate their application to small spills arising from illegal operational discharges and from chemical spillages.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport if Her Majesty's Government in the last three years have considered the development of a mandatory reporting system for ships whose cargo, including radioactive substances, poses a potentially grave threat of marine pollution, which would require North sea coastal states to be informed when such vessels are entering areas where special attention is required; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The question of mandatory reporting systems is under continuous review. A high percentage of ships carry dangerous goods—a term that includes radioactive materials — many of which are potential pollutants. Reporting would, therefore, involve many vessels and the benefits of develping such a complex system internationally are not apparent.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Oil and Shipping Industries

Sir William Clark asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing the gross and net contributions to the invisible balance of payments of the United Kingdom oil and shipping industries, respectively, in 1980, in the most recently available 12 month period, together with his estimate of the likely outturn in 1986.

Mr. MacGregor: The available information on the main invisible balance of payments transactions relating to oil and shipping companies in 1980 and 1985 is given in the "United Kingdom Balance of Payments," 1986 edition (the CSO Pink Book), a copy of which is in the Library. Table 3.3 identifies overseas credits and debits relating to ships owned or chartered-in by United Kingdom residents. Table 5.2 identifies the earnings (both remitted abroad and retained in the United Kingdom) of direct investments by overseas residents in oil companies in the United Kingdom, and table 3.6 identifies payments overseas in respect of services provided for North sea oil and gas operations.

Comparable figures for 1986 are not yet available.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish draft clauses following Her Majesty's Customs and Excise consultative document on value added tax input tax dated 7 August.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Employers and Education

Mr. Rhodes James asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans for promoting co-operation between employers and educational bodies through the tax system.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend intends to introduce legislation in next year's Finance Bill to provide tax relief for expenses incurred by employers in seconding employees on a temporary basis to certain educational bodies. The relief will apply to expenses incurred on or after today, and will remain in operation until 1 April 1997. The relief will apply to secondments to local education authorities; to educational institutions maintained by such authorities, and comparable institutions in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland; and to any other educational bodies which may be approved for the purpose by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science, or, where appropriate, by my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales or Scotland, or by the Department of Education in Northern Ireland.

This new relief will complement the existing relief, introduced in 1983, for secondments to charities (including universities and many other educational institutions, and, prospectively, the new City Technology Colleges). It will also complement the further initiatives my right hon. Friend is announcing today to tackle the problem of teacher shortages in mathematics, physics and technology.

Taxpayers (Customs and Excise)

Mr. John Townend asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about circumstances in which Her Majesty's Customs and Excise would pass information about the affairs of a taxpayer to him; and what reply he has sent.

Mr. Peter Brooke: I have received a letter on the subject from Mr. Patrick Noakes.

I have replied that information relating to the affairs of taxpayers is regarded as held by Customs and Excise in confidence. It is generally released to third parties only with the consent of the person concerned. There are exceptions where there is statutory authority for disclosure and in a limited range of circumstances where disclosure would be in the public interest, for example in connection with the investigation of offences or with criminal prosecutions.

Treasury Ministers are however liable to account to Parliament for the actions of officers of Customs and Excise. Customs and Excise may therefore consider it necessary to forewarn Ministers of particular cases which are likely to attract attention in Parliament or in the press. Such information would be passed only in exceptional circumstances. There would be no question of details of the investigation or the affairs of individual taxpayers being discussed, or of Ministers intervening in the course of the investigation.

Given that this means Ministers do not influence the outcome but are simply informed of a contemporaneous or immediately past event at the same time as the news reaches the public domain, it protects Ministers from expressing ignorance on (by then) public developments about which a reasonable man would expect a Minister to know.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Waiting Lists

Sir Peter Mills asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the waiting list for orthopaedics at Exeter health authority hospitals; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the waiting list for eye surgery and consultancy at the Plymouth health authority hospitals.

Mr. Newton: At 31 December 1985, the waiting list for eye surgery and consultancy in the Plymouth health authority was 415; and for orthopaedics in Exeter it was 1,589.

As my hon. Friend knows, the Government are taking positive steps to achieve a substantial fall in waiting lists and times. My right hon. Friend has written to regional chairmen asking them to lead their districts in a review and to report back on the scale and nature of the problem, the action already taken to tackle it and proposals for reducing waiting lists and times substantially in the future. At the same time the Government have set aside £50 million over the next two years for this purpose. The reports from the regional health authorities are now being studied.

I look forward to substantial improvements nationally, which I am sure will be reflected in Exeter and Plymouth.

Paybeds

Mr. John Browne asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he publish for the last five available years (a) the actual cost account figures and (b) figures used for determining paybed charges for the weighted average hospital revenue cost per day used for the differing classes of National Health Service paybed calculations.

Mr. Newton: Paybed charges are derived from the annual cost accounts submitted by the 700 or so National Health Service hospitals which are authorised to treat private in-patients. It would be disproportionately costly to list the information sought.

Private Patients

Mr. John Browne asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance he is giving to hospitals for a standardised approach to the apportionment of costs in accordance with paragraph 15 of the report by the Comptroller and Auditor General on the level of charges for private resident patients in the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to issue guidance to health authorities on a standardised approach to the apportionment of hospital costs. Authorities and hospitals differ widely in size and organisation and we expect treasurers to use their professional expertise, local knowledge and information systems to decide in each case upon appropriate apportionments. The improved management information which will be available in all health authorities from 1 April 1987 will greatly assist this process.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current estimate of the level of take-up under the housing benefit scheme in Great Britain for those estimated to be entitled to (a) assistance with rates, (b) assistance with public sector rent, and (c) assistance with private sector rent.

Mr. Lyell: I shall let the hon. Member have the information as soon as it becomes available.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the number of pensioners in Scotland who will lose housing benefit supplement as a result of recent changes to supplementary benefit.

Mr. Lyell: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend, the Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Mr. Bowden) on 5 November at column 472.

Electorate

Mr. Haywood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the electorates of each parliamentary constituency in England by county, and identifying (a) the electorate for 1976 and 1986 for each constituency, (b) the percentage change over that period and (c) the electoral quota for each county in 1976 and 1986 using the formula adopted by the Boundary Commission.

Mrs. Currie: In 1976 the English electoral quota was 65,753 electors. In 1986 it was 69,137 electors. A table giving the rest of the information requested has been placed in the Library.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current daily level of earnings disregard which is allowed for those on unemployment benefit; and when it was last reviewed.

Mr. Lyell: The current daily earnings limit for unemployment benefit is £2. It was last revised in March 1982.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the current weekly level of earnings disregard which is allowed for those in receipt of supplementary benefits for reasons other than unemployment; when it was last reviewed; and if he will estimate the real value of this figure compared with its value when it was last reviewed;

(2) what is the current weekly level of earnings disregard which is allowed for those who receive supplementary benefit because of unemployment; when the level was last reviewed; and if he will estimate the current real value of this figure compared with its value when it was last reviewed.

Mr. Lyell: The level of the basic earnings disregard for those in receipt of supplementary benefit, whether or not because of unemployment, is £4 a week. The disregard is higher for lone parents; up to £12 a week of their part-time earnings can be disregarded—the first £4, and half of any balance up to £20. The basic disregard was revised in November 1975 and that for lone parents in November 1980. It is estimated that, revalued at current prices, the disregards would be worth £10·65 and up to £16·85, respectively.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether the leaflet about retirement pension issued to people about to retire has yet been reprinted to include information about invalidity mobility allowance and the age limits;

(2) whether he has any plans to review the publicity given at present to people approaching retirement age about their entitlement to mobility allowance.

Mr. Major: The publicity given to people approaching pension age about the qualifying age conditions for mobility allowance has already been extended. Information will be included from April 1987 in leaflet NP32, "Your Retirement Pension". This leaflet is freely available in the Department's local offices and elsewhere, and is sent automatically to anyone within four months of pension age for whom the Department has some record of pension entitlement.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will carry out a review of the publicity given to those potentially able to qualify for mobility allowance.

Mr. Major: The publicity arrangements for mobility allowance are kept under review. A new, revised edition of our explanatory leaflet is in the course of preparation.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the Government propose to take steps to make mobility allowance available to all persons who cannot walk in a predetermined manner because of visual, sensory or mental disablement.

Mr. Major: We do not propose to make any significant change in the scope of mobility allowance in advance of the current major survey of disability and our subsequent comprehensive review of benefits for long-term sick and disabled people.

NHS (Lenses)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of patients obtaining complex lenses under National Health Service pay more than the cost of the supply of the lenses.

Mr. Newton: The supply of optical appliances under the general opthalmic service ceased from 1 July 1986. Spectacles are now purchased privately but the users of complex lenses receive financial help through the new spectacle voucher scheme. It is estimated that in the period 1 July to 30 September approximately 2·5 per cent. of vouchers were for complex lenses.

Information is not available centrally on the number of patients for whom complex lenses are dispensed under the hospital eye service.

Aspartame

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information his Department has about the outcome of the evaluation by the United States food and drugs administration of the data provided by Dr. Wurtman about the sweetener Aspartame; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I am advised that Dr. Wurtman has provided the United States food and drugs administration with various data to support his contention that Aspartame is not safe for use as an artificial sweetner. These data have been reviewed, but it has not altered its view that Aspartame is safe, and I understand that it is still permitted in the United States of America.

Officials of the Department of Health and Social Security liaise closely with the food and drugs administration and similar bodies in other countries. This ensures a full exchange of scientific information on food additives and artificial sweeteners such as Aspartame. Any new information is reviewed by the Department who can obtain the advice of the independent expert committees to which my hon. Friend, the Member for Medway (Dame Peggy Fenner), referred in her reply to the hon. Member on 13 June at column 336. No information has been received since Aspartame was cleared for use in this country to cause the independent expert committees to alter their advice to Government that Aspartame is safe in use.

Glaucoma

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the successful treatment rate for glaucoma in the United Kingdom; what information he has about the equivalent figure in other western European countries; and to what factors he attributes any difference between the United Kingdom figures and those of the other countries listed.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information requested is not available, but the Department is not aware of any differences in success of treatment for glaucoma between the United Kingdom and other western European countries.

Disabled People

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to issue regulations under section 1 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; if he will make a statement on the implementation of the Disabled Persons Act 1986; which groups and organisations he has consulted about the implementation of the Disabled Persons Act 1986 since it received the Royal Assent; if he will estimate the full cost to local authorities of implementing the Disabled Persons Act 1986; and what representations he has received concerning the Disabled Persons Act 1986 since it received the Royal Assent.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are his intentions concerning tabling commencement orders for each of the sections of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The Department has been in consultation with the Association of County Councils, the Association of Metropolitan Authorities, the Association of Directors of Social Services and the National Association of Health Authorities about the implementation of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986. These consultations, which are continuing, are intended amongst other things to estimate as accurately as possible the cost to local authorities of the various provisions of the Act in the form in which it received Royal Assent, and the rate at which these costs would be likely to build up.

The Government have consistently made it clear that it will only be possible to implement those provisions of the Act with significant resource implications (which include section 1) when the necessary resources can be made available. We want to press on with implementing other parts of the Act as quickly as possible, and I have told the local authority associations that I hope it will be possible to implement sections 4, 8, 9, 10 and 11 by April 1987. Since the Act received Royal Assent, we have received written representations from 10 organisations or individuals seeking its implementation.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services to which parties the five hon. and right hon. Members who have responded to his invitation to commend individuals for membership of regional health authorities belong.

Mr. Newton: The Conservative and Labour parties.

Heart Transplant Operations

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate, for the most recent year for which figures are available, what percentage of those patients considered suitable for a heart transplant in fact received one.

Mrs. Currie: Information is not readily available in the form requested. Returns from the heart transplant centres at Papworth, Harefield and Newcastle show that between 1 April 1985 and 31 March 1986, 145 National Health Service patients received heart transplants, and that during the same period 284 National Health Service patients were assessed for transplantation, though a number of these will have been considered unsuitable and some others may have had a transplant after 31 March 1986.

Heating

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when calculating the level of retirement pension, what specific consideration is given to heating costs; and how this is calculated.

Mr. Major: No separate consideration is given to heating costs in determining the annual level of retirement pension. Retirement pension and other linked benefits are statutorily uprated at least by changes in the general level of prices. The retail price index is used to measure price changes and the index takes account of changes in heating costs.

Health Promotion

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many officers of his department and how many hours of staff time are devoted to work on health promotion, including education and preventative medicine.

Mrs. Currie: Aspects of health promotion and disease prevention form part of the work of many departmental officers, and it would not be practicable to attempt an assessment of total staff time devoted to these matters.

Renal Health

Mr. Mates asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give figures in the Official Report for spending on renal health within the National Health Service in the United Kingdom as a proportion of total Health Service expenditure; and if he will compare this to similar expenditure in other EEC countries.

Mrs. Currie: It is estimated that expenditure on treatment of end-stage renal failure in the United Kingdom in 1985 was about £100 million, a little under a half per cent. of hospital and community health service expenditure. It is not possible to give an estimate for expenditure on renal health generally, nor are expenditure data on other European Community countries readily available.

Contract Cleaning

Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy towards contracting out in the National Health Service in the light of the report by the Secretary General of the Contract Cleaning and Maintenance Association entitled "A Statement on the Difficulties Experienced by Contractors Working with Government Departments," a copy of which has been forwarded to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We have yet to consider fully the report by the secretary-general of the Contract Cleaning and Maintenance Association. However, the policy of competitive tendering in the National Health Service will continue as part of the Government's drive towards improving the cost effectiveness of hospital support services. Private contractors and in-house staff have each played their part in generating considerable savings, currently estimated to be £73 million a year. These savings are retained by health authorities and are available for further development of direct patient care services. Officials meet regularly with representatives of the Contract Cleaning and Maintenance Association. Any modifications to the policy that may be required in the light of this report will be considered with all interested parties.

Urgent Needs Payments

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many urgent needs payments have been requested; how many have been granted; and how many were refused at the Walthamstow office of his Department in the past 12 months.

Mr. Lyell: During the year up to 8 April (the latest information available), the department's Walthamstow office determined claims for urgent needs payments as follows:

	Number
Successful claims for living expenses	1,307
Unsuccessful claims for living expenses	21
Claims for single payments for one-off needs[1]	115
Total Claims	1,443

Abortions

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the number of abortions performed within the Mersey regional health authority in each of the years since the implementation of the Abortion Act 1967 upon women who are normally resident in Northern Ireland; and if he will state for each of those years the numbers of those abortions which were performed in emergency to save the life of the mother.

Mr. Newton: The information is given in the table. None of these abortions was notified as having been performed in emergency to save the life of the pregnant woman. The Liverpool hospital region is not conterminous with the Mersey regional health authority.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the number of abortions which have been performed in each regional health authority in the last year for which figures are available upon women who are normally resident in Northern Ireland; and how many of these abortions in each case were performed in emergency to save the life of the mother.

Mr. Newton: The information is given in the table. None of these abortions was notified as having been performed in emergency to save the life of the pregnant woman.

Dentists (Malpractice)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will name the dentist who was fined £9,000 on appealing against the recommendations of the Northamptonshire family practitioner committee to fine him a lesser amount for malpractice.

Mrs. Currie: No. The dentist in this case had been found to be in breach of his terms of service relating to the provision of general dental services. The case was considered under the National Health Service (Service Committees and Tribunal) Regulations 1974 which require that service committee proceedings and appeals should take place in private. It is not the practice to publicise the names of patients or practitioners in these cases.

Birth Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the numbers of illegitimate births in each region in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and what percentage of total births this figure represents in each of those years.

Mrs. Currie: Information in respect of countries and regions of the United Kingdom is shown in the following table:

Child Abuse

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information he has concerning the percentage of all child abuse cases in which the abused child was (a) born illegitimate or (b) currently living in a home in which one or other parent was not the natural parent, in the latest year for which figures are available;

(2) what information he has concerning the numbers of cases of suspected child abuse dealt with in each region in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: Information about numbers of cases of suspected child abuse in each region and, of the percentage of all child abuse cases where the abused child was born illegitimately or was currently living in a home with a step parent is not held centrally.

Health Education Council

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money has been allocated to the Health Education Council in each of the past three years.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is as follows:

Year	£ million
1984-85	9·6
1985-86	10·1
1986-87	9·6

It is anticipated that from 1987 onwards the Health Education Council will be reconstituted as a special health authority with much increased funding.

Suicides

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the number of suicides by children aged under 16 years in each region in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: The information is given in the table:

[1] International Classification of Diseases 8th and 9th revisions E950-E959 Suicide and Self-inflicted injury

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any information concerning the number and percentage of all suicide cases involving children aged under 16 years in the last year for which figures are available in which the children were of illegitimate birth.

Mrs. Currie: The question cannot be answered because legitimacy at birth is not collected at the registration of deaths.

Injuries (Animal Attacks)

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish a table, listing for each of the last five years (a) the number of injuries inflicted by animals on humans, (b) the number of injuries classified as serious, which were inflicted by animals on humans and (c) the number of injuries inflicted by animals on humans, which were fatal, which were reported to the National Health Service or other official agencies, giving in each case the figures for Scotland, England, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Mrs. Currie: Statistics for Scotland and Northern Ireland are a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for those countries. Exact figures on injuries are not available.

However, table 1 shows an estimation of the approximate number of hospital discharges following injury caused by animals, where available. Table 2 gives the number of registrations of accidental deaths caused by animals for Scotland, England, Wales and Northern Ireland for 1981 to 1985.

AIDS

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many acquired immune deficiency syndrome sufferers died in England and Wales in 1983, 1984, 1985 and in the first eight months of 1986.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1986, c. 392]: The numbers of deaths in England and Wales of patients with AIDS by year of report to the communicable disease surveillance centre are as follows:

	Number
1983	16
1984	29
1985	91

[1] By end August.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people were treated for acquired immune deficiency syndrome in hospitals and clinics in England and Wales in 1984, 1985 and up to the latest date available in 1986.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1986, c 392]: The number of people treated in hospitals and clinics in England and Wales who fulfilled the criteria for AIDS cases and were reported to the communicable disease surveillance centre is as follows: 74 in 1984, 161 in 1985 and 267 by the end of October 1986.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received concerning the preventive treatment of acquired immune deficiency syndrome; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1986, c 392]: We have received a large number of representations about many issues concerning AIDS, including preventive treatment. The Government's position on the major issues relating to the disease was set out by my right hon. Friend in the debate on Friday 21 November.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Veal Crates

Mr. Cohen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide a summary of the effects of his Department's 1983 welfare code for cattle on the use of the veal crate; how many crates are in use in each year since 1982, and currently; whether he has any proposals to prohibit the use of this crate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The veal crate system does not comply with important provisions on space allowances and diet in the welfare code for cattle. We believe that the existence of the code has discouraged the use of veal crates, but we do not have detailed statistics on the number of individual crates. At present we understand that there are eight holdings operating this system. However there appears to be no sign that the code will eliminate the use of crates altogether and the Government has therefore decided to bring forward legislation to phase them out. My Department will ensure that interested organisations are fully consulted about this before the end of the year.

Mr. Hunter asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to phase out the use of the veal crate system.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Yes. The use of veal crates is incompatible with the welfare code for cattle and, although the existence of the code has discouraged their use, there appears to be no sign that the code alone will bring it to an end. The Government have therefore decided to bring forward legislation to phase out veal crates, and my Department will consult interested organisations fully before the end of the year.

Alcohol (Chemical Additives)

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all chemical additives which are permitted in the making of wine and the brewing of beer for sale in the United Kingdom; and if he will set up a departmental expert study on injurious toxicity normally contained in alcoholic drinks currently on sale in Britain.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The composition of wine in the United Kingdom, including the additives used, is controlled by the Common Agriculture Policy (Wine) Regulations 1982 (SI 1982 No. 578) which implements an EC regulation. Beer may contain any additive permitted for general food use. There are already expert bodies, including the Food Advisory Committee, The Committee on Toxicity and the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy, to advise Ministers on the safety of food.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Hunter asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, whether he has any plans to seek to update the legislation on the welfare of animals in transit.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Yes. The Government are aware that a large number of interested parties have suggested that the many orders on the welfare of animals in transit should be modernised and simplified. The Farm Animal Welfare council has asked whether the Government are willing to take on this task and we have told it that we shall indeed be doing so.

It is envisaged that the legislation would be rationalised in stages beginning with new orders on the carriage of live poultry by all methods of transport and the carriage by water of all farm livestock and horses. We would then amend and/or consolidate the Transport of Animals (Road and Rail) Order 1975. Finally we would consider what scope there was for rationalising the legislation on the protection of farm animals and horses on export. Interested organisations would of course be consulted in the normal way on each stage of the excercise.

Written Answers to Questions

PRIME MINISTER

Westland plc

Q115. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if she had formed any view as to whether the Solicitor-General's opinion about the material inaccuracy of the then Secretary of State for Defence's letter to the European consortium should be brought into the public domain, before a copy of the Solicitor-General's letter to the then Secretary of State for Defence was received in her office; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 17 November at columns 49-50.

Dartmouth

Q144. Mr. Steen asked the Prime Minister what plans she has to visit Dartmouth.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Skinner asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 27 November.

Mr. Canavan asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 27 November.

Mr. Dormand asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 27 November.

Mr. Madden asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 27 November.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 27 November.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 27 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Mr. Mordechai Vanunu

Mr. Marlow asked the Prime Minister whether information was passed from Her Majesty's Government sources to Israeli sources concerning the presence of Mr. Mordechai Vanunu within the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: No.

State Security

Mr. McNamara asked the Prime Minister if she will refer to the Security Commission the matters published in the magazine Lobster by Robin Ramsey and Stephen Dorrell in April in respect of action taken by the security services against Her Majesty's Government in 1974 to 1976.

The Prime Minister: No.

ENERGY

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) how much has been expended by Her Majesty's Government on research into the improvement of insulation during the past five years for which records are available;

(2) what are his proposals for the provision of resources for research into the improvement of insulation during the years 1987 and 1988, respectively.

Mr. David Hunt: The Department of Energy and the Department of the Environment have expended approximately £0·76 million per annum on average over the past five years for research, development and demonstration of the performance of thermal insulation for buildings in their complementary programmes. They expect to expend about £0·62 million in each of the financial years 1986-87 and 1987-88. Records which are available do not separate research from development and demonstration, nor in some cases is the performance of thermal insulation separately identified from other energy efficiency measures.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) how much has been expended by Her Majesty's Government on research into the improvement of double glazing methods during the past five years for which records are available;

(2) what are his proposals for the provisions of resources for research into the improvement of double glazing methods during the years 1987 and 1988, respectively.

Mr. David Hunt: The Department of Energy and the Department of the Environment have expended approximately £0·12 million per annum on average over the past five years for research, development and demonstration of the performance of double glazing in their complementary programmes. They expect to expend about £0·27 million per annum in each of the financial years 1986-87 and 1987-88. Records which are available do not separate research from development and demonstration, nor in some cases is the performance of double glazing separately identified from other energy efficiency measures.

Severn Barrage

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his policy towards the recommendation of the Severn Tidal Power Group in connection with the proposed Severn barrage to the effect that a decision should be made by private Bill rather than by public inquiry.

Mr. David Hunt: The further work on the Severn barrage announced in July this year is aimed to reduce uncertainty to the point where it will be possible to make decisions on whether or not to plan for construction. No decision has therefore been made to follow any specific procedural path and a main objective of the work will be to consider further the legal, administrative, organisational and procedural options of a Severn barrage project, and discuss with all interested parties their implications.

Electricity Boards (Profitability)

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Energy to what factors he attributes the difference in profitability between the South of Scotland Electricity Board and the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Mr. Goodlad: Profitability for the electricity industry in Scotland is most appropriately measured on a joint basis because the two Scottish electricity boards collaborate closely in operating the generation and transmission system in a single merit order, sharing the costs through a joint generation agreement. Comparisons with the electricity industry in England and Wales are best made with that industry as a whole since, unlike the Scottish boards, the CEGB is responsible for generation and transmission but not distribution. In 1985-86 the Scottish boards made a return on average net assets employed measured on a current cost basis of 2·93 per cent. compared with 2·65 per cent. for the electricity industry in England and Wales. Among the factors leading to the higher profitability in Scottish boards were the higher proportion of nuclear power and the availability of hydro-electric power on the Scottish system.

Departmental Publicity

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Energy what will be the total spending of his Department on press and public relations in the current year; and what it was in 1979-80 and each intervening year.

Mr. Peter Walker [pursuant to his reply, 19 November 1986, c. 232]: Expenditure by my Department on press and public relations in each of the years beginning 1979-80 was:

	£ thousand
1979-80	595
1980-81	796
1981-82	736
1982-83	674
1983-84	913
1984-85	7,450
1985-86	12,257
1986-87[1]	14,200

[1] Anticipated.

Notes:

1. Before 1983-84, certain costs incurred through Her Majesty's Stationery Office were not separately identified as press and public relations. Detailed information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

2. COI adopted a repayment service from 1984-85 onwards. The figures quoted above for 1979-80 to 1983-84 do not include the allied service costs incurred by the COI on behalf of my Department.

3. The figures (in cash prices) include:
   (i) programme expenditure on information and publicity material including advertising, displays, exhibitions, films, promotions, publications, research, seminars, theatre groups and the press office;
   (ii) staff costs (salaries, accommodation and common services) for all permanent information service and support staff in post on 1 April each year based upon ready reckoner figures.

4. The figures exclude costs involved in gas privatisation on which I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) on 5 November, at column 471.

5. The bulk of the programme costs incurred in the financial years 1985-86 to 1986-87 were in respect of the energy efficiency campaign and Energy Efficiency Year.

Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Energy what volume of low-level nuclear waste has arisen from the reprocessing of imported Magnox spent nuclear fuel from Italy and Japan since such imports began.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1986, c. 352]: It is estimated that the following quantities of solid low-level radioactive waste are attributable to the reprocessing of spent Magnox nuclear fuel from Italy and Japan since that business commenced until September 1986:

	Cubic metres
Italy	8,200
Japan	4,000

Power Stations (Senior Staff)

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list for each year since 1979 the number of persons notified to Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate by (a) the Central Electricity Generating Board and (b) the South of Scotland Electricity Board as power station operators, supervisors and managers, and the number of individual appointments prevented by the inspectorate in each year;

(2) if he will describe the duties of persons notified to Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate as power station operators, supervisors and managers, specifying which duties of operators and supervisors are not located within the main control room of a power station; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will describe the responsibilities of Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate in relation to the training and standards of competence of power station management and staff, specifying which persons at a power station are subject to such responsibilities; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will list for each nuclear power station in England and Wales the current number of persons notified to Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate as power station operators, supervisors and managers showing each rank or grade separately.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply, 17 November 1986, c. 19-20]: The booklet "The Work of HM Nuclear Installations Inspectorate" published by the Health and Safety Executive, a copy of which is in the Library of the House, outlines the inspectorate's responsibilities. Under the conditions of a nuclear licence, a licensee must appoint suitably qualified persons, known as duly authorised persons, to perform certain functions at a nuclear power station. These functions include station manager, departmental heads, shift charge engineers, assistant charge engineers, assistant engineers (operations), health physicists, assistant health physicists and instrument engineers. Typically at a nuclear power station there would be about 40 persons so appointed. Some, for instance station managers, departmental heads, and health physicists, would normally work outside the control room. The minimum qualification for a duly authorised person is at least a higher national certificate or equivalent in a subject relevant to the duties. I am advised that many have degrees or equivalent engineering qualifications such as membership of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, or are chartered engineers. No person is permitted to act as an appointed person if Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate considers that person unfit; but there has been no recent case where Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate has had to use this power of objection. It is not possible except at disproportionate cost to list the number of duly authorised persons notified since 1979 to Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate by operators.

Alternative Energy Sources

15. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he next proposes to have discussions with the European Community Council of Ministers about alternative sources of energy.

Mr. Peter Walker [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986, c. 11]: I should like to report the outcome of the meeting of the European Communities Council of Energy Ministers on 26 November.

I took the chair on behalf of the United Kingdom Presidency and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Energy represented the United Kingdom.

Council adopted a major new commitment to the benefits of energy efficiency. To bring this home to consumers, Ministers agreed to publicise the need for greater energy efficiency within member states. They also agreed, on the basis of policies appriopate to each member state, to promote successful technologies, exchange information and to examine new sources of private finance for energy efficient investment.

A resolution was agreed establishing a Community approach to the development of new and renewable sources of energy. At the request of the Presidency, the Commission agreed to call a major meeting of chief scientists in the new year to exchange information. This would establish a firm basis for further work on how best to encourage the economic exploitation of these sources of energy, which were likely to be of growing importance, despite current low oil prices.

Council reviewed progress with the programme of work outlined in the Commission's June framework communication on nuclear health and safety. It noted that the Commission will shortly bring forward detailed proposals for action under the Euratom treaty, drawing on the lessons learnt at Chernobyl. Ministers stressed that the continuing use and development of nuclear power required the highest standards of safety and environmental protection. It was agreed that the Commission would report progress regularly to the Energy Council. Council also noted the important measures agreed and under consideration by the International Atomic Energy Agency, and that the agency remained the appropriate forum for carrying forward international action.

Ministers held a first exchange on a wide-ranging Commission discussion paper on possible ways of improving energy efficiency in transport. Council noted that the transport sector remained almost totally dependent on oil products and that increases in oil consumption in the sector were a matter of concern. The Commission agreed to examine the options for savings and reduced oil dependence identified in discussion.

Council discussed the effects of low oil prices on other fuels and possible implications for the Community's recently adopted energy objectives for 1995. It noted that there were clearly a number of far-reaching implications for all sources of energy from prolonged low oil prices. The Commission is to consider these further.

Ministers considered recent developments in the oil market. They noted that the market remained volatile and that the Commission would continue to monitor developments in oil trade and consumption as well as in the refining industry.

Lastly, Council considered extending the Communtiy system of labels showing the energy consumption of electrical appliances. It was not possible to resolve a technical disagreement and this is to be considered further.

Chernobyl Disaster

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will state, following the meetings in Vienna on 25 August, relating to the Chernobyl disaster, how many additional deaths due to cancer it is estimated will occur in Europe over the next 70 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I have been asked to reply.

Estimates of radiation doses and consequences are not yet available for the whole of Europe.

Estimates for the European Community have been made by the National Radiological Protection Board. Based on the dose-risk relationship currently accepted internationally, the number of cancer deaths in the Community over the next 70 years that might be attributable to Chernobyl is in the region of 1,000. On the same basis, some 50,000 cancer deaths would be attributable to natural sources of radiation out of the total of about 50 million cancer deaths from all causes.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Heavy Goods Vehicles and Coaches

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions there have been in each of the last five years for defects under road traffic regulations covering heavy goods vehicles and coaches; and what was the average penalty imposed.

Mr. Mellor: No reliable information is available for specific types of vehicles. The available information on findings of guilt for offences involving a vehicle or part in dangerous or defective condition is published annually in "Offences relating to motor vehicles, England and Wales, Supplementary tables" (tables 5, 6, 8 and 12 of the issue of 1985), copies of which are in the Library.

Criminal Injuries (Compensation)

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases were being considered but were unresolved by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board on 1 January in each of the last five years or on such other day as may be expedient having regard to the records kept.

Mr. Mellor: The numbers of unresolved cases before the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board at the end of each financial year for the last five years were:

	Cases unresolved
31 March 1982	28,700
31 March 1983	32,100
31 March 1984	34,300
31 March 1985	41,800
31 March 1986	51,500

Probation Officers

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the county chief probation officers in Wales are Welsh speaking.

Mr. Mellor: Information on the linguistic abilities of chief probation officers is not held centrally.

Prisons (Costs)

Sir Anthony Kershaw asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average annual cost of keeping an adult male in prison.

Mr. Mellor: The estimated average annual cost of keeping an adult male in prison in England and Wales in the financial year 1985-86, the latest year for which figures are available, was £13,520.

Immigration

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if different treatment is accorded to men and women under the Immigration Act 1971 and the British Nationality Act 1981.

Mr. Waddington: There are a limited number of provisions of the Immigration Act 1971 and the British Nationality Act 1981 which treat the sexes differently.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long on average the sponsor of an applicant for entry clearance as a fiancée or spouse has to wait for an interview, where appropriate, from the time of interview of the applicant; and if there are any differences dependent upon the location of the sponsor.

Mr. Waddington: Waiting times depend upon the number of staff available to conduct interviews, which varies between different parts of the country and times of the year. Records are not kept in a way that would enable an average figure to be obtained.

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what is the effect of the new visa regulations on the rate of immigration from the Indian sub-continent.

Mr. Waddington: The new visa requirements are an administrative arrangement which moves the decision on the claim to admission by visitors and students from ports of entry to our missions abroad. The criteria for admission are not changed.

Mr. Stephen Boggs

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what items were removed from the studio of the artist Stephen Boggs by officers of the counterfeit currency squad on 31 October.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that a summons was served on Mr. Boggs on 24 November; the matter is, therefore, sub judice.

Holiday Voters

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will issue guidelines to local authorities about procedures for dealing with holiday voters; and how the general public will be informed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Guidance was issued to electoral registration officers on 18 November. A copy of the circular (numbered RPA 303) is in the Library. Publicity campaigns will be mounted before the next local government elections on 7 May, and when the date of the next general election is known, publicity will include advertisements in the press, announcements on the radio and an information leaflet.

European Convention on Human Rights

Mr. George Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) why he has not sought to extend protocol 1 of the European convention on human rights to the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man;

(2) if he will now consider seeking to extend protocol 1 of the European convention on human rights to the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A declaration extending protocol 1 to the Channel Islands and Isle of Man was not made in 1971. The islands are now being consulted about its extension to them.

Leeds and Hull Prisons

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether all those remand prisoners in Leeds prison wishing to receive a daily visit are provided the facilities for such a visit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor Unconvicted prisoners are normally allowed a visit of at least 15 minutes every day except Sunday. However, because of a large increase in the size of the unconvicted population at Leeds and the consequent pressure on available visiting facilities, visits at Leeds were restricted to alternate weekdays, with all inmates entitled to a visit on Saturdays. The position is being kept under review. The conversion of Hull prison to a local prison has provided some relief, but continuing growth in the unconvicted population has not made it possible to permit resumption of the normal visiting entitlement.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on the latest available figures, how many (a) young prisoners and (b) juveniles are held in (i) Leeds and (ii) Hull prisons.

Mr. Mellor: The information is given in the table.

Population aged under 21 of Hull prison and remand centre and Leeds prison on 30 September 1986 by type of prison and age: number[1]

Establishment	Age
	Under 17		17-20
	Remand	Sentenced[2]	Remand	Sentenced[2]
Hull Remand Centre	20	10	115	25
Hull Prison	—	—	—	—
Leeds Prison	—	—	230	60

[1] Rounded estimate: detailed checking of individual cases would involve disproportionate cost.
[2] Including persons committed in default of payment of a fine.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, on the latest available figures, how many prisoners at Leeds prison are serving sentences of more than five years.

Mr. Mellor: It is estimated that about 75 prisoners in Leeds prison on 30 September 1986 were serving sentences of over five year.

"Fresh Start"

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he intends to take to inform members of the Prison Service about the contents of the Home Office publication "Fresh Start".

Mr. Mellor: Copies of the "Fresh Start" publication, together with copies of a letter which has been sent to the Prison Officers Association about the proposed new working arrangements, the management structure and pay and conditions of service, were sent to governors of Prison Service establishments on 21 November with instructions that every member of staff should receive a copy of each.

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting of the Foreign Affairs Council on 24 November.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs chaired the Foreign Affairs Council in Brussels on 24 November. I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council agreed that the Community should sign the new protocol of the multi-fibre arrangement, which was negotiated in July and which extends the arrangement until 31 July 1991. The Commission also reported to the Council on the renegotiation of bilateral agreements under the arrangement with 26 countries, which will be put to the Council for decision at a later date. Details of the restraint levels negotiated have been placed in the Library of the House.

Ministers reviewed the negotiations between the Community and the United States on the trade effects of enlargement and discussed recent trade measures taken by Canada against imports from the EC.

The Council adopted the generalised scheme of preferences for 1987 which provides preferential access for developing country imports into the Community and approved a negotiating mandate for an EC-Czechoslovakia trade agreement.

The Council discussed progress in the negotiations on the Community's framework programme for research and development for the period 1987-91.

Ministers also discussed preparations for the European Council on 5-6 December.

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the decisions taken by the Foreign Affairs Council since he assumed its presidency.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to my hon. Friends the Members for Leeds, North-West (Dr. Hampson) on 23 July, at column 256, for Rochford (Dr. Clark) on 22 October, at column 167, for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) today; and to the statement by my right hon. and learned Friend, on 28 October, at column 913.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Tripartite Agreement 1925

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the tripartite agreement of 1925 between His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom, the Irish Free State and the Government of Northern Ireland, formerly deposited with the League of Nations, is now deposited with the United Nations Organisation.

Mr. Eggar: Yes.

Governments (Recognition)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria are used by Her Majesty's Government in deciding whether to recognise Governments.

Mr. Eggar: It is our policy to recognise states rather than Governments.

Nicaragua

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy not to give recognition to any provisional Government set up by the Contras in Nicaragua.

Mr. Eggar: The question of recognition does not arise since, as explained in my earlier answer to the hon. Member, it is our policy to recognise states rather than Governments.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the United States Government urging them not to pursue the setting up of a provincial Government based on the Nicaraguan Contras.

Mr. Eggar: As already explained in my earlier answers to the hon. Member, it is our policy to recognise states rather than Governments. We continue to advocate a political solution to the problems of central America on the basis of the Contadora objectives. We ensure that the United States is fully aware of our views.

Iran

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the extent of involvement of British companies in Iran; and what advice he gives to British companies about trading in or with Iran.

Mr. Howard: I have been asked to reply.

My Department does not keep lists of exporters to any market. Iran remains a important market for British firms and advice on commercial practices and economic conditions in Iran is available from BOTB to assist exporters interested in that market.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

State Security

Mr. McNamara asked the Attorney-General (1) if he will ask the Director of Public Prosecutions to investigate allegations published in the magazine Lobster in April concerning covert operations by the security services against Her Majesty's Government in 1974 to 1976 with a view to prosecuting those responsible;

(2) if he will prosecute Mr. Colin Wallace, former senior information officer, Psychops, Army Headquarters, Northern Ireland for revealing details of secret service operations against Her Majesty's Government in the period 1974 to 1979 in the magazine, Lobster, in April.

The Attorney-General: No.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Data Processing Staff

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many data processing staff are in post within his Department; and how many of those are trainees.

Mr. Butcher: My Department had the following numbers of staff in the data processing grades in post on 17 November 1986:

	Numbers
Senior Data Processors	43
Data Processors	110
Trainee Data Processors	8

Radio Caroline

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the actions taken in the last 12 months against the illegal Radio Caroline station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Between 8 August and 13 December 1985 my Department chartered a vessel to keep observation on the ships from which the unlicensed marine broadcasting stations Radio Laser and Radio Caroline operated. The radio investigation service officers on board reported to the police any vessels seen supplying the ships for further investigation. Prosecutions under the Marine, etc. Broadcasting (Offences) Act 1967 are brought by the Director of Public Prosecutions, to whom my Department continues to report evidence of possible offences under the Act. I understand that as a result two people have been prosecuted and convicted and a number of prosecutions are pending.

My Department has also pursued with other European countries efforts to fulfil our international obligation to prevent broadcasting from ships outside national territories. The Government remain seriously concerned about unlicensed marine broadcasters who use radio frequencies allocated for other, legitimate purposes, and whose powerful transmissions can and do cause interference to other radio users.

Cambria and General Investment Trust

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assistance he is offering the Securities and Exchange Commission with its investigations into Cambria and General Investment Trust; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I am ready to offer the commission such assistance, within the terms of the memorandum of understanding with my Department, as it may request and as I can reasonably provide. However, as the hon. Member may have seen, the company has stated that it intends to co-operate with the commission in its investigation.

Financial Services Act

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which sections of the Financial Services Act he next intends to bring into effect.

Mr. Howard: On 26 November the Financial Services Act 1986 (Commencement No. 2) Order was made, which brings further provisions into force today. Apart from the citation of the Act, those provisions are exclusively concerned with the disclosure of information obtained under certain provisions of the Companies Act 1985 and the Companies (Northern Ireland) Order 1986, together with consequential repeals.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Anglo-Irish Agreement

17. Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with the leaders of political parties in Northern Ireland during the past two months in relation to the progress of the Anglo-Irish Agreement; and what have been the effects of those discussions.

Mr. Tom King: I have met the hon. Member for Foyle (Mr. Hume) as the leader of the SDLP, and the leader of the alliance party in this connection in the last two months. In addition, I have met a considerable number of supporters of all the major parties, I regret, however, that the leaders of the two Unionist parties have so far felt unable to talk to me.

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will promote a campaign within the Province in support of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Tom King: I am most anxious that the benefits for everybody in Northern Ireland that can flow from the Anglo-Irish Agreement are better understood and to remove misunderstandings and misrepresentations about it and we seek to take every opportunity to do this.

ENVIRONMENT

Use Classes Order

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will announce the date when he proposes to publish his conclusions on the use classes order.

Mr. Tracey: We are considering the responses to the consultation paper which we published in June setting out our proposals to modernise the order. We are not yet ready to make any announcement.

General Development Order

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to table amendments to the general development order.

Mr. Tracey We intend to lay a revised general development order, which will consolidate, simplify and further amend the current order, later this Session, following consultations with the local authority associations and others.

North Sea (Pollution)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the steps Her Majesty's Government have taken in the last three years to prevent, reduce or eliminate pollution of the North sea from atmospheric sources whose origins lie within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department is currently reassessing information on the input to the North sea of heavy metals and pesticides, although there is no clear evidence that current emission levels pose an environmental threat to the North sea. The Government's aim, set in 1984, to reduce by 30 per cent. United Kingdom emissions of sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxides by the end of the 1990s would reduce the deposition of these pollutants. This aim is reinforced by the Government's recent authorisation to retro-fit three 2000 MW power stations and decision to equip all new coal-fired power stations with flue gas desulphurisation equipment.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the research Her Majesty's Government have commissioned or completed to examine the effects on the North sea of organic synthetic compounds discharged or dumped into that sea from the United Kingdom within the last three years.

Mr. Waldegrave: Within the past three years my Department has commissioned the following research relevant to the effects of synthetic substances in the North sea:

the masses of list I and list II substances discharged to tidal waters in the United Kingdom (October 1983). These included DDT, Lindane, HCH, PCB's and the Drins.

an update of the estimates in 1986 for the five major estuaries bordering the North sea.

a survey of pentacholorophenol and other pesticides in river and estuarial waters.

a survey of rivers and estuaries for eulans, mitins, synthetic pyrethroids, chlorinated benzenes, chlorinated ethanes and others and triozines.

the effects and distribution of organo-tin compounds in coastal waters.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list any new binding regulations on black and grey list substances adopted by the United Kingdom since the close of the international conference on the protection of the North sea in Bremen, 31 October to 1 November 1984 (a) within the framework of existing/new national legislation, (b) within the framework of the European Economic Community and (c) within the framework of the Paris commission.

Mr. Waldegrave: Since the close of the international conference on the protection of the North sea in Bremen, 31 October to 1 November 1984, the United Kingdom has adopted the following binding regulations on black and grey list substances:

Within the framework of existing national legislation, controls over discharges to coastal and estuarial waters —which previously covered only black list substances— have been extended to include all substances including those on the grey list.

Within the framework of the European Community, quality standards for discharges of three black list substances, DDT, pentachlorophenol and carbon tetrachloride have been agreed (86/280/EEC). In addition the EC directive (85/467/EEC) has been adopted concerning the reduction of specific uses of PCB's and PCT's and the prohibition of use in new equipment. The Government have also laid down national standards based on environmental quality objectives for six grey list substances—lead, chromium, zinc, arsenic, copper and nickel.

Within the framework of the Paris Commission, three decisions repeat and extend the provisions of the EC directives on discharges of cadmium and mercury (83/513/EEC and 84/156/EEC) to Paris convention waters, and on the marketing and use of PCB's.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what new preventive measures Her Majesty's Government have taken during the last three years to maintain the quality of the North sea.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the information given in response to other questions. In addition, as part of its continuing policy of co-operation with the other North sea littoral states to maintain a healthy North sea environment the Government are to host the international North sea conference in London in November 1987.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on establishing a joint international environmental data base with other North sea countries.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United Kingdom contributes fully to the data bases being set up and developed within the context of the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea and of the joint monitoring programme of the Oslo and Paris commissions. These data bases cover the area of the North sea.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all research during the past three years which Her Majesty's Government have conducted aimed at developing the joint monitoring programme of both the Oslo and Paris commissions.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United Kingdom Government participated fully in the joint monitoring programme of the Oslo and Paris commissions and has not had to sponsor research to enable it to do so. It has carried out research for the wider activities of the joint monitoring group such as the assessment of inputs to the sea, into trend monitoring and into sediment monitoring.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment in what ways Her Majesty's Government have co-operated in the last three years with other coastal states around the North sea in long range surveillance of airborne pollutants entering the sea.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United Kingdom is playing a full part in the atmospheric working group of the Paris commission which is charged among other things with encouraging co-operation in monitoring and the exchange of research information. Six monitoring sites in the United Kingdom currently contribute to the European measurement and evaluation programme under the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe convention on long range transboundary air pollution.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what improvements Her Majesty's Government have made in pollution monitoring programmes around that part of the United Kingdom coastline bordering the North sea in the last three years.

Mr. Waldegrave: The monitoring of estuarial and coastal waters is the responsibility of water authorities and river pollution boards, and the quantity and quality of monitoring is steadily improving. A major survey of the quality of bathing waters is in progress. My Department has assisted by the development of better methods of analysis and research into the use of organisms as indicators of pollution. It has also sponsored surveys of list I and list II substances in estuarial waters for compounds not generally monitored by water authorities.

In addition, I am advised that the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, has made a number of improvements to its own monitoring programmes. These include the further refinement of monitoring carried out at offshore sea disposal sites; the near completion of a baseline survey of metals in seawater; the establishment of extensive monitoring for tributyl tin compounds in coastal and estuarine waters; the extension of the scope of monitoring for hydrocarbons; and the initiation of research to facilitate fish disease monitoring.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what new measures Her Majesty's Government have introduced in the last three years to prevent, reduce or regulate waste from production and consumption facilities entering the North sea.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the information given in response to his other questions.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list any cases in the last three years where types of waste previously discharged into the North sea were, when found or thought to be harmful, disposed of in a different manner.

Mr. Waldegrave: Detailed information of the type requested is not held centrally, but information on discharges to rivers and estuaries are publicly available from the registers of discharges held by water authorities. However, some examples of where reductions in discharges to the North sea have been made during the past three years are listed below:

mercury from chloralkali plants, due to the use of mercury-free technology oil from refineries, due to a combination of better effluent treatment and industrial restructuring pesticides from manufacturing plants by greater recycling of effluent.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will detail year by year the amount of money spent in 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84, 1984-85, 1985-86 on research improving knowledge of the fate of pollutants in the North sea.

Mr. Waldegrave: Most of the research undertaken by the Government on the fate of pollutants entering the sea is directed at the maritime environment in general rather than the North sea in particular. However, it is estimated that the following sums have been spent in each of the last five years on research specifically directed at the North sea:

Estimated Research Expenditure of fate of pollutants in the North Sea

1981-82	390
1982-83	570
1983-84	680
1984-85	680
1985-86	800

These estimates include research sponsored by my Department and by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. In addition, the Secretary of State for Scotland has spent over £100,000 a year in each of the years specified, primarily in connection with the effects of the offshore oil industry on the North sea.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list any new emission and environmental quality standards laid down by Her Majesty's Government within the last three years to preserve and restore rivers and estuaries discharging into the North sea.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United Kingdom Government do not set emission standards. They are set by water authorities on a case by case basis and on the basis of quality objectives. Details of the quality standards issued in the past three years are given in answer to a previous question.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all new objectives, of which he is aware, established within the last three years set to control discharges to coastal areas of the North sea of (i) list I materials and (ii) list II materials.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government have laid down national quality standards for a range of environmental quality objectives for all surface waters in the United Kingdom affected by discharges of lead, chromium, zinc, arsenic, copper and nickel. In accordance with the environmental quality objective approach, it is for the regional water authorities to set emission standards to ensure that the national quality standards are met. Within the European Community limit values and quality standards have recently been agreed for discharges of DDT, pentachlorophenol and carbon tetrachloride.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what objectives Her Majesty's Government have set within the last three years to control the coastal discharge into the North sea of (i) list I materials and (ii) list II materials; and what specific time limits have been set in each case.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information on environmental quality objectives has been given in answer to a previous question. All discharges to coastal and estuarial waters will require at least deemed consent as from November 1987 and it is planned that all deemed consents shall be reviewed within the next five-year period — with priority being given to discharges of list I and II substances. For list I substances, quality standards must be met within a time scale laid down in the relevant directive. For list II substances water authorities must draw up plans for the reduction of pollution, which incorporate time scales, for those areas where quality standards are not met.

Chemical Compounds

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the chemical compounds which, within the last three years, have been banned from marketing, production or use in the United Kingdom as a consequence of their possible harmful effects on marine, freshwater or marine eco-systems.

Mr. Waldegrave: The objective of United Kingdom policy in protecting the aquatic environment is to ensure that concentrations of chemical substances do not reach unacceptable levels. Bans or restrictions on the manufacture, marketing or use are among the tools which are used in meeting this objective. Where restrictions on the marketing and use of chemical compounds are considered necessary to protect the aquatic environment, the United Kingdom prefers to work through international agencies.

In the last three years measures have been taken under an EC directive and a Paris commission decision further to restrict the marketing and use of PCBs and PCTs. Restrictions have also been introduced nationally on the supply of organotin-based antifouling paints and the Government are pressing for similar action in the European Economic Community.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all private, corporate or Governmental sources of PCBs presently being discharged into fresh water, estuaries or marine eco-systems feeding the North sea.

Mr. Waldegrave: I know of no point sources of discharge of PCBs to the aquatic environment in the United Kingdom. Under an EC directive (85/474/EEC) controlling the marketing and use of PCBs, these substances are now banned from new use throughout the EC member states and those countries within the Paris Commission. The appropriate United Kingdom regulation came into force on June 30 1986.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the extent to which, within the framework of existing UK legislation, when uniform emission standards or environmental quality objectives are adopted, the best available technical means have to be, nationally or through international agreement, taken into account.

Mr. Waldegrave: The policy in the United Kingdom is to use the environmental quality objective approach. This approach does not always require the use of the best available technical means to reduce pollution. Under the daughter directives stemming from the directive on the control of discharges of certain substances into the aquatic environment, the use of best technical means available has to be taken into account for all new discharges. Water authorities are required to consult with my Department in such cases.

Hazardous Substances

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what incentives Her Majesty's Government provide to industry aimed at preventing or reducing the discharge of hazardous substances into the aqueous environment.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United Kingdom observes the "polluter pays" principle and therefore does not give specific incentives to industry to reduce discharges of dangerous substances to the aquatic environment. However, where expenditure on pollution control is part of a wider scheme, already attracting some form of industrial grant, it is of course included.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will detail the amount of money spent in 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 on research and development projects designed to produce low or non-waste and low emission or emission-free technologies.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department spent £5·7 million £5·5 million and £5·8 million in the respective years on reseach and development on waste and emission treatment technologies to reduce wastes and emissions released to the environment.

Environmental Quality Objectives

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken within the last three years to bring closer together the uniform standards adopted by a number of European nations and the United Kingdom's environmental quality objectives.

Mr. Waldegrave: It was agreed at the Bremen North sea conference that both the environmental quality objective and the uniform standards approaches to the control of discharges can be effective and sufficient measures to protect the marine environment. Since that time, the efficacy of the two approaches has been considered within the Paris Commission and will be considered again at next year's London conference on the North sea. The topic is also likely to be reconsidered with the European Commission's fourth environmental action programme. The Government are currently considering their response to the suggestions made by the House of Lords Select Committee on European Committees concerning the unification of the two approaches.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the studies commissioned or completed for Her Majesty's Government in the last three years which compare the environmental quality objective approach to water quality management with the uniform emmission standard approach.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department has sponsored one such study. It is mainly concerned with the implementation of the cadmium directive (1983/513/EEC) in England and Wales. The findings of the report are currently being considered.

Waste (Export)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much waste has been exported from the United Kingdom to Belgium in the last three years to be incinerated at sea.

Mr. Waldegrave: There is no requirement for the Department of the Environment to be informed about exports of waste, but it is believed that there have been no exports of waste in the last three years from the United Kingdom to Belgium for incineration at sea.

Local Government Contracts

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to introduce legislation preventing the inclusion of political conditions in local government contracts; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Boyson: Appropriate provisions will be included in the Local Government Bill to be introduced this Session.

Tillingham Hall, Essex

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be able to issue a decision on the application for development permission at Tillingham hall, Essex.

Mr. Waldegrave: The inspector's report of the inquiry into these proposals was received recently and is being carefully studied. The decision letter will be issued as soon as this consideration has been completed.

"Paying for Local Government"

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the outcome of consultations in England and Wales on the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government".

Mr. Ridley: There have been 1,217 responses received in England and 120 in Wales during the consultation period which closed on 31 October. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I are considering these urgently, but I can confirm that the Government remain determined to undertake a thorough reform of local government finance in England and Wales as a matter of priority, and to propose legislation as soon as practicable. I shall make a further statement in due course.

Radioactivity (Misletoe)

Dr. Mark Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department is taking to monitor levels of radioactive caesium in imported misletoe over the Christmas period.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have taken expert advice about this matter. My advisors conclude that even a prolonged period of standing under such mistletoe would not be harmful. It would not, however, be wise to eat imported —or home grown— mistletoe.

Native Species (Protection)

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will be receiving the advice of the Nature Conservancy Council under section 24 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, about the protection of United Kingdom native species.

Mr. Ridley: I have now received recommendations from the NCC following a detailed review that it has undertaken of whether any animal or plant should be added to or removed from the list of those animals fully protected by schedule 5, or those plants fully protected by schedule 8 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. I have placed a copy of the NCC's report in the Library. Details of the recommendations have been circulated to local authorities and other interested bodies. Representations and other comments should be lodged by 31 January 1987 at the latest.

Council of Environment Ministers

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Council of Environment Ministers meeting on 24 November.

Mr. Waldegrave: I chaired the Council of Environment Ministers on 24 November. My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State led the United Kingdom delegation. This was a successful meeting at which agreement was reached on a number of important issues. In particular three directives which have been before the Council for a considerable time were agreed.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) was able to report to a Committee of the House yesterday, useful improvements on the Commission's proposals for revised standards for noise from new motorcycles were negotiated. We can now give our formal agreement to an amendment strengthening the provisions of directive 78/1015/EEC. The detailed elements are as follows. European standards for replacement silencers will form a further provision of this new directive.

The Council was able to agree a common position on the proposal for a directive on the prevention of environmental pollution by asbestos. The directive aims to prevent asbestos emissions from various sources endangering public health in the Community and contaminating the environment. Member states will be required to ensure that asbestos emissions into the air, asbestos discharges into water and asbestos waste are as far as possible reduced at source or prevented.

The Council also agreed a directive strengthening the provisions of the existing directive 75/439/EEC on the disposal of waste oils. The principal new features are Community emissions limits for combustion installations above 3MW, national controls for combustion in installations below this threshold and a maximum permissible limit for PCBs of 50ppm in regenerated waste oils or in waste oils used as fuel. It was, however, agreed that PCB levels should, wherever possible, be kept below this figure.

The Council formally adopted directives on animal experimentation and the Community water quality information system.

Following discussion of the implications of recent Rhine pollution incidents, the Council adopted a resolution inviting the Commission to review present Community preventive and remedial measures, including the extent of their implementation, and if necessary to present appropriate proposals; and also inviting the Commission to examine the possibility of negotiating bilateral or multilateral agreements with European third countries on the extension of directive 82/501/EEC on major industrial accident hazards and of decision 81/971/EEC on the Community's information system for the control and reduction of pollution caused by hydrocarbons discharged at sea.

An interim resolution welcoming the Commission's proposals for a fourth environmental action programme and commending it for further study was also agreed.

There was a wide ranging discussion on the primordial importance of protecting the public and the environment from harm from nuclear radiation. The Council agreed to consider proposals which the Commission expects to put forward soon.

The Presidency presented a compromise for the large combustion plant directive that promised new acid-free standards for future large combustion plans, and staged reductions in SO2 emissions. The United Kingdom was able to support this. The Council then discussed draft conclusions on the basis for further action, prepared by the Presidency with the assistance of the Commission; unfortunately, a number of member states were unable to agree, and no formal decisions could therefore be reached.

Useful progress was made in discussion on diesel particulates from cars and gaseous emissions from large vehicles. It was also agreed that the Commission would shortly bring forward proposals on harmonisation of speed limits in the Community, and on powers for member states to control the scale of leaded regular petrol.

On the control of chlorofluorocarbons, the Council agreed that the framework of the Community's policy was basically sound, but would keep it under review, recognising that modifications, such as a limit on production, might be required in the light of advancing scientific and technical knowledge.

The Council made some further progress on the draft directive on the sulphur content of gas oil, but was unable to reach final agreement.

The United Kingdom called for Community action on lead in paint, and on antifouling paints containing organotin, and the Commission agreed to consider bringing forward proposals early next year. The United Kingdom also tabled a paper urging upon member states the principals of openness concerning environmental pollution recommended by the tenth report of the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution and accepted by the Government in its response to that report.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

University College of Wales

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to announce further additional funding in respect of pay restructuring for the University College of Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend announced on 6 November at column 490 that he would be willing to provide some further additional funding for academic pay restructuring in the universities if structural improvements could be agreed at a cost that could be afforded, and that he would be initiating discussions to that end. These discussions have only recently begun: it is not yet possible to say how long they will take or what the outcome will be.

United Kingdom Nationals (Overseas Study)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice his Department issues to institutions of higher education about the classification of United Kingdom nationals who study abroad for more than three years as home students for fees purposes.

Mr. Dunn: A student who is a national of a member state of the European Community (including the United Kingdom) is eligible to have his fees for a course designated for mandatory awards purposes in the United Kingdom paid for him by the United Kingdom Government if he has been ordinarily resident in the area of the Community—other than wholly or mainly for the purposes of receiving full-time education — for the relevant three-year period before his course begins, provided he has not previously followed a course equivalent to a designated course, whether in the United Kingdom or elsewhere. A student who has pursued such a course but who meets the residence qualification is eligible to pay the home rate of fee for himself, as is a student who meets the residence qualification who wishes to attend a non-designated course.

The position of the student who has spent all or part of the relevant qualifying period outside the area of the Community, whether for study or for any other purpose, will depend either on whether he remained ordinarily resident in the area of the Community, for example as he might do if his absence abroad was purely temporary, or on whether he can be treated as being ordinarily resident in the Community because he was absent only because he, his spouse or his parent was temporarily employed outside the Community.

Guidance on the interpretation of the ordinary residence requirement has been given to institutions with the various regulations made under the Education (Fees & Awards) Act 1983, copies of which are in the Library.

School Closures

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will state his policy with the regard to the closure of surplus schools, together with the criteria he applies in deciding when a school is and is likely to remain surplus to requirements.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend expects proposals made under the 1980 Education Act to cease to maintain schools to be based on a careful evaluation of their educational and financial merits. In deciding whether to approve such proposals he would take into account the expected demand for places, and he would wish to be satisfied that the new arrangements offered an education better suited to the needs of pupils of all abilities than would be offered by those they replace. These criteria will be elaborated and further explained in the forthcoming Circular "Providing for Quality" which has been issued for comment in draft form.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consideration is given to likely changes in demand for secondary education over the next decade when reaching decisions on closure applications.

Mr. Dunn: The forecast demand for places at a school is one of the factors which my right hon. Friend weighs carefully in considering proposals made under the 1980 Education Act to cease to maintain the school.

Essex Institute of Education

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will reconsider his decision to withhold polytechnic status from the Essex Institute of Education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has made no decisions about further polytechnic designations, on which he awaits advice from the National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Eduction.

Pilot Teacher Appraisal Scheme

Mr. Raffan asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a detailed statement on the Government's pilot teacher appraisal scheme.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend yesterday invited six local education authorities to form a consortium to pilot teacher appraisal in their schools. The six are:

Croydon
Cumbria
Newcastle
Salford
Somerset
Suffolk

The project is to be funded through the education support grant arrangements and a steering group is being established which will involve representatives of the Secretary of State, local education authorities and the teachers' unions.

It is hoped that the pilot work can begin in January.

O-Level Examinations

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report the percentage of children in each local education authority who achieve five or more O-levels within the grades A-C.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986, c. 36]: Data on leavers from maintained schools is as follows.

A-Level Examinations

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report the percentage of children in each local education authority who achieve five or more A-levels within grades A-C.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986, c. 36]: Because of the very small numbers of children achieving five or more A-levels, reliable estimates cannot be produced from the school leavers sample survey.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment and Training Programmes

Mr. Rooker asked the Paymaster General if he will list those employment and training programmes operated by his Department in which right hon. and hon. Members as employers can participate.

Mr. Lee: Right hon. and hon. Members as employers can participate in the following employment and training measures:

YTS
Community Programme
Voluntary Projects Programme
Job Release Scheme
New Workers Scheme
National Priority Skills Scheme
Local Consultancy Grants
Local Training Grants
Wider Opportunities Training Programme
Training for special groups
Management Development Projects
Local Collaborative Projects
Open Tech
Training for Enterprise
Job Introduction Scheme
Adaptation to Premises and Equipment Scheme
Employment Rehabilitation
Sheltered Placement Scheme
Special Aids to Employment
Personal Reader Service.

However, the rules of some of these measures (particularly YTS and the community programme) specifically debar schemes which would involve participants in political activity or any action in support of a political party.

Benefits (Availability for Work Test)

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Paymaster General (1) what cost savings are predicted as a result of the introduction of form UB671A, the availability for work test;

(2) what percentage of the people on the unemployment register he estimates will be adversely affected by the use of form UB671A, the availability for work test.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is not possible to forecast what savings will accrue from the national introduction of the new form which I announced on 28 October. We have not introduced any new rules for entitlement to benefit but have merely changed our procedures to ensure the application of the long-standing legal rules following the recommendations of the Public Accounts Committee. No one entitled to benefit will be adversely affected by the use of the new form at all.

Manchester

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Paymaster General (1) if he will make a statement on the progress made by his Department in the inner city area of Manchester;

(2) if he will give details of actions taken by the inner city task force in Manchester;

(3) if he will give details of the budget of the Manchester inner city task force; and how much has been spent.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Paymaster General if he will list the changes in compiling unemployment figures since 1979 and the date of each change; and what has been the estimated number of people affected.

Mr. Lee: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. and learned Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Fife, Central (Mr. Hamilton) on 6 November 1986, at columns 525-26. A full description of all the changes which have affected the published unemployment count was given on page 422 of the October 1986 edition of the Employment Gazette.

Community Transport Schemes

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Paymaster General (1) whether he has plans to increase the numbers of Manpower Services Commission placements on community transport schemes;

(2) whether he has plans to increase the services offered by community transport schemes by greater use of Manpower Services Commission placements.

Mr. Lee: As part of the development of national initiatives within the community programme Manpower Services Commission officials have had discussion with officials in the Department of Transport about the possibility of an initiative to promote mobility schemes. These might include community transport. No firm proposals have yet been made.

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Paymaster General what problems his Department has found with using Manpower Services Commission placements in community transport schemes.

Mr. Lee: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Homes Insulation

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Paymaster General what recent representations he has received from Help the Aged, Age Concern, citizens advice bureaux and the Leith insulation project supporting the week of action on cold homes, a national campaign from 21 November to 1 December; and if he will make a statement about the funding of such local projects by the Manpower Services Commission.

Mr. Trippier: No recent representations have been made to my right hon. and learned Friend by the organisations mentioned, although I have been approached by Neighbourhood Energy Action. My Department and the Manpower Services Commission, working with the Department of Energy, have established a national initiative within the community programme to fund energy efficiency work. Under the initiative, over 300 projects are currently employing some 5,300 people.

Disabled People

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Paymaster General what is the number of registered disabled people who are unemployed in Dundee and Tayside; and what percentage of the disabled population this represents.

Mr. Lee: There were 159 unemployed registered disabled people registered for employment at jobcentres and careers offices in Dundee and Tayside on 3 October 1986. Information about the total number of unemployed registered disabled people or the size of the disabled population in the area is not available.

Manpower Services Commission

Mr. Dobson asked the Paymaster General what will be the estimated spending by the Manpower Services Commission on television, radio and newspaper advertising, respectively, and other promotional literature in the current year; and what was the total in 1979-80 and each intervening year.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 19 November 1986, c. 215]: I regret that the estimates given for the spending of the Manpower Services Commission on advertising and promotional literature in 1986-87 were inaccurate. Planned and committed expenditure is: TV, £15,700,000; press (including radio) £5,350,000; other promotional, £9,758,000. In addition, the MSC's latest and best estimate is that £4,472,000 has yet to be allocated to specific forms of advertising and promotion. The programmes to benefit include the YTS, adult training, restart, the community programme, the enterprise allowance scheme, the jobcentre service, the technical, vocational and education initiative, professional executive recruitment and the skillcentre training agency.

WALES

Unemployed Persons (Education)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to increase educational opportunities for the unemployed in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The replan initiative for the adult unemployed was introduced by the Department of Education and Science in 1984 and the Welsh Office extended the programme to Wales in 1985. The programme, which is delivered through a network of field officers in England and Wales, aims to identify the educational needs of the unemployed and to develop educational provision to meet those needs. Expenditure on the replan initiative in Wales is expected to be £87,000 in the current financial year and the provision for 1987-88 is £89,000. In addition, local education authorities in Wales are expected to spend £129,000 under the education support grant arrangements in 1986-87 and £113,600 in 1987-88 to increase educational opportunities for the unemployed.

Children (Heart Surgery)

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales if a paediatrician cardiologist is permanently available for children needing heart surgery in South Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: A paediatric cardiologist is not yet permanently available. Referrals may be made to Bristol and a locum consultant attends the University Hospital of Wales, Cardiff. South Glamorgan health authority is seeking to make a permanent appointment for which funds were made available by the Department in April 1986.

Sheep

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the present state of the sheep industry in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The June 1986 provisional census results record a further 2·4 per cent. increase in the sheep breeding flock in Wales, and the industry continues to benefit under the EC sheepmeat regime. In the last marketing year producers in Wales received payments under the sheep variable premium scheme for finished lambs amounting to £21 million and from the sheep annual premium scheme for breeding ewes amounting to £32·1 million. In addition, payments to producers in Wales under the hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme so far this year amounts to £19·9 million.

Abortions

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many abortions have been performed in Wales under the Abortion Act in each year since 1967; how many of these abortions were performed in an emergency to save the life of a mother; and what percentage this latter figure represents of the former.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The number of notifications of legally induced abortions performed in Wales each year since the enactment of the Abortion Act 1967, in April 1968, are given in the following table:

Year	All abortions Number	Notifications of Abortions performed in emergency cases to save the life of the pregnant woman Number	Percentage of all
1968	873 (from 27 April)	—	—
1969	2,187	—	—

Parrott Corporation

Mr. Allan Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to publish the Baker report on the Parrott Corporation.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I have no plans to publish Mr. Baker's report on the Welsh Development Agency's handling of its investment in the Parrott Corporation. Copies have been made available to the Committee of Public Accounts and to the Crown Prosecution Service.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many pupils entered the assisted places scheme for each of the financial years 1981-82 up to 1986-87 and including the estimate for 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The number of new pupils who entered the assisted places scheme in the school year 1981-82 to 1986-87 totals 114, 128, 120, 118, 115 and 123 respectively. The number of places available for new pupils to enter the scheme in the school year 1987-88 is 136.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what were the reasons for the drop in school uniform and travel grants between the years 1984-85 and 1985-86 regarding the assisted places scheme in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: For the school year 1985-86, there are still seven claims for grant for travel and uniforms outstanding.

SCOTLAND

Forestry

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to encourage the planting and management of forests and woodlands for the production of timber and for shelter.

Mr. Rifkind: It is already the Government's policy to encourage the planting and management of forests and woodlands for the production of timber. Many of our forests and woodlands provide shelter for stock on adjoining land, and grants are available for the planting of trees as shelter belts.

Heating Allowances

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received from the retired section of the National Asssociation of Local Government Officers' Lothian regional council branch about heating allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend received a letter from the retired section of the National Association of Local Government Officers' Lothian regional council branch on 22 September making representations about heating costs. An official reply was sent on 3 October.

Munn and Dunning Reports

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Scottish Education Department has any plans to publish material for use in schools as part of the Munn and Dunning report on curriculum proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The consultative committee on the curriculum, working through central support groups in each standard grade subject and assisted by national development officers, is co-ordinating the preparation and dissemination of appropriate teaching materials. The Government are providing funds of £0·75 million for this in the current financial year in addition to the £4·14 million spent previously on central support for standard grade, including the preparation of materials.

Salmon Act 1986

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the composition of the advisory committee to be set up under the Salmon Act 1986.

Mr. John MacKay: As announced on 23 October, Professor George Dunnet, regius professor of natural history at the University of Aberdeen has agreed to serve as the Salmon Advisory Committee's first chairman. Fisheries Ministers in Great Britain are currently receiving nominations for committee membership from representative bodies concerned with all aspects of salmon. Full details of the composition of the committee will be given as soon as we have completed our consideration of the nominations received. The Salmon Advisory Committee is a non-statutory body and is not established under the Salmon Act 1986.

Drug Addicts

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will direct the Greater Glasgow health board to issue drug addicts in the area with new needles on a replacement basis free of charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The Government are considering this matter urgently and will be making their intentions clear as soon as possible.

Jordanhill School

Mr. Roy Jenkins asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to inform the governors of Jordanhill college how much grant they will get to run the college school in the 1987 to 1988 session; what assessment he has made of the levels of funding necessary to ensure that the new admissions to the primary one and secondary one classes will be possible; and if he will make such funds available.

Mr. Rifkind: Final decisions on the allocation of public expenditure for 1987-88 have not yet been taken. The governors have, however, been informed that I do not intend that the school's expenditure in 1987-88 should differ significantly from the budget which they might have been expected to approve had no changes been in prospect in the arrangements for managing the school. The question of intake is for the governors to decide.

Pupil Teacher Ratios

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the average pupil-teacher ratio in each of the last 10 years for primary and secondary schools, respectively.

Mr. Rifkind: The information for Scottish education authority schools at September each year is set out in the table below:

Pupil teacher ratios

	Primary	Secondary
1976	22·4	14·7
1977	22·4	14·7
1978	21·4	14·6
1979	20·3	14·4
1980	20·3	14·4
1981	20·3	14·4
1982	20·4	14·3
1983	20·3	14·0
1984	20·4	13·7
1985[1]	20·4	13·5

Health Education Group

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report expenditure for the current year by the Scottish health education group on (a) smoking, (b) alcohol, (c) diet and (d) acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is as follows:

Estimated expenditure by Scottish Health Education Group 1986-87

Subject	£
Smoking	269,400
Alcohol	246,000
Diet	85,500
Acquired immune deficiency syndrome	250,000

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, in view of Ministers recent re-assessment of health education priorities, what proposals he has to redefine the role of the Scottish health education group.

Mr. John MacKay: None.

Labour Force Survey

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Manpower Services Commission last compiled a labour force survey covering the Dundee and Tayside area; and if he will publish figures in the Official Report showing those in work and out of work by occupation.

Mr. Lang: In Scotland, the labour force survey is conducted by the General Register Office for Scotland on behalf of the Department of Employment and the European Community. The sample size is too small for reliable estimates to be published either for Dundee or for the Tayside area.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Manpower Services Commission last compiled a labour force survey in Scotland; and if he will publish in the Official Report data (a) for occupations in the building industry showing the estimated numbers in work and out of work and (b) for occupations in the National Health Service showing the numbers in work and out of work.

Mr. Lang: In Scotland, the labour force survey is conducted by the General Register Office for Scotland on behalf of the Department of Employment and the European Community. The latest available estimates, from the spring 1985 survey, are given in the following tables.

(a) Employment and unemployment in the construction industry Scotland, Spring 1985

Order(s)	Types of occupation	Number of people
In employment: by occupation
4	Professional and related in science, engineering technology and similar fields (eg civil engineers, quantity surveyors)	11,000
6	Clerical and related	11,000
11	Materials processing; making and repairing (excluding metal and electrical) (eg carpenters and joiners)	20,000
12	Processing, making, repairing and related (metal and electrical) (eg plumbers, gas fitters, scaffolders	33,000
13	Painting, repetitive assembling, product inspecting, packaging and related	16,000
14	Construction, mining and related not identified elsewhere (eg bricklayers, plasterers, builders' labourers)	56,000
15	Transport operating, materials moving and storing and related	10,000
Other	Other occupations	18,000
TOTAL IN EMPLOYMENT		175,000
Not in employment
	Looking for work in Scotland during the week prior to the survey, whose last job was in the construction industry, and who had been unemployed for less than three years	36,000

(b) Employment and unemployment in medical and other health services and veterinary services (Class 95 of SIC 1980) Scotland, Spring 1985

Order(s)	Types of occupation	Number of people
In employment: by occupation
2	Professional and related in education, welfare and health (eg medical practitioners, nurses)	85,000
6	Clerical and related	13,000
9	Catering, cleaning, hairdressing and other personal services (including porters, ambulancemen etc)	33,000
Other	Other occupations	13,000
TOTAL IN EMPLOYMENT		144,000

Notes:

(1) All figures are subject to sampling errors. The survey covered under half a per cent. of those resident in private households, but not those who reside in institutions.

(2) The sample size is too small to provide a reliable breakdown of the number not in employment by previous occupation in the construction industry, or to give a reliable estimate for unemployed health workers.

(3) The occupation "orders" relate to the 1980 classification of occupations.

Housing (Dundee)

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the number of starts and completions of houses in both public and private sector housing in Dundee in each of the past five years.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is set out in the table below:

House starts and completions, Dundee district

Year	Starts		Completions
	Public sector	Private sector	Public sector	Private sector
1981	118	224	351	160
1982	240	364	162	162
1983	88	484	148	469
1984	219	434	155	470
1985	133	113	222	250

Services for the Elderly

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average weekly cost of providing the following services for the elderly (a) meals-on-wheels, (b) a home help and (c) a hospital bed.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested is as follows:

Average cost per week 1984-85

(a) Meals on Wheels per client	3·26
(b) Home help per client	13·75
(c) Hospital bed per geriatric patient	259·00

Those figures do not take account of interest charges on capital or income accruing by way of payment from those in receipt of meals on wheels or home help services. The level of home help and meals on wheels services varies in accordance with the local authorities' general policy and perception of individual needs.

Building Apprenticeships

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information his Department has on the number of apprenticeships started in Scotland in the building trade in each of the past five years; and what comparable figures it holds for Dundee and Tayside.

Mr. Lang: The numbers of new entrants to the construction industry in Scotland receiving off the job training, and the numbers of newly registered apprenticeships are shown in the table below. The Construction Industry Training board, which compiles these statistics, reports that not all new entrants become registered apprentices, and they cannot do so until they are in full employment: for many, this does not occur until they have completed YTS training.

	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985
New entrants	3,203	2,914	3,666	4,229	4,215
New registrations of apprenticeships	2,793	2,536	2,232	2,552	n/a

No information is available for Dundee and Tayside.

AIDS

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what extra money he will allocate to Tayside health board to enable it to combat acquired immune deficiency syndrome (a) by granting additional resources for treatment of acquired immune deficiency syndrome patients at King's Cross hospital, Dundee and (b) through various forms of public education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: My noble Friend the Minister of State announced on 23 November the membership of a national working party to advise on the most appropriate and cost-effective method of organising services for patients infected with the AIDS virus and to quantify the resource costs for the hospital and community health services and family practitioner services. One of the members of the working party is Dr. Ramsay Small, chief administrative medical officer of Tayside health board. The question whether additional resources should be allocated to health boards in respect of this disease will be considered in the light of the working party's recommendations. So far the Government have committed £1·4 million centrally to fund measures, including a public education campaign, to control the spread of AIDS in Scotland.

Disabled People

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of registered disabled people in Dundee and Tayside.

Mr. John MacKay: Local authorities are required to inform themselves of the numbers of chronically sick and disabled persons within their areas. They are not, however, required to keep registers for the purpose, and information on the number of persons in particular categories of disability is not collected centrally.

Diabetes

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the incidence of diabetes in Dundee and Tayside.

Mr. John MacKay: Information on the incidence of diabetes in Dundee and Tayside is not available centrally.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the incidence of death from cervical cancer in each health board in Scotland in each of the past five years; and if he will express such figures as a rate per 100,000 of the female population.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested relating to the number of deaths classified as being due to cervical cancer (ICD[1] 180) as the underlying cause of death in each health board is shown in the following table:

Deaths from cervical cancer in each Health Board in Scotland, 1981-85

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the names and locations of areas of 10 hectares or more in Caithness and Sutherland which have received approval for planting grants under the forestry grants scheme since February 1985, giving the hectarage in each case.

Mr. John Mackay [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1986, c.389]: The information covering the period February 1985 to mid-November 1986 is as follows:

TRANSPORT

M1 (Lighting)

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement on those lighting units on the M1 motorway between London and Wakefield which were unlit at 6 am on Friday 14 November;

(2) if he will make a statement on what dates and times of the day the monthly inspection for September, October and November of each section of carriageway lighting was carried out on the M1 between London and Wakefield;

(3) how many unlit units of lighting there were on the M1 motorway between Staples Corner and Toddington service station at 6 am on Friday 14 November; on what date they were reported defective; and when they will be re-set or repaired;

(4) how many units of lighting were lit on the M1 motorway between Staples Corner and Newport Pagnell service station between 12 noon and 1 pm on Monday 17 November; on what date they were reported defective; and when they will be re-set or repaired.

Mr. Moore: The details are not available for the precise times and dates referred to but the general position over the last three months period is as follows:

M1 Motorway Section of Lighting	Date if an Inspection in 1986			Most recent reports
	September	October	November	Number Unlit at night	Total in service
Staples Corner to London boundary	8	6	3	83	[1]1,200

[1] Approximately.

The numbers lit by day are not regularly reported. Lamps are primarily activated by photo-electric cells and can therefore be lit during daylight hours for a number of reasons, such as poor visibility. I am, however, looking further into the points raised by the right hon. Gentleman and will write to him shortly.

Travel Concessions

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether Her Majesty's Government are providing any funds to county and district councils and transport authorities to assist with the implementations of travel concessions to handicapped people under the provisions of the Transport Act 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Expenditure on concessionary travel is in general a matter for local authorities, which make decisions in the light of available resources and their overall priorities. In support of their total expenditure, authorities receive block grant through annual rate support grant settlements, and the calculation of their entitlement to grant includes an assessment of their need to spend on services in the light of the public expenditure provision for those services. For 1986-87, the provision for spending on concessionary fare schemes in England was £223 million, while for 1987-88 an increase in provision of £21 million has been announced.

Brentwood and Ingatestone Bypass

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the most recent assessment of the volume of traffic on the A12 Brentwood bypass; and how this compares with the volume of traffic before the opening of the adjacent section of the M25.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The average 18-hour flow in August this year was about 50,000 vehicles per day. The comparable figure for 1982, before the first Essex section of the M25 was opened, was 25,000 vehicles per day.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is now in a position to say when noise barriers will be erected close to the Brentwood and Ingatestone bypass of the A12.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are authorising the provision of some 1,200m of noise barriers in the Ongar road area of Brentwood. Similar measures are not justified at Ingatestone. I am writing to my hon. Friend with the details.

MV Derbyshire (Inquiry)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, in view of the accident to the vessel Kowloon Bridge, he will now reconsider his decision not to establish an inquiry into the disappearance of her sister ship Derbyshire in 1980.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the statement that I made to the House on 25 November.

Lorry Tyres

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied that the structure and rubber compound used to build truck tyres are meeting laid-down performance specifications; and what steps his Department takes to monitor compliance with these specifications.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are at present no legal requirements regarding the structure or rubber compounds used in the design and construction of truck tyres. In practice, most of them comply with the requirements of ECE regulation 54 – currently being considered for inclusion in construction and use regulations. All retreaded tyres have to comply with British Standard BS AU 144b: 1977. The tyres fitted to trucks are checked for load capability and condition as part of their annual test.

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Transport what tests have been undertaken by the Transport and Road Research Laboratory into whether tyres currently used by lorries on motorways are suitable for the long periods of high speed use to which they are subjected.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Transport and Road Research Laboratory has not conducted tests on the suitability of lorry tyres for long periods of motorway use. We have no reason to doubt the reliability of modern tyres provided that they are properly maintained, inflated to the correct pressure and not overloaded.

Lorries (Weights)

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Transport in what proportion of cases tested by his Department in the past year the weight of truck loads using motorways complied with legislation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Separate figures are not available for motorways, but in 1985 about 75 per cent. of all goods vehicles check-weighed were within the statutory limits. The checks are not random, so the figures overstate the proportion of overloading.

Chapter 2 Aircraft

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to permit chapter 2 aircraft in British ownership to continue flying in and out of British airports until such time as foreign airlines have to comply with the same noise regulations.

Mr. Michael Spicer [pursuant to his reply, 17 November 1986, c. 22]: I can assure my hon. Friend that the Government's policy, and their position in current international negotiations, is that United Kingdom airlines should not be discriminated against in any new noise regulations that are developed.

Dangerous Substances (Carriage)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a statement on the latest position regarding the Dangerous Substances (Carriage by Road in Packages Etc.) Regulations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 20 November 1986, c. 320]: These regulations were laid before Parliament today. They will come into force on 6 April next year. Operators will have a further year to formalise training arrangements for all drivers not already covered.

The regulations control the transport by road of dangerous substances in drums, bottles, carboys or skips. They cover both manufacturers and suppliers of specified dangerous substances as well as vehicle operators and drivers. Important new requirements, in addition to that for training, include proper design, construction and maintenance of vehicles carrying dangerous goods, provision by the consignor of information about loads carried to the operator, possession of information in writing about the load by the driver, supervision and safe parking of vehicles carrying certain substances and fitting of orange warning plates on vehicles when required.

A new enforcement regime involving the factory inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive as the enforcement authority with assistance from the police and this Department's traffic examiners will be effective in maintaining the high standard of safety in this country.

These regulations complete a package of controls over the carriage of dangerous goods by road. All piecemeal and often archaic legislation on this subject, some going back nearly 60 years, has now been either repealed or replaced by these new regulations.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

River Elbe (Dredgings)

Mr. Cohen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions Her Majesty's Government have had with West German authorities to dump dredgings from the Elbe in seas around Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I understand from technical discussions at official level took place up to the middle of last year between the Scottish Office and German officials about the level of contamination of dredged spoil from the Elbe. However, no licence has been issued for the disposal of such material in British seas.

Organic Farming

Mr. Janner asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he will make provision for the payment of grants to farmers for experiments into the improvement of organic farming methods;

(2) whether he will make resources available in Government-financed agricultural institutions for the expansion of research into the extension and improvement of methods of organic farming.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Grants are already available under the agriculture improvement scheme for investments in organic farming to farmers satisfying the general eligibility conditions of the scheme. Although the scheme does not make specific provision for grant-aid to experimental projects, my Department undertakes or sponsors a range of work of relevance to organic farming, including nitrogen fixation in white clover, the production of crop varieties which are resistant to pests and diseases, and the development of novel non-chemical methods of pest control. The Department has monitored soils, pests diseases and crops on a commercial organic farm and is funding a research project on the nitrogen balance and nitrogen cycle in organic farming systems. If the industry wished to see additional work undertaken, the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service would be pleased to consider proposals for further research commissioned and paid for by the industry.

Animal Feedingstuffs

Mr. Colvin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will consider making it compulsory for agricultural merchants to put the ingredients of animal feedingstuffs on the bags.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The EC directive which governs the labelling of feedingstuffs is currently under review in an EC expert committee. While this exercise is in progress we have no plans to alter United Kingdom legislative provisions in respect of ingredient listing.

Fast Food Industry

7. Mr. Marland asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about the quantity of home-grown food consumed in the fast food industry.

Mr. Donald Thompson: It is not possible to identify the amount of home grown food consumed in the fast food sector, but there is no doubt that this sector offers a growing market for United Kingdom farm produce.

Mr. Andy Stewart asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about the proportion of total food consumed in the United Kingdom that is consumed in fast food outlets; and what trend the figures show.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Ministry does not collect statistics specifically on the fast food sector. However, limited information from official and trade sources suggests that expenditure on "fast" food has been increasing in recent years and may now be approaching 10 per cent. of total expenditure on food in the United Kingdom.

Data Processing Staff

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many data processing staff are in post within his Department; and how many of those are trainees.

Mr. Jopling: There are 117 staff in the data processing grades, none of which are trainees. Above these grades there are 208 staff in posts requiring the knowledge and skills of the ADP functional specialism, where the main areas are systems analysis, programming and operations, and a further 16 under training.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what steps have been taken by his Department to monitor the welfare of livestock exported from Britain in transit in other European Economic Community member states; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps he is taking to enforce animal welfare legislation in relation to the transport of livestock exported from the United Kingdom; and if he expects any prosecutions to be initiated.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Under the Export of Animals (Protection) Order 1981, all food animals exported from Great Britain must, immediately before the journey, be rested for at least 10 hours and offered food and water at an officially approved lairage premises. The animals may be exported only if they have been certified as fit to travel by one of my veterinary staff. Two-tier vehicles used for these exports are subject to approval by my Department, and the animals must be loaded in the presence of an official.

Once the livestock enter the territory of another member state their welfare becomes the responsibility of that country in accordance with the requirements of Council directive 77/489/EEC. If any welfare problem comes to my Department's attention we take it up with the authorities of the member state concerned. Monitoring exercises have from time to time been carried out in co-operation with importing countries, but under national and European Community law the United Kingdom Government have neither the responsibility nor the power to monitor transport in other member states.

As regards enforcement in the United Kingdom, my Department has been investigating recent allegations about exports of sheep to establish whether there is any evidence that breaches of United Kingdom law have occurred.

Mr. Hancock asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will take action against the exporters of three live elephants in a steel container to Hong Kong from Southampton; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will introduce regulations to ensure better standards for the export of non-farm animals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Transit of Animals (General) Order 1973 already affords extensive protection to the welfare of all animals in transit, and I see no need to introduce further measures. This legislation covers that part of an international journey which takes place within British jurisdiction. Enforcement is the responsibility of individual local authorities.

As regards the export of the three elephants in question, one of my veterinary staff examined the steel container to be used and was satisfied that it was suitable and that the animals were fit to travel.

Intervention Stores

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish in the Official Report the current contents of each European Economic Community intervention foodstore in Britain; and if he will indicate the total annual cost to the taxpayer of the operation of such foodstores.

Mr. Jopling: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when regulation 765/86 was considered by the management committee of the EEC's common agricultural policy; which nations fail to benefit from the special arrangements provided by the regulation; which nations have so far benefited from sales under the regulation; and how the representative of Her Majesty's Government on that Committee voted on the regulation.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 25 November 1986, c. 187]: Regulation 765/86 was adopted by the Commission on 15 March 1986 following an opinion from the Milk and Milk Products Management Committee on 28 February. The regulation applies only to butter at least 18 months old and the list of eligible destinations is restricted to the USSR, Mongolia, India and Pakistan in order to avoid competition with normal commercial sales. The regulation provides at least some return for food which might otherwise not find a market at all. The United Kingdom voted in favour of the regulation for the reasons given in reply to my hon. Friend on 16 April 1986, at column 331. Prices are set by competitive tender and to date all bids have been for sales to the USSR.

Monetary Compensatory Amounts

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply of 20 November, whether any monetary co-efficients fall to be applied to monetary compensation amounts in respect of sales of beef under regulation 2670/88 and sales of butter under regulation 765/86; and what amount is involved in pence per pound.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 25 November 1986, c. 187]: Monetary co-efficients are not applied to monetary compensatory amounts.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Personal Pensions

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to publish detailed proposals for the tax treatment of personal pensions; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Inland Revenue has, with my authority, today published a consultative document setting out the proposed tax rules for the new pensions arrangements. A copy has been placed in the Library.

I believe that these proposals, which follow on from the changes already introduced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services, offer a new pensions deal for the 10 million employees in this country who do not belong to an occupational pension scheme, and there will be a wider pensions choice for all employees.

Changes in the tax rules will make it easier and cheaper for any employer to set up a simplified pension scheme with the benefit of tax relief. And the same tax reliefs will be given to the new personal pension schemes which will be open to all employees.

We also envisage improvements in the rules for retirement annuities which will be particularly welcome by self-employed people nearing retirement. Finally, we propose much greater transferability between different pension arrangements. In the past barriers to mobility, including the existing provisions for pensions, have been a drag on the country's economic performance. Improving job mobility is an important Government objective. The new proposals will give much greater opportunity for people to have a pension arrangement which they can take with them when they change jobs.

Company Profits, Taxation and Investment

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1970 the change in percentage terms on the basis of 1980 prices of (a) company profits, (b) company taxation, (c) distributed profits, (d) undistributed profits and (e) investment in plant and machinery.

Mr. MacGregor: There are no price index numbers which are fully appropriate for revaluing the information requested at (a), (b), (c) and (d) at 1980 prices. Figures of investment in plant and machinery by broad sector at 1980 prices are given in table 10.2 of "United Kingdom National Accounts" which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Central Statistical Office

Mr. Higgins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the Central Statistical Office to publish an up-to-date national or public sector balance sheet.

Mr. Lawson: It is hoped to publish summary national and sector balance sheets for end-years 1975 to 1985 in Economic Trends in spring 1987. These will include estimates of the physical assets held by each sector and the nation as a whole. Full financial balance sheets for the public sector and other sectors for end-1977 to end-1984 were published in the June 1986 issue of Financial Statistics.

Exchange Rate (Yen)

Mr. Malins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing information available to him on the average annual exchange rate each year from 1970 to 1985 with estimates for 1986 for (i) yen per United States dollar, (ii) yen per deutschmark, (iii) yen per pound sterling and (iv) during relevant years, yen per ecu.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The annual average exchange rates for 1970 to 1985, and estimates for 1986, can be derived from various editions of CSO Financial Statistics (table 13.1). The annual average yen-ecu rate for 1980 to 1985, and an estimate for 1986 is:

	Yen-ecu
1980	313·99
1981	245·71
1982	243·75
1983	211·16
1984	187·18
1985	180·74
1986[1]	164·50

[1] Estimated.

Income Tax

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the tax yield for the higher rate incomes falling within each band of 40 per cent., 50 per cent., 55 per cent. and 60 per cent.; and if he will give the total yield figure for the current financial year.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Value Added Tax

Mrs. Peacock asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of the compositional criteria on which value added tax is levied on various types of cereal bar biscuits.

Mr. Brooke: There is no standard list of ingredients which determines the liability to VAT of cereal bars or confectionery generally. Cereal bars are liable to VAT at the standard rate if they fall within the legal provision which charges VAT on "chocolates, sweets and similar confectionery", or on "biscuits and other confectionery (not including cakes) wholly or partly covered with chocolate or some product similar in taste and appearance." It would be impracticable to lay down compositional criteria and individual cases have to be decided on their merits.

Football Pools

Mr. Alton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the expected revenue from the levy on income from football pools in 1986-87.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. Jim Coe

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Minister for the Civil Service what is the Civil Service grade of Mr. Jim Coe.

Mr. Luce: The deputy chief press secretary at 10 Downing street, Mr. Jim Coe, has the Civil Service grade of grade 5 within the open structure.

THE ARTS

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts if he will list the arts functions, theatres, art galleries and museums he has visited during the past 12 months.

Mr. Luce: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

DEFENCE

Departmental Initiatives

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list initiatives by his Department which have been of benefit specifically to the north-east, north-west and Yorkshire and Humberside regions since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As I said in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Langbaurgh (Mr. Holt) on 4 November 1986 at column 795, we are constantly searching for opportunities to secure a more even spread of defence employment across the regions. However, all proposals will need to stand on their economic and operational merits.

It is our policy to place equipment orders, wherever practicable, by competitive tendering and this policy has brought significant benefit to the defence budget and to the taxpayer. There are, however, occasions when we place work in response to wider and relevant factors.

By way of example, I refer my hon. Friend to our decision on 28 January 1985, at column 21, to order a type 22 frigate from Cammell Laird and a type 23 frigate from Swan Hunter on 15 July 1986 at column 853.

Both orders are of assistance to the areas concerned.

International Military Services

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the recent visit of an Iranian delegation to the United Kingdom under the auspices of International Military Services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: IMS, before the Iranian revolution, had a number of infrastructure contracts with the Iranian Government. These contracts have either been terminated or have fallen into abeyance. There are, however, a number of contractual matters relating to them which still require to be settled between IMS and the Iranians, and the recent discussions with IMS are part of a continuing dialogue on these outstanding contractual points. The question of the United Kingdom supply of any defence equipment was not addressed.

Service Bases (Contingency Hospitals)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what information he has about plans to convert all or part of RAF Bicester base in Oxfordshire into a United States wartime contingency hospital;

(2) what information he has about plans to convert all or part of RAF Feltwell base in Cambridgeshire into a United States wartime contingency hospital;

(3) what information he has about plans to convert all or part of the army base at Tidworth in Hampshire into a United States wartime contingency hospital;

(4) what information he has about plans to convert all or part of RAF Locking base in Somerset into a United States wartime contingency hospital;

(5) what information he has about plans to convert all or part of the Army base at Bulford in Dorset into a United States wartime contingency hospital;

(6) what information he has about plans to convert all or part of the Army base at Colerne in Wiltshire into a United States wartime contingency hospital;

(7) what information he has about plans to convert all or part of RAF Borden base in Hampshire into a United States wartime contingency hospital;

(8) what information he has about plans to convert all or part of RAF Waterbeach in Cambridgeshire into a United States wartime contingency hospital;

(9) what information he has about plans to convert all or part of RAF Newton base in Nottinghamshire into a United States wartime contingency hospital;

(10) what information he has about plans to convert all or part of the air force base at Lakenheath into a United States wartime contingency hospital;

(11) what information he has about plans to convert all or part of RAF Kemble base in Gloucestershire into a United States wartime contingency hospital.

Mr. Freeman: Contingency hospitals exist at the following RAF stations:

Little Rissington
Nocton Hall
Chessington
Bicester
Feltwell
Upwood

In addition, permission has been given for the establishment of contingency wartime hospitals at the following locations:

RAF Locking
RM Condor, Arbroath

Contingency wartime hospitals do not exist at Bordon, Newton, Waterbeach, Cosford, Colerne, Bulford, Tidworth, Lakenheath or Kemble.

Otterburn Training Area

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the areas covered by the proposals he is now considering for extension of the Otterburn training area.

Mr. Freeman: There are no proposals at present to extend Otterburn training area.

Equestrian Events

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish figures of the number of man days devoted by service personnel to assistance at equestrian events.

Mr. Freeman: I regret that I have nothing to add to the answer I gave my hon. Friend on 6 November, at column 577.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Abortions

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the numbers of non-National Health Service abortions performed under Agency arrangements on National Health Service patients resident in each regional health authority, and in each district health authority, in England and Wales in 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Newton: The information is shown in the table:

Areas for which no such abortions were performed are omitted.

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are numbers of deaths attributed to legal abortion in England and Wales in each of the years 1960 to 1985 inclusive.

Mr. Newton: The available statistics from the registration of deaths are shown in the tables. Because of changes in the international classification of diseases, figures from 1979 to date are not comparable with those of earlier years.

Before 1979 it is not possible to distinguish between spontaneous abortion and other forms of abortion, and statistics for this period include maternal deaths where the interval between the onset of the maternal condition and death is up to one year.

From 1979, a maternal death is defined as the death of a woman while pregnant or within 42 days of termination of pregnancy, irrespective of the duration and the site of the pregnancy, from any cause related to or aggravated by the pregnancy or its management but not from accidental or incidental causes.

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the numbers of National Health Service abortions, and of non-National Health Service abortions, performed in Great Britain on women resident in each health board in Scotland in 1984 and 1985 and the estimated numbers of women aged 15-44 years resident in each health board in 1984.

Mr. Newton: The exact information requested can be produced only at disproportionate cost. However, readily available figures are shown in the table.

Pharmaceutical Companies

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of (i) British companies and (ii) international companies supplying drugs to the National Health Service which are able to increase their profit targets because they employ United Kingdom research staff; how many additional staff are involved; and what is the additional cost to the National Health Service in each category for the current financial year.

Mr. Newton: The number of United Kingdom research staff employed is not a factor which affects the profit targets of pharmaceutical companies supplying drugs to the National Health Service.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of (i) British companies and (ii) international companies which currently supply drugs to the National Health Service; how many staff in his Department scrutinise their accounts for excess profits from such trade with the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The total number of companies supplying drugs to the National Health Service exceeds 200. Over 60 companies supply drugs in sufficient quantities to require the submission of full financial returns under the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme. Nine of these major companies are owned wholly or mainly in the United Kingdom, although several of these would generally be regarded as international companies. Seventeen administration group staff and accountants are employed whole time in the operation of the PPRS.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the cost in the last financial year, and the estimated cost in (i) the current financial year and (ii) the next financial year of the supply of drugs to the National Health Service, and if he will breakdown these figures by (a) British companies and (b) international companies providing these drugs.

Mr. Newton: The cost of drugs for the National Health Service in England in 1985-86 was £1,574 million. The provisional estimate for 1986-87 is £1,670 million. The other information requested by the hon. Member is not available. For the companies providing full financial returns under the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme in 1984, the proportion of National Health Service sales which were by companies wholly or mainly owned in the United Kingdom was estimated to be about one third of the total.

Soviet Foodstuff (Radioactivity)

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what guarantee as regards contamination has been given to the United Kingdom in respect of consumption of goods imported from the Soviet Union since the Chernobyl catastrophe in the Ukraine; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will consider making representations to the Soviet Union seeking on-site inspection of agricultural products, dairy products, fish and tinned food products in the Soviet Union before they enter the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: United Kingdom imports from the Soviet Union of food for human consumption are subject to monitoring for radiation contamination by port health authorities as part of the European Community measures introduced by European Community Council regulations following the Chernobyl nuclear accident. Foods imported into the United Kingdom from the Soviet Union must be accompanied by a certificate stating that they comply with the maximum levels for radiocaesium in food set out in European Community Council Regulation (EEC) No. 1707/86 as extended by Regulation No. 3020/86.

We are satisfied that current health regulations are satisfactory and we have no plans to seek any additional public health checks on food imported from the Soviet Union.

Blood Supplies (Cost)

Mr. John Browne asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give (a) the revenue figure attributed to the supply of blood to in-patients in National Health Service paybeds and (b) the calculated costs of supplying the blood.

Mr. Newton: Information is not available on the costs of blood to in-patients occupying National Health Service paybeds. Paybed charges in acute hospitals incorporate a 1 per cent. addition for supplying blood, reflecting the fact that in 1984-85 the total revenue costs of the Blood Transfusion Service amounted to 1 per cent. of the total revenue costs of NHS acute hospitals. No charge is made for blood supply in long-stay or psychiatric hospitals as this service is rarely required.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what account has been taken in constructing the scales of supplementary benefit of the substantial increase in house insurance premiums.

Mr. Major: The supplementary benefit scale rates are intended to meet all normal day-to-day living expenses except housing costs, but including insurance of the contents of the home. Claimants who are owner-occupiers or who are otherwise liable for the maintenance and insurance of the structure of their homes receive a special addition of £1·85 a week, increasing to £1·95 a week from April 1987. Where the actual cost of insurance exceeds the standard allowance a higher allowance may be payable if, because of special circumstances (for example high fire risk) higher than average expenditure is justified.

Education Maintenance Allowances

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the disregards were last set for young persons over the age of 16 years attending school, or attending colleges of further education as far as the treatment of education maintenance allowances for dependants in obtaining social security is concerned; and if he will make it his policy to raise them in line with inflation.

Mr. Major: The disregards for these allowances under the supplementary benefit scheme were established in 1978. We have no plans to increase them.

AIDS

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on funding for the public health laboratory service and on its programme of work connected with the acquired immune deficiency syndrome virus.

Mrs. Currie: Funding of the public health laboratory service by this Department has increased from £22 million in 1982-83 to £29 million in 1986-87. In real terms, at 1986-87 prices, this represents an increase of £2 million between 1982-83 and 1986-87. The Department has provided the public health laboratory service with an additional £740,000 per annum since 1985-86 for work on AIDS, mainly diagnostic testing. In addition the service has funded other AIDS related work costing some £500,000 from its existing resources.

The future funding of the public health laboratory service is under consideration; no decisions have yet been taken.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the level of current expenditure and in each of the last four years on, respectively, research into an acquired immune deficiency syndrome cure or vaccine, screening of persons for acquired immune deficiency syndrome antibodies, advice on counselling for acquired immune deficiency syndrome victims, national publicity for a public health education programme, regional publicity, support for voluntary bodies combating acquired immune deficiency syndrome and clinical care, including hospices, for acquired immune deficiency syndrome victims; and how much is now planned for each of the next three years.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Disabled People

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) each of the additional benefits that have been made available since 1983 for disabled people and (b) each benefit which has been withdrawn since 1983 that was available to disabled people together with an estimate of the annual cost of each of these items as far as the impact on disabled people is concerned.

Mr. Major: The information requested is set out in the following table:

Benefit	Additional	Withdrawn	Financial impact on disabled
(1) Industrial injury benefit	—	April 1983	Broadly neutral, because the money saved (£5 million in 1983-84) was used to pay industrial disablement benefit earlier and to waive the contribution conditions for sickness benefit and invalidity benefit payable to those incapacitated by industrial disablement.
(2) War pensioners vehicle scheme	—	November 1983	Replaced by war pensioners mobility supplement.
(3) War pensioners mobility supplement	November 1983	—	Replaced war pensioners vehicle scheme. Increased spending on mobility for war disabled (£0·2 million in 1983-84).
(4) Non-contributory invalidity pension	—	November 1984	Replaced by severe disablement allowance payable at the same rate.
(5) Severe disablement allowance	November 1984	—	Replaced non-contributory invalidity pension.
(6) Special hardship allowance	—	October 1986	Replaced by reduced earnings allowance payable at the same rate.
(7) Reduced earnings allowance	October 1986	—	Replaced special hardship allowance.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much of the additional public expenditure announced in the Chancellor's recent autumn statement will be for the direct and specific benefit of disabled people.

Mr. Major: The growth in spending on health and personal social services in England of over £1 billion in 1987-88 compared with 1986-87 will benefit services for disabled people as well as other services. Health and personal social services funding is not generally earmarked centrally for particular services.

The latest estimate of expenditure on those social security benefits designed to meet the needs of disabled people will be included in the 1987 public expenditure White Paper.

Maternal Deaths

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of maternal deaths registered in England and Wales in each of the three-year periods 1979 to 1981 and 1982 to 1984 which were of women born in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the Republic of Ireland, (c) the New Commonwealth and Pakistan, (d) India, Pakistan, Bangladesh and Sri Lanka, (e) the West Indies, (f) Africa, (g) Gibraltar, Malta and Cyprus, (h) New Commonwealth countries not included in (d) to (g), (i) foreign and Commonwealth countries not included in (a) to (h), and (j) country unstated; and if he will subdivide these into (i) direct maternal deaths, (ii) indirect maternal deaths, (iii) fortuitous maternal deaths and (iv) late maternal deaths.

Mrs. Currie: The table shows the number of deaths registered in England and Wales from 1979 to 1981 and 1982 to 1984 by selected country of birthplace for (i) direct and (ii) indirect maternal deaths. From the statistics of death registrations, it is not possible to identify separately either fortuitous or late maternal deaths.

Hartlepool

Mr. Leadbitter asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many men and women are in receipt of supplementary allowance and supplementary benefit and board and lodging allowance in Hartlepool.

Mr. Lyell: Information is not available in the form requested. Statistics are not kept as to the sex of claimants nor as to whether they are in board and lodging. The statistics available show that on 13 August 1986, a total of 13,264 claimants were receiving supplementary benefit from the Department's office in Hartlepool, of whom 9,612 were receiving supplementary allowance.

Data Processing Staff

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many data processing staff are in post within his Department; and how many of those are trainees.

Mr. Lyell: The number of data processing staff within the Department is as follows:

Grade	Number
Principals	57	includes 1 trainee
Senior Executive Officers	185	includes 1 trainee
Higher Executive Officers	459·5	includes 10 trainees
Executive Officers	758	includes 174·5 trainees
Senior Data Processors	302	includes 24 trainees
Data Processors	1,128·5	includes 141 trainees
Total	2,890	includes 351·5 trainees

Pertussis Vaccine

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of the vaccine damage payments awards made for vaccinations that the claimant stated took place in 1979 were for vaccinations that were pertussis related.

Mr. Lyell: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to him on 6 November at column 591-593 and in particular to table 2. That indicated 10 awards in respect of vaccinations of any kind stated by the claimant to have taken place in 1979. An answer to the right hon. Member's inquiry about which of these 10 vaccinations were stated by the claimant to have included a pertussis element would nevertheless require a search of all cases that have received awards, because of the way that information is held. I regret that this could only be carried out at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children were given pertussis vaccinations or vaccinations that included a pertussis element in each of the years 1979 to 1984.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Number of children aged 16 and under vaccinated with pertussis vaccine or a vaccine with a pertussis element England

Vaccine Damage Payments

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total number of vaccine damage payments made in each year since the scheme began.

Mr. Lyell: The information is contained in the following table:

Vaccine damage payments

Year	Number of awards
1979	349
1980	255
1981	74
1982	43
1983	42

Single Payments

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any information on waiting times to an appeal hearing against refusal of single payments or other benefits in the Manchester area.

Mr. Lyell: National administrative statistics for social security appeals are not disaggregated for areas smaller than a social security region and the figures given relate to the north-western region, which includes the Manchester area. The boundaries of the region are shown in appendix 4 of "Social Security Statistics 1985". The most recent statitics available are for appeals heard and decided in the three-month period ended 31 December 1985. Details of the average number of weeks between the lodgement of an appeal and the tribunal hearing, in the north-western region, for supplementary benefit single payment appeals and appeals for other benefits are given in the table.

North-western social security region: three months ended 31 December 1985

Type of benefit	Average time between lodgement of appeal and tribunal hearing (weeks)
All social security benefit appeals	14·3
Supplementary benefit: single payments	12·9
Supplementary benefit: other payments	14·7

Baby Units

Mr. Tony Loyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any information about the effectiveness of special care baby units with respect to improved survival rates and reduction in the incidence of handicap; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The improved survival rates for low birthweight babies are demonstrated in the following table. The figures, which are for England, do not distinguish between special care baby units and other forms of care.

Number and proportion of low birthweight babies who survived beyond 28 days

	Less than 2500g	per cent.	Less than 1,000g	per cent.
1975	32,915	82·1	246	11·8
1980	39,602	87·0	457	21·2
1985	40,241	90·6	871	38·0

The Department has recently commissioned two research projects to study the long term effects of neonatal intensive care. Both will give some emphasis to studying the incidence of handicap.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to increase funding for the specific purpose of increasing the number of cots in special care baby units (a) nationally and (b) in the north-west region.

Mrs. Currie: The responsibility for the provision of special care baby units in the north-western region lies with the North Western regional health authority. It is the best placed to provide the detailed information the hon. Member requires: the hon. Member may wish to approach the chairman of that authority.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any information of the number of babies for whom access is sought to the special care baby units at St. Mary's hospital, Manchester and Hope hospital who are not given access; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may therefore wish to address his inquiry to the chairmen of the Central Manchester and Salford health authorities which have responsibility for the provision of patient services in the baby units at St. Mary's hospital and Hope hospital, respectively.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details by health region of the number of cots available in special care baby units (a) as a percentage of all cots and (b) as a percentage of live births for 1985.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have the information that is available as soon as possible.

Residential Care Homes

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the number of private residential care homes for the elderly operating in the east midlands; if he will list them by district, giving the number of residents in such homes by district; if he will give comparative information for Leicestershire and in total the number of such homes and the total number of residents in England and Wales; if he will give the information in respect of each year since 1984 and of 1986 to date; if he will give the figures for each year of the number of homes closed; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Full information is not available centrally in the form requested. The analyses available relate to shire counties in England and the latest information is given in the table. The figures for Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Nottinghamshire	34	448	50	686	70

[1] The 1986 data to hand on numbers of homes are incomplete and therefore provisional. 1986 data on residents are not yet available.

Dialysis Machines

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish (a) the number of dialysis machines and (b) the number of dialysis machines per 1,000 population (i) nationally and (ii) in each health authority for the latest available year.

Mrs. Currie: The information is as follows:

Patients on haemodialysis—year ending 1985

Region	At home	At hospital
Northern	66	188
Yorkshire	106	117
Trent	258	154
East Anglian	67	125

South East Thames	190	176
South West Thames	38	19
Wessex	55	46
Oxford	128	66
South Western	165	55
West Midlands	122	142
Mersey	59	115
North Western	167	95

We would expect an individual machine to be provided for each patient dialysing at home, but machines provided for hospital dialysis might be used by several patients.

Sickle Cell Anaemia

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the incidence of sickle cell anaemia by ethnic grouping.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let my hon. Friend have such information as may be available as soon as possible.

ASH (Departmental Grant)

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will ask the director of Action on Smoking and Health what proportion of his budget is made up of his departmental grant;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report details of his Department's grant to Action on Smoking and Health since its inception, and state the criteria which govern the annual change in grant;

(3) if he will ask the director of Action on Smoking and Health to submit proposals for increasing the proportion of his budget provided by voluntary and private sources;

(4) what steps he proposes to take to appraise the effectiveness of his Department's grant to Action on Smoking and Health.

Mrs. Currie: Action on Smoking and Health submits detailed financial estimates and audited accounts annually. In 1986 about 67 per cent. of total income was made up by this Department's grant. Before grants are finalised, discussions are held with the organisation which include its proposals for increasing its income from voluntary and private sources. At the Department's request the organisation is developing a system of performance indicators by which its effectiveness can be measured.

Since its inception in 1971, Action on Smoking and Health (ASH) has been allocated the following sums by this Department:—

Year	Grant (£)
1971-72	19,000
1972-73	6,000
1973-74	3,000
1974-75	6,400
1975-76	18,500
1976-77	31,000
1977-78	41,500
1978-79	59,500
1979-80	70,000
1980-81	80,000
1981-82	90,000
1982-83	115,000
1983-84	118,000
1984-85	136,000
1985-86	150,840
1986-87	177,000

The change in grant reflects the growing demand on Action on Smoking and Health's services and the Government's continuing commitment to support activities which help to reduce the incidence of smoking.

Health Education Council

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will ask the Director of the Health Education Council to submit proposals for the privatisation of activities currently under his control.

Mr. Currie: As my right hon. Friend announced to the House on 21 November, the Health Education Council is being reconstituted with effect from 1 April 1987 as a special health authority. There are therefore no plans for privatisation.

National No Smoking Day 1987

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, in view of his recent reassessment of priorities for health education spending, whether the Health Education Council will continue to fund National No Smoking Day 1987.

Mrs. Currie: Yes.

Health Authorities (Expenditure)

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a list in the Official Report of expenditure undertaken by each of the regional health authorities on (a) smoking, (b) alcohol, (c) diet and (d) acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Mr. Newton: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Health Education Council

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many members of staff of the Health Education Council are employed on projects concerned with (a) smoking, (b) alcohol, (c) diet and (d) acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Mrs. Currie: Different aspects of the council's various projects on smoking, alcoholism, diet and acquired immune deficiency syndrome form part of the work of many of the council's staff. It would not be practicable to attempt an allocation of total personnel devoted to each of these projects. The council employs 77 staff members in all.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details of the expenditure by the Health Education Council on Project Smoke Free Manchester.

Mrs. Currie: £200,000 a year for the three years from 1985-86.

Glaucoma

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will take steps to provide that, in order to ensure early diagnosis of glaucoma, all eye tests carried out for the National Health Service either by eye specialists or opticians shall include two short tests of eye pressure and of the visual field in addition to the examination with an ophthalmoscope;

(2) if his programme of projects to advance preventive medicine includes the screening of blood relations of glaucoma sufferers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Facilities for the detection and treatment of glaucoma are provided in hospital eye departments. I understand that ophthalmologists would normally advise glaucoma sufferers that their first degree relatives over the age of 40 should be screened.

It is not considered necessary to require opticians to include tests of eye pressure and visul field as part of the routine National Health Service sight test, although it is open to ophthalmic opticians to carry out whatever tests they judge to be appropriate in individual cases. Diagnosis of glaucoma would, however, be a matter for the responsible ophthalmologist.

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation to make it mandatory for anyone testing the eyes of a person over the age of 40 years to ask whether there is a history of glaucoma in blood relations.

Mrs. Currie: This is a matter for clinical judgment and not one where legislation would be appropriate.

Expenditure

Mr. Jessel asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will publish the Government's response to the Fourth Report from the Social Services Committee of Session 1985-86 on "Public Expenditure on Social Services."

Mr. Newton: The Government's response was published today (Cm. 27). It comments on expenditure trends and service growth in the National Health Service and on the payment of supplementary benefit to people in residential care and responds in detail to the Committee's individual recommendations.

Mentally Ill People (Services)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement on the provision of services for the mentally ill;

(2) if he will make a statement on the provision of accommodation in the community for patients discharged from hospitals and mental institutions.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 19 November, c. 219]: Before long-stay patients in mental illness or mental handicap hospitals are considered for discharge a full assessment of their abilities and needs should be made, and those people found capable of living outside the hospital should have an appropriate course of rehabilitation. When it is decided that the time for discharge from hospital has been reached plans should be made, in consultation with the patient, the family and with any other people or bodies who may be involved, for a move to a suitable setting with an appropriate level of ongoing care and support.

The statutory authorities need to have access to a wide range of accommodation as individuals' needs vary and it is important that each should be helped to find the setting that best meets his needs. Many people will of course return to a family setting. Some may benefit from the freedom of ordinary housing, but may still need regular support, for example from social workers. Some people do well in board and lodging accommodation with a sympathetic landlady. Others may need sheltered housing, or an unstaffed group home. Others, particularly some mentally handicapped people, will need the day-to-day help with ordinary living which a residential home can provide. We are anxious to ensure that no hospital discharges a long-stay patient without a jointly agreed plan to settle the patient into the community, with statutory and voluntary services working together to plan and provide an appropriate range of services. The Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 when implemented will give statutory support to existing good practice.

I should also comment on the discharge of short-stay patients, mainly mental illness patients, many of whom have had a hospital stay of less than a month. Most such patients will of course return to their previous accommodation. Difficulties may arise when a patient for some reason cannot do this, and does not have friends or resources to provide new accommodation. Under the Housing Act 1985 local housing authorities have a duty to ensure accommodation for vulnerable groups, including people recovering from mental illness.

Since the reply from my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke) to my hon. Friend on 26 July 1985, at columns 957-58, progress continues to be made in the development of community care. Provisional figures for 1985 show that places for mentally handicapped adults in local authority homes and hostels or sponsored voluntary or private provision number over 15,000 and adult training centre places increased to nearly 49,000. Places funded by local authorities in residential accommodation for mentally ill people increased to nearly 6,000. There were nearly 18,000 day hospital places for mentally ill people, and day centre places increased to nearly 9,000. The number of psychiatric nurses working in the community was over 2,500.

A study in 1981 showed that over 1,000 supported housing schemes for mentally ill and mentally handicapped people had been developed in the preceding 10 to 15 years, providing over 5,000 places. Many more people will have moved through these schemes into ordinary accommodation over the period. But some of the useful forms of sheltered accommodation I have mentioned will not show up in statistics at all.

Between 1978-79 and 1985-86, local authority expenditure on the personal social services grew in real terms by 20 per cent. We have continued to support the development of community care by the injection of over £700 million of National Health Service funds through the joint finance arrangements, including over £100 million this year.

In addition, my right hon. Friend on 5 November announced special grants to regional health authorities totalling £6 million for development projects providing community care for mental illness.

Industrial Death Benefit (Mesothelioma)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of deaths where the death certificate mentions mesothelioma result in awards of industrial death benefit.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 24 November, c. 138]: In 1984, the latest year for which figures are available, industrial death benefit was awarded in 39 per cent. of cases where mesothelioma was shown on the death certificate.

Industrial Disablement Benefit

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of the 100 per cent. disablement benefit awards made by special medical boards in 1984 were first awards as opposed to re-assessments; and how many were for asbestos-related diseases.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 24 November, c. 137-38]: In 1984 special medical boards made 210 initial assessments at 100 per cent., of which 202 were for asbestos-related diseases. There were 199 re-assessments at 100 per cent., of which 47 were for asbestos-related diseases.

SCOTLAND

Broadleaf Woodland Grant

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the applications for broadleaved woodland grant which have been approved by the Forestry Commission in Scotland to the end of September, broken down to include totals of ancient semi-natural ancient woodland sites, other and bare land, and the number of hectares of each tree species planted with grant aid within these categories for all three Scottish conservancies.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 20 November 1986, c. 339]: I have arranged for a copy of the following information to be placed in the Library.

Details of the broadleaved woodland grant scheme applications approved up to the end of September 1986 in each of the Forestry Commission's Scottish conservancies are as follows:

TRANSPORT

British Airways

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the number of safety reports and violations filed against British Airways during the current year;

(2) what provisions are being planned to enhance the safety of British Airways.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Civil Aviation Authority is statutorily responsible for all aviation safety matters. British Airways, in common with other United Kingdom airlines, has to meet CAA requirements for public transport operations. The authority tells me that it is satisfied that British Airways does indeed meet these requirements, and that no safety reports or violations have been filed with it against British Airways this year.

Traffic Management Guidance

Sir Hugh Rossi asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he plans to issue traffic management guidance to London boroughs as provided for in schedule 5 to the Local Government Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: My Department and the boroughs responsible for London's highways have a shared interest in fostering well-designed traffic management in London. Discussions with the local authority associations and the police have indicated where initial guidance is most likely to be useful. The associations and the police are therefore now being formally consulted on a document incorporating guidance I am minded to give. When I have their views, I shall consider them carefully with a view to issuing guidance shortly thereafter.

Copies of the consultation document have been placed in the Library and are also being make available to local authorities and representative organisations interested in these matters.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport what additional action he proposes to take to encourage motorists to tax their cars; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: A great deal has already been done to make vehicle licensing more straightforward for the motorist, including increasing the number of licensing post offices and transferring to them virtually all relicensing work. An additional 200 sub-post offices are to be added to the relicensing network over the next 18 months. In parallel with this the enforcement of VED has been strengthened substantially. The deployment of an additional 75 posts and the introduction of new technology into local offices should provide for further improvement.

Transport Companies

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the average costs involved to local authorities in setting up new transport companies; and how these costs arise.

Mr. David Mitchell: On the assumption that my hon. Friend is referring to the setting up of public transport companies, my right hon. Friend and I do not have an estimate of the average cost. Where the cost has been significant it has generally arisen from payments of compensation to employees of the local authority who took early retirement or redundancy. Some councils have also had to retain liabilities arising from previous borrowing in order to establish commercially viable companies. These steps have led to more efficient operations from which both ratepayers and passengers will now benefit.

Underground (Crime)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the findings of the recent study of crime on the Underground; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The report of the steering group on crime on the London Underground is being published today. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

The report is one of a number of initiatives put in hand following the Prime Minister's crime prevention seminar on 8 January. As my right hon. Friend has already announced, the Government will be making available £15 million to London Regional Transport, over the next three years, to implement the report's 50 recommendations.

Among the practical measures to be applied at Underground stations are:

—The installation of radio facilities for the police at 42 deep level stations;
—More and improved closed circuit TV monitoring;
—Passenger alarms on platforms;
—Making staff more accessible to assist the public;
—Improvements to station environments including better lighting.

Top priority is a crackdown on robberies along the southern section of the Northern line between Clapham North and Tooting Broadway, plus a drive against violence and theft at Oxford Circus.

These proposals reflect the Government's high priority to crime prevention and our commitment to do all we can to ensure that travellers on the Underground are given as much protection and assistance as possible. London Underground will now be preparing a fully costed programme of crime prevention measures within the £15 million allocated. The installation of police radios at 42 tube stations and the pilot station projects will be the first items.

In commissioning the study we wanted to look beyond the broad statistics to find out exactly what was happening and where, whether people's fears were justified and what might be done to reduce crime and allay these fears. The report shows that crime is relatively rare when seen in the context of the 725 million journeys made last year. Indeed, last year there were no recorded robberies at almost half of the stations and the majority of stations were free from assaults on passengers. However crime in any form cannot be condoned wherever it occurs. The measures proposed today will, I am sure, prove a positive step both in improving security and re-assuring tube travellers.

WALES

Mortgages

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many Welsh households with mortgages from (a) building societies, (b) local authorities and (c) other sources were known to be more than six months in arrears at the end of June.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is not collected by the Welsh Office.

Nurses

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many qualified nurses have been employed in Welsh hospitals in each year from 1979-80 to 1986-87, or for the latest date at which such information was available.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information for the years 1979 to 1984 is contained in "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics for Wales", numbers 7 to 12, copies of which are in the Library.

At 30 September 1985, the latest date for which information is available, the equivalent of 12,032 whole-time qualified nurses were employed in Welsh hospitals. This figure excludes hospital tutorial staff and midwifery department staff.

A5 (Bypasses)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to publish the results of the consultants' investigation into bypasses around the five villages on the A5 on Anglesey and around Holyhead; what new money is available for such schemes following the Chancellor's autumn statement, what priority will be given to such schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The consultants' report has identified possible routes for bypasses of the villages on the A5 on Anglesey. Further investigations are in progress to determine the standards of provision, the costs and the economic and environmental implications. I shall inform my hon. Friend once decisions have been reached.

I expect to receive the consultants' report on Holyhead next summer. The priorities for trunk road improvement schemes remain as set out in "Roads in Wales 1985." Financial provision for schemes in the forward programme is made when the appropriate stage is reached.

West Môn Community Hospital

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects work to start on the building of West Môn community hospital; when a decision will be made on location; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This hospital development is the responsibility of Gwynedd health authority. A decision on location will be taken after the consultative period ends on 29 December 1986. It is too early to say when building will start.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Lip Reading

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many training courses now exist in England for training teachers of lip reading; what was the length of courses and the number who attained qualifications in 1985; if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: This information is not centrally available. In the Government's view, the provision of lip-reading teaching is a matter for local determination by individual local education authorities as part of their adult education provision. In addition, certificates in lip-reading teaching are awarded by the City Literary Institute in London, in conjunction with the Royal National Institute for the Deaf, and by Manchester polytechnic, to students who successfully complete a course in teaching lip-reading at these institutions. The length of these courses range from three months (full-time) to one year (part-time), and the number of students who qualify annually are about 30 to 40.

Universities (Staff-Student Ratios)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the target staff to student ratio in the university sector in 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: There is no centrally determined staff: student ratio target for universities.

Ethnic Minority Languages

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will introduce legislation to prevent a local authority from requiring children in its area to learn ethnic minority languages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: When the relevant provisions of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 comes into force it will not be possible for a local education authority to require a school to offer a minority language to all pupils in a particular year group against the joint wishes of the school's governing body and its headteacher. I intend in the near future to publish a consultative document on the place of ethnic minority languages in the secondary curriculum.

Teachers (Contracts)

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will introduce legislation giving power over teachers' contracts to boards of governors as advised by head teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Education (No. 2) Act 1986 recognises the importance of governing bodies by extending their role in vital areas such as the curriculum, discipline and the appointment of teachers in county schools. Teachers in aided schools are already employed by the governors. The Government have no plans to introduce fresh legislation on this subject.

ENVIRONMENT

Foundry Industry

Mr. George asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider financially assisting companies in the foundry industry to purchase equipment to reduce atmospheric pollution.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. The Government adhere to the polluter pays principle and no specific subsidies are given to industry for expenditure on pollution control which it should undertake as a normal part of its activities.

Stocken Hall

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will explain the reasons whereby the Property Services Agency did not require as a condition of the contract of sale of Stocken Hall to Endersby Developments Ltd. the renovation of the building, in accordance with the original specification contained in the offer for sale document published by Messrs. Cluttons, on behalf of the Home Office; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I shall answer this question shortly.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Chope) has received a copy of the document sent to him by Mr. John Nickols entitled Stocken Hall RIP regarding the condition of a grade 2 listed building recently sold by the Property Services Agency to Endersby Developments Ltd.; and whether he will order an immediate inquiry into the allegations contained in that document.

Mr. Chope: I shall answer this question shortly.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animal Welfare

Mr. Cohen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria were used in deciding that the crate containing three elephants belonging to Chipperfields, and now en route to Hong Kong, was satisfactory; whether his officials were informed in advance that the elephants were to be shipped to Hong Kong; and if he will take steps to ensure that elephants are not in future permitted to leave British ports under similar conditions.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Rhizomania

Mr. Freud asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the testing time for rhizomania in respect of the different crops on which tests are carried out;

(2) whether he intends to seek to ban imported vegetables unless they have been washed; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will list the tonnage of unwashed potatoes imported from Holland in each of the last seven months;

(4) if he is satisfied that sufficient controls exist to minimise the spread of rhizomania in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(5) if he will list the number and locations of reported cases of rhizomania brought to the United Kingdom from the continent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Greenway asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the number and distribution of local authority animal welfare inspectors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

The information is not available centrally.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Intellectual Property

Mr. Mates asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are his plans for legislation with regard to intellectual property; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: The Government will introduce a Bill based on the proposals in the recent White Paper "Intellectual Property and Innovation" (Cmnd. 9712) when the parliamentary timetable permits. Drafting of those clauses of this highly complex Bill which relate to copyright, performers' protection and designs is to continue, and we plan to circulate these for consultation with experts and interested parties in due course.

Shipbuilding (Intervention Fund)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if any European Shipbuilding intervention fund payments have been made to private shipbuilding yards; and if he will list any such payments and the shipbuilding yards concerned;

(2) if any intervention fund payments have been, or are to be made for shiprepair work.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

British Telecom

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the answer of 24 November, Official Report, column 7, what was the name of the institution which returned British Telecom shares of its own volition; what was the number of shares involved; and what inquiries were made into the circumstances in which the applications for these shares were made.

Mr. Pattie: A total of 72,800 shares were returned by Société Générale Merchant Bank Ltd. The papers were passed to the Director of Public Prosecutions, who concluded that no further action was warranted.

DEFENCE

Chinook Helicopters

Mr. Wilkinson asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether, following the loss of a Boeing Victor 234 LR

Chinook belonging to British International Helicopters on 6 November off the Shetland Islands, he will make a statement whether Chinook aircraft currently in Royal Air Force service have similar spiral bevel ring gear to the 234LR.

Mr. Freeman: The spiral bevel ring gear fitted in the Boeing Vertol 234 LR is of a different modification standard to that fitted in Chinook helicopters in service with the Royal Air Force.

Japanese Prisoners of War

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many letters he has received during the past 12 months concerning the position of former Japanese prisoners of war who suffered from possible experimentation on them during their captivity.

Mr. Freeman: During the past 12 months the Ministry of Defence has received 31 inquiries. Of these, three were addressed originally to the Prime Minister, 23 letters were received by Ministers, and the remaining five by officials.

Ship Refits

Mr. Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what are the first results of the complex exercise involving the comparison of refitting frigates in the royal dockyards, and in private shipyards; and if he will now publish (a) the results of the labour cost comparisons and (b) the results of the material cost comparisons;

(2) when the refit of HMS Arethusa was completed; and what was the expected time that the principal director of accountancy services would take to complete the cost comparison exercise involving HMS Arethusa and HMS Euryalus.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The refit of HMS Arethusa was completed on 17 February 1986. The result of the comparison between this refit and that of HMS Euryalus should be available early in the new year.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what recent representations he has received from the United States Government concerning chemical weapons;

(2) what recent representations he has received from NATO allies concerning chemical weapons.

Mr. Stanley: None. I also refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 3 June at columns 428-9.

RAF Welford

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning the role of RAF Welford.

Mr. Stanley: RAF Welford is made available for use by United States forces in the United Kingdom for the storage of ammunition.

Binary Weapons

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning the role of binary weapons in the NATO strategy.

Mr. Stanley: The Soviet Union is capable of engaging in chemical warfare on a very large scale. NATO allies are committed to achieving a comprehensive and verifiable global ban on all aspects of chemical warfare. However, until such a ban is achieved NATO must continue to be able to deter an attack with chemical weapons on its own forces. For this purpose, there is a need for a range of capabilities including defensive equipment and a limited chemical weapons retaliatory capability within the Alliance.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the European Economic Community Council will next discuss South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The Twelve will continue to pay close attention to the issue of South Africa at the meetings arranged within the framework of European political co-operation.

The Government remain deeply concerned at the situation inside South Africa and regret the lack of progress towards the national dialogue that is so urgently needed there.

United Nations (Budget)

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the United Kingdom's annual contribution to the United Nations budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom's contribution to the United Nations regular budget varies from year to year depending upon the size of the budget and the United Kingdom's assessed share. In 1986 the United Kingdom's share was £23,892,009.

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the current United Nations member countries, together with their annual contribution to the United Nations budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The United Nations publishes a list of member states and their assessed annual contributions to its regular budget. The assessments vary from year to year depending upon the total of the budget and how it is apportioned. Those for 1986 have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to how many member countries are in arrears with their annual payment to the United Nations, and for how many years in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The United Nations Secretary-General publishes regular reports on the status of contributions to the United Nation's regular budget. The latest gives the position at 30 September 1986. Of the 98 member states that were still in arrears at that date the following 49 owed more than the amounts assessed for 1986:

Human Rights

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will invite representatives of the 15 Soviet republics as well as Foreign Ministers from the satellite states to London, to discuss Anglo-Soviet relations and human rights in the light of the Helsinki Agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No. We are in regular touch with the Governments of the Soviet Union and the eastern Europe countries about human rights in those countries. The subject is also being addressed at the CSCE review meeting currently taking place in Vienna.

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to Ukrainian representatives at the United Nations, regarding (a) human rights in the Ukraine (b) the monitoring of the Helsinki Agreement, (c) freedom to practise Roman Catholicism, (d) the use of Ukrainian as the official language in the Ukraine in schools, in the Ukraine higher institutes of education and government departments and (e) the availability of newspapers and periodicals in the Ukrainian language; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We are concerned by abuses of human rights and the denial of fundamental freedoms, including freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief, wherever they occur, including the Ukraine. We make representations to the Soviet authorities on these issues and raise them at the CSCE meeting in Vienna.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mrs. Chalker: The usual forecast was deposited in the House earlier today. At present 10 meetings of the Council of Ministers are planned for December. In addition, heads of state and Government will meet in London on 5 and 6 December.

The Internal Market Council will meet on 1 December. The council will be seeking agreement on a number of measures in the rolling presidency action programme for completing the internal market.

The Fisheries Council is expected to meet on 3 December and 17 and 18 December and is likely to discuss structures policy relations with third countries and total allowable catches (TACS) and quotas for 1987 and related measures. It may also consider an amendment to the technical conservation measures, and research and development.

The Economic and Finance Council will meet on 8 December to adopt the Commission's annual report on the economic situation in the Community, and the Commission's proposal for additional lending for small and medium sized enterprises (including the new Community instrument (NCI IV)). The Council will also discuss the extension of the medium term financial assistance facility which assists member states which have balance of payments problems; the Greek economy and protective measures (in relation to the release of the second tranche of the Greek loan); and the directive on the accounts of banks and other financial institutions. The 7th and 8th travellers allowances directives and a proposal on tax free allowances for fuel in the tanks of commercial vehicles will also be discussed.

The Agriculture Council is expected to meet on 8 and 9 December. Among the subjects likely to be discussed are reform of the beef regime, the emergency measures in the milk sector, socio-structures and beef import quotas and balance sheets. It may also consider the flavourings directive, food law harmonisation directives; labelling and materials articles in contact with food, medicated feedingstuffs, extraction solvents, antioxidants and other items concerned with completion of the internal market, including a number of items in the veterinary field.

The Research Council will meet on 9 December. The provisional agenda anticipates discussion on the EC research and development framework programme for the period 1987-1991 and a first consideration of the report prepared by the industrial review panel on the joint research centre (JRC). The Council will debate the proposals for a revision in 1987 of the current JRC programme. The Council will also consider the Commission's proposals for a Community action plan for the evaluation of Community research and development activities; and the Commission's comunication on Community selections within EUREKA.

The Labour and Social Affairs Council will meet on 11 December. The main item for consideration will be the joint UK/Irish/Italian resolution on an action programme on employment growth. The Council will consider draft directives on setting limits to exposure of workers to benzene and on the proscription of four specified carcinogens. Ministers are also expected to consider the enlargement of the anti-poverty programme to cover Spain and Portugal, and may consider conclusions on youth training.

The Transport Council well meet on 15 and 16 December. The Council will discuss shipping and aviation measures. The Commission's recent proposals on both road haulage liberalisation and transport infrastructure support will also be discussed. The Council will also consider future Community policy on ports and railways.

The Foreign Affairs Council will meet on 15 and 16 December. The Council will review the negotiations between the Community and the United States on the trade implications of enlargement and discuss a new generation of Mediterranean financial protocols.

The Industry Council will meet on 22 December and will consider the adoption of a 6th directive on shipbuilding aid to take effect from 1 January 1987.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to ensure that the three elephants belonging to Chipperfields currently en route to Hong Kong are permitted to enter Hong Kong on arrival, and that appropriate arrangements are made for veterinary inspection and for their safe keeping.

Mr. Renton: The Hong Kong Government have informed me that the three elephants who belong to Chipperfields circus will be permitted to enter Hong Kong subject to the British Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries' confirmation that they will be re-imported into the United Kingdom after their visit to Hong Kong. The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food have now confirmed that they would have no objection to such re-import. Arrangements will meanwhile be made for veterinary inspection and for safekeeping of the animals whilst they are in Hong Kong.

Moses Mayekiso

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to bring pressure to bear on the South African Government to secure the release of Moses Mayekiso of the Metal and Allied Workers' Union and other trade unionists in detention.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend has personally made representations to the South African Government about the detention of all those held without charge. The South African authorities can be in no doubt of our strong opposition to the action that they have taken.

Biological and Toxic Weapons Convention

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information Her Majesty's Government have as to the compliance by the Soviet Union with the biologial and toxic weapons convention of 1972.

Mr. Renton: We have no conclusive evidence that the Soviet Union is not in compliance with the 1972 biological weapons convention.

ENERGY

Energy Research

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) how much has been expended by Her Majesty's Government on research into the harnessing of tides for the provision of energy during each of the past five years for which records are available;

(2) how much has been expended by Her Majesty's Government on research into the harnessing of solar energy during each of the past five years for which records are available;

(3) how much has been expended by Her Majesty's Government on research into the harnessing of wind energy during the past five years for which records are available;

(4) how much has been expended by Her Majesty's Government on research into the harnessing of hydro-electric energy during each of the past five years for which records are available.

Mr. David Hunt: The figures for expenditure by Her Majesty's Government on research into harnessing wind, tidal, solar and hydro-electric power for 1981-82 to 1985-86 are as follows:

£million

	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86
Wind	1·25	2·70	2·82	5·11	5·80
Tide	0·40	0·00	0·02	0·28	0·13
Solar	1·44	2·25	2·48	1·04	1·62
Hydro-electric	0·04	0·04	0·07	0·03	0·06

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what are his proposals for the provision of resources for research into the harnessing of the tides for energy purposes during the years 1987 and 1988, respectively.

(2) what are his proposals for the provision of resources into the harnessing of solar energy during the years 1987 and 1988, respectively;

(3) what are his proposals for the provision of resources for research into the harnessing of wind energy during the years 1987 and 1988, respectively;

(4) what are his proposals for the provision of resources for research into the harnessing of hydro-electric energy during the years 1987 and 1988, respectively.

Mr. David Hunt: Planned expenditure expected for 1986-87 in the Department of Energy's renewables research and development programme for wind, tide, solar and hydro-electric power is given below:

	1986-87
	£ million
wind	4·507
solar	1·000
tide	0·300
hydro-electric	0·100

Estimated contributions from outside contractors to the Department's 1986-87 renewables programme are estimated to be about £3 million.

Figures for 1987-88 are not yet available.

Offshore Oil Extraction

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made as to whether the current level of investment in offshore oil extraction will secure a satisfactory rate of extraction; and what is his estimate of the proportion of reserves which will be extracted in each field currently being exploited.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The rate of investment in the United Kingdom continental shelf is dependent upon a complex of considerations including world oil prices, exploration and development costs and the fiscal regime. Recent commitments to investment have been reduced because of lower oil prices, but the United Kingdom continues to be a very attractive oil province in which to invest and successive Governments have shown their commitment to maintaining a political and fiscal framework in which the industry can have confidence.

Information from operators on individual reservoir performance is provided on a commercially confidential basis. For the United Kingdom continental shelf as a whole recovery factors in producing oilfields are generally in the order of 25 per cent. to 55 per cent. of the oil initially in place. Improved recovery techniques may eventually increase these factors. Operators' estimates of recoverable reserves for each field under development and each producing field are shown in sections 3.3 and 4.10 respectively of the 1986 Brown Book.

Oil Production and Drilling Platforms

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will take steps to ensure that all production and drilling platforms under the United Kingdom's jurisdiction use the best available technology subject to considerations of the guiding discharge values agreed to internationally to prevent oil pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: From the beginning of offshore oil and gas activity on the United Kingdom continental shelf it has been the policy of the Department of Energy that, in accordance with internationally agreed guidelines, the best practicable means would be used to control and reduce oil discharges.

The most relevant standard, agreed within the Paris Commission, is that water discharged after separation from produced oil should not contain more than 40 mg of oil per litre as a monthly average.

Operators are required to monitor oily discharges and to provide the results of their monitoring to the Department of Energy. The Department's inspectors visit installations to check that the required standards are met.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will appoint a responsible person on each drilling and production oil platform in the North sea within the United Kingdom's jurisdiction to monitor the pollution prevention equipment installed.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The Mineral Workings (Offshore Installations) Act 1971, section 4, requires the owner of every offshore installation to appoint an offshore installations manager (OIM) and to inform the Secretary of State of any such appointment. The OIM is responsible for all equipment on the installation and its operation. All discharges which might be oily are monitored on a regular basis and the results sent to the Department of Energy which checks for conformity with conditions set out under the Prevention of Oil Pollution Act 1971.

North Sea Oil (Technical Equipment)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken during the last three years to ensure that technical equipment used to explore for and exploit petroleum in the North sea, including transportation pipelines, is constructed and operated in conformity with the best available technology.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: From the beginning of offshore oil and gas activity on the United Kingdom continental shelf the Department of Energy has, through continued discussion on develpment proposals prior to approval and by issuing guidance notes, encouraged operators to use the best technology.

Power Stations

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will make available for independent assessment all the details of the incident at Trawsfynydd nuclear power station on 15 September 1981 and all the documents relating to subsequent inquiries;

(2) if he will make available for independent assessment all the details of the incident at Wylfa nuclear power station involving the intake by a health physics monitor of radioactive contamination discovered on 5 May, and all the documents relating to subsequent inquiries;

(3) if he will make available for independent assessment all the details of the incident at Trawsfynydd nuclear power station involving a leaking boiler tube and release into the atmosphere, of radioactive gas on 25 June 1980, and all the documents relating to subsequent inquiries;

(4) if he will make available for independent assessment all the details of the incident at Wylfa involving the radioactive contamination of a man on 15 October 1980, and all the documents relating to subsequent inquiries.

Mr. Goodlad: These incidents were independently assessed at the time by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive. Descriptions of the incidents and the results of investigations which were carried out are given in the HSE's quarterly statements on nuclear incidents for the 2nd, 3rd and 4th quarters of 1980 and the 3rd and 4th quarters of 1981, copies of which are in the Library of the House. Information was also given in the reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) on 31 July 1980 at columns 803-4.

Responsibilities for safety at nuclear sites falls by law on the operators of those sites. It is not the CEGB's practice to release the full record of investigations as to do so could affect the willingness of staff to participate fully and openly in inquiries.

North Sea Oil

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the total North sea oil output so far in 1986; what is expected to be the annual total for 1986; and how this figure compares with each year from 1979 to 1985.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Estimates of North sea production for the current year are published monthly in Energy Trends. Figures for previous years are set out in the Secretary of State for Energy's report to Parliament (Brown Book).

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the estimated value to gross domestic product in the current year of North sea oil; and how this figure compares with the figures for each year from 1979 to 1985.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The latest figures for the gross domestic product of the mineral oil and natural gas extraction industry are published in Table 2.2 of the United Kingdom national accounts.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the estimated value to the balance of trade in the current year of North sea oil; and how this figure compares with the figures for each year from 1979 to 1985.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The latest balance of trade figures for North sea oil are published in table A1 of the monthly review of external trade statistics.

Coal Industry

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the most recent figures on accidents in the coal industry; and if he will give the equivalent figures for each of the last six years.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of accidents for the first half (April-September) of each of the last six years is as follows:

	Number
1986	6,696
1985	7,599
1984	1,600
1983	8,311
1982	10,793
1981	14,127

Accident statistics are published in British Coal's annual report and accounts, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. The Reporting of Injuries Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 required the reporting of accidents which were not originally included and therefore the 1986 figures are calculated on a different basis to earlier years.

Mr. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the most recent figures on deaths in the coal industry and the number of men working in the industry; and if he will give the equivalent figures for each of the last six years.

Mr. David Hunt: So far this year there have been ten fatalities in the coal industry. Comparative figures for the last six years are as follows:

	Fatalities[1]	Manpower[2]
1986	7	132,210
1985	12	162,961
1984	6	177,312

	Fatalities[1]	Manpower[2]
1983	11	196,982

PRIME MINISTER

Westland plc

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister when precisely the Cabinet Secretary sent the report of his leak inquiry to the Attorney-General.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 17 November at columns 49-50.

Hearing-impaired People (Committee)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Prime Minister if she will now re-establish the Advisory Committee on Services for Hearing Impaired People; what was the cost of the former committee annually; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The decision to wind up the Advisory Committee on Services for Hearing Impaired People in 1980 was taken following the Government's review of all non-departmental bodies and we have no plans to re-establish it. Expenditure on the committee varied from year to year. In 1978-79 and 1979-80, the estimated costs were £3,400 and £5,300 respectively.

State Security

Mr. Winnick asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on ministerial accountability for the security services.

The Prime Minister: I am fully satisfied with the present arrangements for ministerial responsibility for the security and intelligence services which I share with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister if she will set up an inquiry into allegations that Lord Rothschild, a former MI5 officer, solicited Mr. Chapman Pincher to publish the recollections and memoirs of Peter Wright; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 26 November at column 268.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister (1) if she will now say why no steps were taken to trace and interview the sources of material contained in the book "Their Trade is Treachery" by Chapman Pincher during the two months when the relevant manuscript was in Her Majesty's Government's possession prior to publication;

(2) if she will publish the text of letters between Messrs. Sidgwick and Jackson and Sir Robert Armstrong on the question of the book "Their Trade is Treachery"; and if she will make a statement;

(3) whether any immunity from injunction was granted to Messrs. Sidgwick and Jackson, publishers of "Their Trade is Treachery" by Chapman Pincher, in a letter from the Cabinet Secretary, Sir Robert Armstrong, transmitted in the period prior to publication and distribution of the book; and if she will make a statement;

(4) if she will now say why no interviews were conducted with members of the security services to confirm the sources of material in the book "Their Trade is Treachery" by Chapman Pincher during the two months beginning February to the end of March 1981 when the manuscript was in possession of Her Majesty's Government;

(5) if she will now say why information confidential to the security services was not removed from the books recently published by Sidgwick and Jackson;

(6) if she will now say on what date Her Majesty's Government first became aware of the intended publication of "Their Trade is Treachery" by Chapman Pincher, "Conspiracy of Silence" by Freeman and Penrose, "The Second Oldest Profession" by Philip Knightly and "A Matter of Trust"; MI5 1945-72 by Nigel West; and on what date Her Majesty's Government actually received proof copies of these books;

(7) why Her Majesty's Government did not seek to prevent publication of the recollections and memoirs of Peter Wright in the book "Their Trade is Treachery" by Chapman Pincher;

(8) what discussions she has had with Lord Victor Rothschild concerning the implications for national security of the proposed publication of Mr. Peter Wright's book and about possible ways of preventing its publication in Mr. Wright's name; if she will give the date and outcome of each such discussion; and if she will make a statement;

(9) if she will now say why all information confidential to the security services was not removed from the book by Nigel West "A Matter of Trust";

(10) what discussions she has had with former members of the security services about the implications for national security of allegations concerning Sir Roger Hollis;

(11) what discussions she has had with former members of the security services concerning the proposed publication of books containing material relating to national security;

(12) on what date she first knew of and saw, respectively, the internal MI5 report discussing Lord Rothschild's role in the publication of the book "Their Trade is Treachery" by Chapman Pincher.

The Prime Minister: It would be inappropriate for me to comment on matters which may arise in the proceedings concerning the Peter Wright case in Australia while those proceedings continue. I also intend to follow the precedent set by previous Prime Ministers of not commenting on security matters.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister whether she will carry out an inquiry to identify which security officer revealed to a national newspaper journalist that the Iraqi embassy had been bugged over the last two years.

The Prime Minister: I am not aware of any newspaper report alleging that the Iraqi embassy has been bugged over the past two years.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister in what form Mr. Ronnie Symonds, Mr. William Skarden, Mr. Andrew King, Colonel Leo Long, Lord Rothschild, Lord Clannorris, T. A. R. Robertson, Nigel Burgess, Constance Burgess, Mr. Russell Leigh, Mr. Christopher Haines, Mr. William Luke, Mr. Stephen Demowbray, Lord Dacre, Mr. George Carey Foster, Mr. John Cairncross, Mr. Malcolm Muggeridge, Mr. Robert MacKenzie, Sir Ashton Roskill, Sir Martin Furnival, Mr. Nigel Blair and Mr. Anthony Simkins gave undertakings as officers in Britain's security services not to make statements which breached confidentiality.

The Prime Minister: I am not prepared to comment on individual cases. All members of the security services sign the Official Secrets Act and are made fully aware of their duty of confidentiality.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister if she will make it the policy of Her Majesty's Government, in litigation to which they are a party, to claim public interest immunity against the discovery of documents only in cases where the material in question has not previously been published in other ways; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. Her Majesty's Government will continue to claim public interest immunity against the discovery of documents whenever it is deemed necessary in the public interest to do so.

Engagements

Q2. Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 25 November.

The Prime Minister [pursuant to her oral reply, 25 November 1986, column 135]: I regret that I gave the hon. Gentleman an incorrect figure in my reply to his supplementary question about the Sports Council's grant settlement for 1987-88.

Between 1979 and 1986 its grant has gone up by 42 per cent. in real terms, not 67 per cent. as I said. Nevertheless, the fact remains that the Sports Council has received a substantial real terms increase in its grant between the years in question.

EMPLOYMENT

Restart Scheme

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General if he will publish information showing how many people in the (a) Burnley, (b) Pendle and (c) Hyndburn travel-to-work areas have had their benefit (i) reduced and (ii) withdrawn, in connection with the restart scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No one can lose his or her benefit entitlements solely as a result of the restart programme. The aim of the programme is to interview long-term unemployed people in order to make a suitable offer to them of work, training or a course that will get them on the path back to work.

Under long-standing legal rules people can lose their entitlement to benefit if they fail to attend an interview, are not available for work, or refuse an offer of suitable employment. We have no information available in the precise form requested as it is not possible to break down the figures into the three areas separately. But as at 9 October 1986 the number of people invited to a restart interview who later had benefit disallowed by independent adjudication officers in the three areas, was 23. A further 25 claimants in the areas had benefit suspended and then reinstated after going to a restart interview which they had previously failed to attend.

Mr. Marlow asked the Paymaster General, pursuant to the answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 211, about the number of people ceasing to claim unemployment benefit following invitation to a restart interview, if he will explain the differences between the total given under the second column of that answer and the total given under the third column of the answer on 5 November, Official Report, column 459.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The 86,211 people in the third column of the table in the Official Report at column 459 are those who have been sent a letter of invitation to a restart interview but who have ceased to claim benefit at some time after the sending of the letter. They include the 30,218 people referred to in the second column of the table in the Official Report at column 211 who have ceased to claim benefit after being interviewed.

The difference between these two figures—55,993—is comprised of people who have been sent a letter but ceased to claim benefit before a restart interview.

Benefits

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Paymaster General how many claims under consideration at the adjudication office in Birmingham on 31 October had been held there for more than a month.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There were 1,000 such cases in the adjudication office in Birmingham on 31 October. These cases were awaiting further comment from either the claimant or the employer. The need to obtain further information inevitably tends to cause delay in deciding a claim but when an employer or a claimant does not reply within a reasonable time, a decision will generally be made on the available evidence.

Job Training Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster-General what estimate he has made of the element of the substitution which will result from the new job training scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The new job training scheme pilot programmes combine a period of individual assessment with an integrated package of training and practical experience leading to a recognised vocational qualification. Particular emphasis is placed on the proper integration of training and practical experience.

It is not anticipated that there will be substantial job substitution in the new job training scheme because practical experience placements will be of relatively short duration, probably with more than one employer; practical experience will be interspersed with periods of training away from the workplace.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General in relation to the new job training scheme, whether providers of practical work will pay trainees; and whether he has made an estimate of the costs involved.

Mr. Trippier: Trainees on the new job training scheme pilot programmes will receive a training allowance equivalent to their benefit entitlement. Trainees will not be paid by providers of practical experience.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General if he will make it his policy that participation in the job training scheme will continue to be voluntary and that benefit sanctions will not apply to persons who do not accept offers, or who leave courses prematurely.

Mr. Trippier: Participation in the job training scheme pilots is voluntary and benefit sanctions will not be applied to anyone for not joining, or for leaving before they complete their training programme.

Taster Course (Deptford)

Ms. Richardson asked the Paymaster General, why the taster course for women at the Deptford skillcentre is to be withdrawn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The taster course for women at Deptford skillcentre is being withdrawn because the MSC concluded that provision of this training could be made more cost-effectively elsewhere.

National Advisory Council on Employment of Disabled People

Mr. Knox asked the Paymaster General who has been appointedto the chairmanship of the National Advisory Council on Employment of Disabled People, following the death of Mr. Bob Ramsey earlier in 1986.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. and Noble Friend has today appointed Mr. Ken Baker, a former commissioner of the MSC, to the chair of the National Advisory Council on Employment of Disabled People. He has been appointed to serve until 31 December 1989. NACEDP is due to be reconstituted for a further three years from 1 January 1987 and I hope to make an announcement shortly concerning membership of the council for this period.

Manchester

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Paymaster General (1) if he will make a statement on the progress made by his Department in the inner-city area of Manchester;

(2) if he will give details of actions taken by the inner-city task force in Manchester;

(3) if he will give details of the budget of the Manchester inner-city task force; and how much has been spent.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 27 November 1986, c. 324]: The task force has established contacts with a wide variety of local community organisations, with the local authority and with the private sector. A steering group composed of local people has recently been formed to assist the task force in its work. A plan has been drawn up as a guide to action in tackling the problems of the area. Under this plan a number of projects designed to increase employment and improve the employability of local people are being worked up as a matter of priority. These include:

(a) the establishment, in co-operation with a major clearing bank, of a small grant and loan scheme for local small businesses;

(b) assistance to the youth business initiative;

(c) pro-active business counselling support for participants in the enterprise allowance scheme;

(d) the establishment of a managed workshop in the task force area;

(e) support for community programme projects run by newly trained local managers;

(f) support for training local people in housing association work in conjunction for positive action for training in housing (PATH);

(g) the development with the private sector of a scheme to train local people in building and construction skills;

(h) the conversion, by local people, of railway arches in North Hulme into business start up units.

A substantial number of other projects at various stages of development. The task force is also working closely with the private sector, other Government Departments and statutory and voluntary agencies in the area to unlock all available resources and to ensure that they are targeted to maximum effect.

All task forces have access to the central project funds of the inner cities initiative and to date some £33,000 has been allocated to projects in the Moss Side and Hulme task force area. Projects under development so far, which include those described above are expected to attract grant support in this financial year of around £277,000.

My Department also plays a full part, together with the Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of the Environment, in the Manchester/Salford city action team. In the current financial year together with the Manpower Services Commission, it will be spending some £26 million in the area the team covers on programmes of employment help to local people.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

State Security

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General if he will prosecute Lord Rothschild under section 7 of the Official Secrets Act 1920 for soliciting Mr. Peter Wright, by means of an offer of money, to pass documents known or believed to contain official secrets relating to the security services, to Mr. Chapman Pincher; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I am considering with the Director of Public Prosecutions the allegations that have been made.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General (1) if he will now say why Arthur Martin was not prosecuted for breaching confidence on security matters in statements to Rupert Allason prior to New Year's Day 1983;

(2) if he will now say why Arthur Martin was not prosecuted for breaching confidence on security matters in statements to Rupert Allason after the publication of "A Matter of Trust".

The Attorney-General: I reached my decision not to prosecute Arthur Martin for supplying information to Rupert Allason because I was satisfied that it would not be in the public interest to prosecute.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General why he delayed taking action to prevent the publication of the book "One Girl's War", by Joan Miller, in the Irish Republic.

The Attorney-General: The Government are taking active steps to seek the prevention of the publication and distribution of this book.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answers of 20 November, Official Report, columns 263-5, what criteria were used in deciding on the respective action to be taken in relation to (a) Mr. Nigel West, Mr. Ronnie Symonds, Sir Martin Furnival Jones, Mr. Neil Blair and Mr. Anthony Simkins, on the one hand, and (b) those persons listed in the answer in columns 264 and 265, on the other, in respect of allegations relating to the unauthorised use or disclosure of information about the security services.

The Attorney-General: I agreed with the Director of Public Prosecutions that he would ask the Metropolitan Police to investigate certain statements attributed in recent press articles to Mr. Nigel West (some of them as direct quotations) where it appeared that he might be claiming to have in his possession certain security service documents. Because his claims implied that these documents might have been given to him by certain other named individuals I asked the Director of Public Prosecutions to consider the position in relation to these individuals in the light of the result of the police investigation referred to above. Nigel West's claims did not involve the other 18 individuals named in my answer in columns 264 and 265 and for the action taken in the case of these individuals I refer the hon. Gentleman to that answer.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General on what date Sir Robert Armstrong was informed by Sir Richard Franks that the book "Their Trade is Treachery" was to be published.

The Attorney-General: It would be inappropriate for me to comment on matters which are or may be at issue in the proceedings concerning the Peter Wright case in Australia while those proceedings continue.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General on what date he first knew of and saw, respectively, the internal M15 report discussing Lord Rothschild's rôle in the publication of the book "Their Trade is Treachery" by Chapman Pincher.

The Attorney-General: It is not the Government's policy to comment on matters of national security.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General whether he proposes to take any steps against Sir Dick White, Mr. Arthur Martin or Mr. George Russel Leigh in respect of information on MI5 which they have given to authors.

The Attorney-General: The matter remains under consideration.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General (1) whether he proposes to take any steps against Colonel William Skarden in respect of information of MI5, MI6 or any other security agency or department he has given to authors;

(2) whether he proposes to take any steps against Andrew King in respect of information on MI5, MI6 or any other security agency or department he has given to authors;

(3) whether he proposes to take any steps against Colonel Leo Long in respect of information on MI5, MI6 or any other security agency or department he has given to authors;

(4) whether he proposes to take any steps against Lord Rothschild in respect of information on MI5, MI6 or any other security agency or department he has given to authors;

(5) whether he proposes to take any steps against Sir Robert McKenzie in respect of information on MI5, MI6 or any other security agency or department he has given to authors;

(6) whether he proposes to take any steps against Sir Ashton Roskill in respect of information on MI5, MI6 or any other security agency or department he has given to authors;

(7) whether he proposes to take any steps against Mr. Russell Lee in respect of information on MI5, MI6 or any other security agency or department he has given to authors;

(8) whether he proposes to take any steps against Mr. Christopher Haines in respect of information on MI5, MI6 or any other security agency or department he has given to authors;

(9) whether he proposes to take any steps against Mr. William Luke in respect of information on MI5, MI6 or any other security agency or department he has given to authors;

(10) whether he proposes to take any steps against Mr. Stephen Demowbray in respect of information on MI5, MI6 or any other security agency or department he has given to authors;

(11) whether he proposes to take any steps against Lord Dacre in respect of information on MI5, MI6 or any other security agency or department he has given to authors;

(12) whether he proposes to take any steps against Mr. George Carey Foster in respect of information on MI5, MI6 or any other security agency or department he has given to authors;

(13) whether he proposes to take any steps against Mr. John Cairncross in respect of information on MI5, MI6 or any other security agency or department he has given to authors;

(14) whether he proposes to take any steps against Mr. Malcolm Muggeridge in respect of information on MI5, MI6 or any other security agency or department he has given to authors;

(15) whether he proposes to take any steps against Lord Clanmorris in respect of information on MI5, MI6 or any other security agency or department he has given to authors;

(16) whether he proposes to take any steps against Mr. T. A. R. Robertson in respect of information on MI5, MI6 or any other security agency or department he has given to authors;

(17) whether he proposes to take any steps against Mr. Nigel Burgess in respect of information on MI5, MI6 or any other security agency or department he has given to authors;

(18) whether he proposes to take any steps against Constance Burgess in respect of information on MI5, MI6 or any other security agency or department she has given to authors.

The Attorney-General: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Gentleman in relation to the same persons on 20 November 1986.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Housing (Taxation)

Mr. Raynsford asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the revenue accrued in the current year of restoring income tax on the imputed rent of dwellings at the same rates as applied previously.

Mr. Norman Lamont: At the time of abolition in 1963, schedule A tax charged on owner-occupied properties was mainly based on property valuations of 1935-36. The yield from a similar charge at 1986-87 rates of income tax, based on current valuations for rating purposes (as a proxy for imputed rent income) with an allowance for expenditure on maintenance can be estimated only tentatively, but is unlikely to exceed £500 million in a full year and could be considerably less than this.

VAT

Mr. Bright asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy towards the number of late payments of value added tax by a company which will be necessary (a) in a year, (b) in a three-year and (c) in a 10-year period to trigger a penalty by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Mr. Brooke: Under section 19 of the Finance Act 1985 a company which fails twice within 12 months to pay value added tax by the due date will be liable to a surcharge for each subsequent default until such time as a 12 month period free of default has elapsed.

Mr. Bright asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the implications of the sixth Exchequer directive on value added tax for the proposed compulsory de-registration of businesses below the turnover threshold.

Mr. Brooke: It is not clear whether any proposal to refuse registration to businesses below the registration threshold would be compatible with the European Community sixth VAT directive. In considering such a proposal we would therefore need to discuss the position with the EC Commission and our Community partners.

Mr. Bright asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will consider, in the light of responses to the Customs and Excise consultation document, "VAT: Small Business Review" issued in October, reducing the period for which small firms have to keep value added tax records from six to three years.

Mr. Brooke: As the consultation document explains, Customs and Excise are to appoint an independent consultant to review their VAT record keeping and preserving requirements with the following terms of reference:

"To consider the effect on small businesses of the requirement to preserve VAT records for a maximum of six years; the records that need to be covered by these requirements; and to make recommendations consistent with Customs and Excise's needs in respect of the revenue control of the tax."

The Keith committee, which examined the enforcement powers of the revenue departments, reommended that the maximum period for which Customs and Excise can require VAT records to be preserved should be extended from three to six years. However, within the maximum period there is scope for the exercise of discretion as regards earlier disposal of ancillary records. In this connection I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. Friend, the Member for Brentwood and Isleworth (Mr. Hayhoe) during the debate in Standing Committee B on the 1985 Finance Bill on 21 May 1985 at column 200.

Mr. Bright asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what reactions have come fom organisations representing small businesses to the default provisions set out in the Customs and Excise consultation document, "V.A.T.: Small Business Review", issued in October.

Mr. Brooke: To date, none.

Mr. Bright asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer why he proposes that small businesses joining the proposed system of annual value added tax returns with payments on account, as set out in the consultation document, V.A.T.: Small Business Review, in October, should be compelled to make nine successive monthly payments on account.

Mr. Brooke: The payment of the anticipated tax liability by means of nine payments on account with an additional final adjusting payment would enable traders to transfer more easily from the existing quarterly to the proposed annual accounting system; would protect revenue flows; and is in line with many commercial arrangements for the payment of regular financial liabilities. The proposal will, of course, be brought under review in the light of reactions to the consultation exercise.

Mr. Bright asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria the Customs and Excise envisage applying to calculate anticipated changes in a small business's turnover and trading levels for the purposes of estimating its annual value added tax assessment as outlined in the consultation document, V.A.T.: Small Business Review, issued in October.

Mr. Brooke: The consultative document explains that the preceding year's net tax liability would be used as the base line and that it would be necessary to allow for anticipated changes, in turnover, trading and inflation. Detailed decisions on the criteria to be applied in making such adjustments must await the outcome of the consultation exercise.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the total number of schedule D tax payers who are also registered with the Customs and Excise for value added tax purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I regret that the records are not maintained in this form. The VAT registration records and the Inland Revenue schedule D records are not cross-referred. Registration for VAT is of the "person", that is, sole proprietor, partnership, corporate body and so on, and not necessarily the individual. Schedule D tax is normally levied separately on the individual. Meaningful cross-referencing between the two sets of records is, therefore, not possible.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the latest available figures for the total number of businesses registered with the Customs and Excise for value added tax purposes.

Mr. Brooke: At 6 October 1986 the total number of persons registered for VAT was 1,489,020.

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to zero rate for value added tax purposes building alterations works for the disabled.

Mr. Brooke: Zero-rating already extends to a wide range of building alterations of significance for the disabled. More general reliefs in favour of the disabled have been considered previously, and ruled out on grounds of revenue cost; but I shall bear my hon. Friend's suggestion in mind.

Freeports

Mr. Rathbone asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to review the operation of freeports in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement on their performances to date.

Mr. Brooke: Since the freeports were introduced as an experiment in 1984 their performance has been kept under regular review by Treasury appointed consultants who submit annual progress reports.

Of the six designated sites Liverpool and Southampton are operational and have stated that their throughput is increasing; Birmingham will open at the end of the month; the three other freeports are not operational at present.

Arms Embargo (South Africa)

Mr. Anderson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his general policy on compounding in place of prosecutions for breaches of the arms embargo on South Africa; and whether this policy has been affected by the case of Clement Shaw Ltd.

Mr. Brooke: General policy on the use by Customs and Excise of compounding in place of prosecution remains as set out in the answer given by my hon. Friend the then Minister of State, the Member for Brentford and Isleworth (Mr. Hayhoe), to my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Bruinvels) on 26 April 1984, at column 542. This policy applies in the case of breaches of the arms embargo on South Africa and has not been affected by the case of Clement Shaw Ltd.

Earnings

Mr. Shore asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will provide figures for the weekly earnings after income tax, national insurance contributions and child benefit at (a) actual prices and (b) constant April 1986 prices of (i) a single man, (ii) a married man, (iii) a married man with two children under 11 years of age, (iv) a married man with four children, two under 11, one 11 to 15 and of over 16 years age and (v) a single woman, whose gross weekly earnings are at (a) the lowest decile, (b) the lower quartile, (c) the median, (d) the upper quartile and (e) the highest decile for full-time employees in April 1979 and April 1986, respectively.

Mr. Lawson: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

British Petroleum

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any proposal to sell Government shares in British Petroleum before April 1988.

Mr. Norman Lamont: As my right hon. Friend, the then Chief Secretary told the House on 14 March 1984 at column 420, it is the Government's policy to sell minority residual shareholdings, as the circumstances of the companies, prospectus undertakings and market conditions permit.

Privatisation (Advertising)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money has been spent on advertising in relation to privatisation schemes since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 7 November 1986 at column 628.

North Sea Oil

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what revenues are attributable to North sea oil production so far in 1986; what is expected to be the annual total for 1986; and how this figure compares with that for each year from 1979 to 1985.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Government revenues from United Kingdom oil and gas production amounted to £2·7 billion in the first seven months of the 1986-87 financial year. The 1986 "Autumn Statement" contained a forecast of £4½ billion for the whole financial year. The figures for financial years are as follows:

	£ million
1979-80	2,314
1980-81	3,743
1981-82	6,492
1982-83	7,822
1983-84	8,798
1984-85	12,030
1985-86	11,319

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the current levels of manufacturing output and investment; and how these levels compare with those of 1979.

Mr. MacGregor: Figures for the current and 1979 levels of manufacturing output were published in British Business, 21 November 1986 on page 30. Figures for manufacturing investment were also published in that issue, on pages 27 and 28.

Commercial Bills

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Bank of England's current holding of commercial bills; and what significance the bank's dealings in commercial bills is assumed to have for monetary policy.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what index is now his preferred indicator of the competitiveness of British manufacturing industry.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Capital Allowances

Mr. Speller asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will reinstate the 100 per cent. write-off on machinery against capital allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish draft clauses following Her Majesty's Customs and Excise consultative document on value added tax input tax dated 7 August.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 26 November 1986, c. 284]: No decisions have yet been taken on the range of options set out in the consultative document. The need for changes in primary legislation can only be determined once those decisions are made.

Channel Tunnel (Customs Control)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he proposes to take to ensure the harmonisation of United Kingdom and French customs controls on Channel tunnel trains.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986, c. 80]: We have agreed with the French that frontier controls for the shuttle trains shall be juxtaposed on entrance to the tunnel in the direction of travel: no decisions have yet been taken about the controls for through trains. However, the arrangements for customs controls are to form part of a protocol to the treaty covering all frontier controls, and this protocol is currently under discussion.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Vietnamese Boat People

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards boat people in closed camps in Hong Kong who have relatives in the United Kingdom; and how many are expected to enter the United Kingdom in the last quarter of the current year;

(2) how many Vietnamese boat people resident in closed camps in Hong Kong were allowed to settle in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years.

Mr. Waddinton: Vietnamese refugees are admitted to the United Kingdom both under the family reunion policy, which provides for the spouse and minor children to join refugees already here, and under the United Nation's rescues at sea resettlement offers (RASRO) scheme. In addition, in September 1985, we announced, in response to the report of the Select Committee on Race Relations and Immigration on Vietnmese refugees, that we would accept some 500 refugees in Hong Kong who had relatives in the United Kingdom but who fell outside the criteria for family reunion. Over the last twelve months, about 460 refugees have been admitted on this basis and a further 13 cases are under consideration.

I understand that the refugee agencies are not at the moment putting forward applications to fill the small number of remaining places until future policy has been determined. We are now considering future policy towards the problem of Vietnamese refugees in south-east Asia as a whole. In the meantime, our commitment to RASRO and family reunion continues and 27 people have been accepted under these schemes in the last two months.

The number of those admitted over the last five years are as follows:

1981 1,775
1982 241 of which 2 came from closed camps
1983 101 of which 15 came from closed camps
1984 88 of which 38 came from closed camps
1985 44 none of whom came from closed camps
1986 444 of which 181 came from closed camp

(1981 was the last year of the extended criteria for family reunion and the closed camps were not established until 2 July 1982.)

Telephone Tapping

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether Her Majesty's Government's assurances to honourable Members that their telephone calls will not be tapped applies also to British Members of the European Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

(2) whether, in the case of an individual who has been the subject of telephone tapping and who is subsequently elected to the House of Commons, the records of such tappings are destroyed when the individual under surveillance becomes an honourable Member; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Courts (Staffing)

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received from the trade union movement about the staffing of courts in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

Staffing was raised by the trade union side at a recent meeting of the departmental Whitley council. The Chancellor of the Exchequer's autumn statement published on 6 November included provision for additional manpower and money for the courts in England and Wales as represented by the trade union side. Full details will be contained in the next Public Expenditure White Paper.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Lyme Disease

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he proposes to stem the incidence of Lyme disease in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie Lyme disease is communicated to man by the bite of a hard tick harboured by deer and wild rodents. It is not common in the United Kingdom — 13 cases were reported from East Anglia in 1984 and several further cases in the New Forest this year. The best preventive measure is to avoid likely tick-infested areas when feasible. The disease responds to phenoxmethyl, penicillin or tetracycline.

The Public Health Laboratory Service's communicable disease surveillance centre will soon begin routine collection of positive laboratory results, so that cases of Lyme disease may be included in a continuing national surveillance system and the incidence of the disease kept under review.

Residential Care (Costs)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the scope of investigation for the committees he has set up chaired by (a) Mrs. Joan Firth and (b) Lady Wagner about private residential care costs and standards; and when they are estimated to report.

Mr. Newton: The scope and terms of reference of the two working parties are as follows:

(a) "To review the arrangements throughout the United Kingdom for financial support of residents in local authority, private and voluntary residential care homes, having regard to the three options outlined in the 1985 Working Party Report on Supplementary Benefit and Residential Care and any others which may be identified; to examine the resource and service related implications for both central and local government, any legislative implications, and any need for the transfer of resources; and to make recommendations for a coherent system of financial support which aims to combine flexibility and responsiveness to individual needs and circumstances with the optimum use of public resources."

A copy of the 1985 working-party report is in the Library.

Lady Wagner's working party was set up in March 1985 by the National Institute for Social Work.

(b) "To review the role of residential care and the range of services given in statutory, voluntary and private residential establishments within the personal social services in England and Wales; to consider, having regard to the practical constraints and other relevant developments, what changes, if any, are required to enable the residential care sector to respond more effectively to changing social needs: and to make recommendations accordingly."

(a) is expected to report by next Easter and (b) early in 1988.

RAWP (Future Operation)

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy with regard to the future operation of the resources allocation working party; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Government remain fully committed to improving equity of access to services for people in equal need. We have set in hand a review of the RAWP formula to explore the scope for improving the way in which the formula measures relative need. Meanwhile, in order to assist with transitional problems in some districts, my right hon. Friend announced on 6 November the setting up of a special fund of £30 million available over the next two years.

Heating Additions

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total of heating additions for pensioners for the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Lyell: The following is the information:

The total number of heating additions paid to supplementary pensioners

	000s
1980	1,450
1981	1,558
1982	1,567
1983	1,442
1984	1,493

Source: Annual Statistical Inquiry.

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, when calculating the level of supplementary benefit, what specific consideration is given to heating costs; and how this is calculated.

Mr. Major: The supplementary benefit scale rates are uprated in line with increases in the retail price index (excluding housing costs) which, among other things, reflects changes in fuel costs. Heating additions are reviewed separately against movements in the fuel element of the price index.

Mr. Leadbitter asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to (a) simplify the qualifying requirements for fuel allowances and (b) remove the average temperature level assessment, and establish the principle of direct payments for all retirement pensioners during the winter period.

Mr. Major: This Government have simplified the system of weekly heating additions for supplementary benefit claimants by introducing automatic entitlement for certain groups, including householders aged 65 or over, long-term sick or disabled people, and families who have a child under five. These additions are paid throughout the year.

For payment in periods of exceptionally cold weather I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) on 20 November at columns 326-27.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the present formula for making extreme weather payments; whether he has any proposals to make changes to the formula; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) on 20 November, at columns 326-27. The current arrangements for exceptionally severe weather payments are described in the report on the new arrangements by the Social Security Advisory Committee (Cm. 18).

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will explain why temperatures calculated for the exceptionally severe weather allowance for the Cowdenbeath area are to be calculated at Turnhouse airport.

Mr. Major: National climatological message stations (NCMs) have been linked to local office areas in consultation with the Meteorological Office taking account of factors such as climatological conditions, the reliability of information produced and the speed with which information could be passed onto the Meteorological Office.

Meteorological data collected by the Turnhouse (Edinburgh Airport) NCM is considered to be the more representative of conditions in the area including Cowdenbeath area. This station is nearer to Cowdenbeath than the Tummel bridge station.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services with regard to single payment regulation No. 26, how many times temperatures at (a) Tomme bridge and (b) Turnhouse have fallen below a weekly average of −1·5°C in (a) the most recent four years and (b) the most recent 10 years.

Mr. Major: The information held by this Department was published as annex B to the Secretary of State's statement on the report of the Social Security Advisory Committee on proposals for a new scheme of exceptionally cold weather payment (Cm. 18).

Redundancy Pay

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider a revision of his Department's regulation 9(2) (a) concerning redundancy pay.

Mr. Major: Lump sum redundancy payments are treated as capital for supplementary benefit purposes and are not affected by regulation 9(2) (a) of the Supplementary Benefit (Resources) Regulations 1981 (SI. 1981 No. 1527) which covers the treatment of earnings and other income. Future arrangements for the income support scheme are currently under consideration.

Single Payment Claims, Liverpool

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on outstanding single payment claims in the city of Liverpool.

Mr. Lyell: On 18 November 1986 single payment claims from 2,320 claimants were being processed in eight local offices serving the city of Liverpool. Single payment claims are determined as soon as possible after all information required has been collected. Urgent claims are given priority.

Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money Her Majesty's Government have made available to the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation in each of the past seven years.

Mr. Major: The total amount provided to the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation by Government Departments for each financial year since 1979-80 is as follows:

Year	£
1979-80	229,000
1980-81	266,500
1981-82	302,600
1982-83	246,500
1983-84	257,000
1984-85	261,000
1985-86	259,000

Blood Donors (Bone Marrow Donations)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will ask all regional blood transfusion services to tissue-type routinely all blood received from blood donors to discover whether they may be suitable for bone marrow donations; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The National Blood Transfusion Service already has a procedure whereby regular blood donors may also volunteer to donate bone marrow. In those cases the individual can be tissue-typed either within the service, or referred to one of the specialist bone marrow registers.

It would not in our view be appropriate to tissue-type blood donors for this purpose unless they had also volunteered to be bone marrow donors.

Psychiatrists

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many consultant psychiatrists are currently employed in the National Health Service; how many will be required by the year 2000 to meet the needs of the care in the community programme; and whether enough training posts exist to ensure that the future demand will be met.

Mrs. Currie: The numbers of consultant psychiatrists currently employed in the National Health Service in England are given in the table. It is for regional health authorities to judge, as an integral part of their planning, how many additional consultants will be needed in future to meet their plans for service development, including the requirements of the care in the community programme. The Department, with appropriate professional advice, is monitoring closely the expected future demand for consultant psychiatrists to ensure that there are enough training posts.

Consultants in psychiatric specialties employed by the NHS in England, as at 30 September 1985

	Numbers
Mental Illness	1,127
Child and Adolescent Psychiatry	334
Forensic Psychiatry	35
Mental Handicap	155
Psychotherapy	89
All Psychiatric Specialties	1,740

Figures include senior hospital medical officers with allowance, but exclude staff in special hospitals.

Pathology Testing

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the cost of a National Health Service pathology test for (a) bone marrow typing, (b) cervical cancer and (c) acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Mrs. Currie: These costs are not identified in health authority accounts. Estimates of a typical cost are:

(a) Bone marrow typing — up to £25. A donor normally requires only one test; a recipient may need several tests.

(b) Cervical cancer—£2 to £4.

(c) AIDS — £1·35 with the Blood Transfusion Service and £3 with the Public Health Laboratory Service. A high volume of HIV antibody tests are done by the BTS; this lowers the unit cost. Most other tests are done in PHLS laboratories where lower volume increases unit costs.

AIDS

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider expanding trade-in centres for drug addicts' injection kits; if he proposes to allow hospitals to provide free sterile needles in exchange; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We are considering urgently possible measures to reduce the spread of the AIDS virus amongst drug misusers. In doing so we are looking carefully at the question of the availability of injecting equipment. We hope to be able to make an announcement shortly.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied that all blood supplies used for transfusion purposes are free from the acquired immune deficiency syndrome virus; whether some acquired immune deficiency syndrome viruses are not detectable in blood supplies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Sir Gerard Vaughan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will announce urgently when he will commence distributing the leaflets on acquired immune deficiency syndrome to the general public; whether the leaflet is ready for printing; and what information he has as to whether the General Post Office is willing and prepared to start distribution as soon as asked.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 18 November 1986, c. 152]: The leaflet for all households is currently being printed. The Post Office is giving the fullest co-operation to ensure that the leaflet will be distributed as soon as possible in the new year.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) why the waiting list figures for Bloomsbury district health authority for 31 March published by his Department on Friday 21 November were lower than those originally submitted to his Department by the health authority;

(2) what was the net change in the hospital waiting list figures for 31 March as a result of the validation process commenced in August and completed in November.

Mr. Newton: The process of validating the waiting list figures submitted by district health authorities begins not in August, but as soon as each return is made over a period which spans several months. No running totals are kept centrally since such figures would have no relevance. For Bloomsbury health authority the waiting list figure published by the Department was the latest submitted by the district.

Single Payments

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims for single payments have been received by his Department from people resident in East Lothian during 1986; what was the total sum paid to those claimants for essential and miscellaneous items, respectively; and what is his Department's estimated budget figure for single payments in East Lothian for the next financial year.

Mr. Lyell: East Lothian is covered by the Department's Edinburgh East office but their boundaries are not coterminous. During the year ending April 1986 (the latest for which information is available) 18,404 single payment claims were received at the Edinburgh East office. Information on essential and miscellaneous items is not available. Forecasts on expenditure are prepared for Great Britain as a whole and not for any one area.

Nursery Places

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the percentage change in nursery places, wholetime equivalents, between 1979 and today.

Mrs. Currie: It is estimated that the number of local authority, voluntary and private day nursery places in England has increased by 11 per cent. between 1979 and 1986. Information on whole time equivalents is not available.

Unemployment (Benefit)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many and what percentage of the present total of unemployed persons do not qualify for national insurance related benefit because of insufficient contributions, or because they have been unemployed for over 312 days, respectively;

(2) if he will estimate the number and percentage of the present total of unemployed persons who are (a) partially and (b) totally dependent on supplementary benefit for their income.

Mr. Major: The information is given in the table:

	Number	Percentage
Total unemployed claimants (as at 8 May 1986)	3,079,341	(100)
No unemployment benefit—insufficient contributions	800,454	(26)
Unemployment benefit exhausted after 312 days	1,068,072	(35)
Unemployment benefit with Supplementary Benefit	194,374	(6)
Supplementary Benefit only[1]	1,683,911	(55)

[1] Although no overall figure is available, a significant proportion of these claimants had other resources—for example some 22 per cent. had child benefit.

Special Medical Boards

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions hon. and right hon. Members have written to him about individual findings of the special medical boards in 1985.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 24 November c. 135]: Hon. and right hon. Members wrote to Ministers on this subject on nine occasions in 1985.

Asbestos

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many awards of industrial death benefit were made in 1985 for (a) asbestosis, (b) diffuse mesothelioma, (c) lung cancer accompanied by asbestosis and (d) lung cancer without asbestosis.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 24 November c.138]: The information is as follows:

Awards of industrial death benefit in 1985

	Number
(a) Asbestosis	71
(b) Diffuse mesothelioma	196
(c) Lung cancer accompanied by asbestosis	—
(d) Lung cancer without asbestosis	—

Pensioners

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the changes in state support for pensioners in real terms as between 1979 and now.

Mr. Lyell [pursuant to his reply, 25 November c. 202]: Total state support for pensioners includes both retirement pensions and other benefits for which they are eligible, such as housing benefit and supplementary pension. Between 1978-79 and 1985-86 benefit expenditure on pensioners grew in real terms by over 25 per cent. or £4 billion.

SCOTLAND

Hospital Facilities (U.S. Forces)

Mr. Buchan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland which hospitals and hospital facilities under the control of the Scottish Home and Health Department have been earmarked for use by the United States Armed Forces under the United States/United Kingdom lines of communications agreement.

Mr. Lang: Detailed contingency plans are necessarily classified. Planning for the National Health Service in Scotland in time of crisis or war does not, however, include the designation of any specific facilities for the exclusive use of United States forces.

Paediatricians

Mr. Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the information that his Department holds on the numbers of consultant community paediatricians employed by health authorities in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: There are three consultant community paediatricians currently employed by health boards in Scotland. In addition, some hospital consultants in medical paediatrics are also involved in providing community services.

Roads Expenditure

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out the effects of the Chancellor's autumn statement on public expenditure on the construction and maintenance of national and local authority roads in Scotland for 1986-87, 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90, compared with the figures in the Public Expenditure White Paper for January 1986.

Mr. Ancram: The autumn statement has no effect on public expenditure on the construction and maintenance of national and local authority roads in Scotland in 1986-87. It simply reports forecasts of spending on those activities this year, which are broadly in line with the provision stated in "Public Expenditure to 1988-89: A Commentary on the Scotland Programme", which provides a detailed breakdown of the provision for the roads and transport programme as stated in volume II of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1986-87 to 1988-89" (Cmnd 9702-II).

In relation to later years, the autumn statement indicated that the Scotland programme would be increased by £540 million and £670 million in 1987-88 and 1988-89 compared with the figures in Cmnd 9702. I am considering the provision for the various elements of my programme within these revised totals and the total for 1989-90, which was announced for the first time in the autumn statement. I shall announce my detailed decisions in due course and full details will be published subsequently in the 1987 edition of "A Commentary on the Scotland Programme".

As regards relevant current expenditure by local authorities in 1987-88, the provision for roads and road lighting within the total I announced in July is £188·3 million, £8·5 million (4·7 per cent.) above the provision for 1986-87. No separate figure for planned provision on this element of local authority current expenditure was stated in "Public Expenditure to 1988-89: A Commentary on the Scotland programme".

Urban Programme Funding

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to grant the request from Strathclyde regional council for a ministerial meeting concerning urban programme funding.

Mr. Ancram: I have agreed to meet a delegation from Strathclyde regional council on 2 December.

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide up-to-date figures indicating (a) the number of project applications for urban programme funding from Strathclyde region and Glasgow district, in each of the past five years, (b) the number of unsuccessful applications in each of the past five years, (c) the number of project applications for urban programme funding from the Hamilton area in each of the past five years and (d) the number of unsuccessful applications in each of the past five years.

Mr. Ancram: For 1986-87, information is as follows in respect of all new applications and requests for extensions or to supplementary provision for existing projects:

Local authority	Applications received	Unsuccessful applications
Strathclyde Regional Council	[1]393	[2]47
Glasgow District Council	44	19
Hamilton District Council	6	1

[1] Fifteen for Hamilton area.
[2] Two for Hamilton area.

Comparable information for previous years could not be compiled except at disproportionate expense.

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide figures indicating the amount of urban programme funding allocated to (a) Strathclyde region, (b) Lothian region and (c) Tayside region, in each of the past five years.

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows:

	Capital £ million	Current £ million
Strathclyde Region
1982-83	9·591	15·758
1983-84	11·060	17·675
1984-85	6·173	19·345
1985-86	7·172	21·396
1986-87 (to date)	6·754	19·975
Lothian Region
1982-83	0·398	0·999
1983-84	0·615	1·182
1984-85	0·745	0·858
1985-86	0·394	1·153
1986-87 (to date)	0·497	1·379
Tayside Region
1982-83	0·293	0·229
1983-84	0·560	0·378
1984-85	0·708	0·553
1985-86	0·578	0·603
1986-87 (to date)	0·392	0·595

Note: The figures comprise approved expenditure for the regional council and all district councils within those regions for which the information is sought. They are at outturn prices.

Road Humps

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he plans to give local authorities the required power to put down ramps in residential side streets to control traffic speeds; why the grant of these powers has been delayed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: A decision on the commencement of the road hump provisions in the Roads (Scotland) Act 1984 will be made once more experience has been gained in the use of road humps in England and Wales. My right hon. and learned Friend has received no representations in favour of road humps from Scottish local authorities.

Community Charge

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the maximum community charge to be paid by pensioners on supplementary pension and others on supplementary benefit as a proportion of the agreed charge.

Mr. Ancram: The community charge rebate scheme in Scotland is likely to follow closely the structure of the revised housing benefit scheme which is to be introduced on 1 April 1988. The illustrative tables included in the White Paper (Cmnd. 9691) which preceded the Social Security Act 1986 and in the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) were prepared on the basis that the minimum contribution for those in receipt of income support would be 20 per cent.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons will pay 20 per cent. of the agreed community charge.

Mr. Ancram: The intention is that all those in receipt of income support and those at equivalent levels of net income will pay the minimum contribution to the community charge. No reliable estimates can be made of the numbers involved at this stage.

Parole

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will authorise the disclosure to prisoners in certain cases of the criteria on which their parole applications have been rejected.

Mr. Rifkind: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to reduce the waiting time for life sentence prisoners between the preparation of reports for parole reviews and the announcement of an official decision.

Mr. Rifkind: I am giving priority to measures to further reduce the backlog as quickly as possible. The staff dealing with life licence reviews has been strengthened and new procedures have been introduced in consultation with the Parole Board for Scotland.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many long-term prisoners in Scotland chose not to be considered for parole, though eligible, in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Rifkind: Prisoners or young offenders serving sentences of more than 18 months are eligible for consideration for early release on parole licence. Figures for those who decide not to be considered for parole are given in the annual reports of the Parole Board for Scotland.

For the 10 year period between 1976 and 1985 the information is as follows:

	Total Number of prisoners eligible for parole	Number of Prisoners who chose not to be considered for parole
1976	788	110
1977	787	101
1978	807	99
1979	869	105
1980	837	108
1981	903	101
1982	772	94
1983	883	92
1984	819	100

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to seek to reduce the qualifying period for parole for prisoners in Scotland from 12 months to six months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: This proposal was considered but rejected by my predecessor in his statement on the Government's policy on parole on 18 December 1984. The operation of the parole scheme in Scotland is kept under careful review. At this stage, however, I am not convinced that a change of this kind would be appropriate.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to publish revised guidelines for social workers on the compilation of parole reports.

Mr. Rifkind: My predecessor's statement on parole policy in December 1984 made it plain that existing procedures for initial review of parole cases by local review committees would continue. No change was made in the entitlement to parole review or the arrangements for compilation of parole reports for the purposes of review. The Parole Board for Scotland continues to see those cases which it would have seen before after favourable initial review and has the opportunity to bring to my attention any exceptional circumstances which, in their view, might set aside the presumption of my policy on parole in cases to which it applies.

No change in the form or substance of reports by prison social workers or by field social workers on home circumstances has been necessary.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he plans to introduce the practice of allowing certain local review committee recommendations for the release of prisoners to be carried out without reference to the Parole Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I have no plans to do so at present, but I shall keep this suggestion in mind.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number and percentage of long term prisoners in Scotland eligible for parole under the revised guidelines; how many have been referred to the Parole Board for Scotland for information only; and how many have been recommended for release.

Mr. Rifkind: All prisoners serving more than 18 months are eligible for parole consideration. Details of the numbers of cases reviewed, considered by the Parole Board for Scotland and recommended for release are given in the annual reports of the Parole Board for Scotland.

The lastest available information, for 1985, is as follows:

	Number
Number of cases eligible for consideration	853
Number not wishing to be considered	101
Number referred to the Parole Board for Scotland	483
Number recommended by the Board for parole	226

A total of 63 cases were referred to the Parole Board for Scotland, for information, on the basis of my policy presumption against early release on licence for certain offenders serving sentences of over five years for crimes of violence or drug trafficking. The parole board requested formal referral of four of these cases, two on the current review and two at the next review. My predecessor agreed to both requests for referral on the current review and parole was granted, on the formal recommendation of the parole board, in both these cases.

In addition 50 other cases, in the same categories of sentence and offence were referred to the parole board on a formal basis permitting a period of parole of up to eight months on final review. Parole of periods between four months and eight months was granted in 34 of these cases on the formal recommendation of the parole board.

Nuclear Installations

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what sections of the Torness emergency plan were approved by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate before fuelling of the reactor was started; and if he will arrange for a copy of these sections to be placed in the Library;

(2) what sections of the Torness emergency plan are required to be approved by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate before commissioning procedures beyond the fuelling of the reactor; when these sections were are or likely to be approved; and if he will make a statement;

(3) when he expects the full emergency plan for Torness nuclear power station to be approved by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate.

Mr. Lang: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Chiswick Report

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland which of the recommendations of the Chiswick report on suicide precautions at Glenochil detention centre and young offenders institute have now been implemented.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer to the reply given by my hon. Friend, the Minister for Industry and Home Affairs, to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neil) on 25 November at column 94. I shall write to the hon. Member.

Foodstores

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate the final destinations of foodstuffs released from EEC intervention foodstores in Scotland in the latest available year.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not available.

Mr. Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now publish in the Official Report the average annual amount of foodstock held in EEC intervention foodstores in Dundee in each year since 1980 and the equivalent figures for Scotland overall.

Mr. John MacKay: Intervention stocks are subject to fluctuation and averages for individual stores are not recorded. Stocks in Dundee at 1 January each year since 1980 were:

Tonnes

	Butter	Beef
1980	—	13
1981	—	—
1982	—	—
1983	—	—
1984	—	—
1985	90	440
1986	540	679

I regret that information for the whole of Scotland could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the cost to the taxpayer of the operation of EEC intervention stores in Scotland in the latest year, including storage costs.

Mr. John MacKay: Intervention costs are not available for individual countries of the United Kingdom since they are incurred in support of the United Kingdom market as a whole, irrespective of the location of stores.

Radiation

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what further steps he will take to monitor radiation levels in the Fife region and especially the area around Rosyth dockyard.

Mr. Ancram: Monitoring of the area around Rosyth dockyard is undertaken regularly on behalf of the Scottish Development Department and the results are published in statistical bulletins. In addition, a national monitoring programme, which includes regular milk samples from Fife, is maintained by the National Radiological Protection Board and the Harwell laboratory of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority.

The results do not point to unusual radiation levels in Fife or to any need to extend monitoring there. Monitoring programmes are however kept under review, taking into account the views of local authorities and other interests.

Leukaemia

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he now expects to publish the comprehensive results of the study into leukaemia clusters.

Mr. John MacKay: It is hoped to publish the results of the study shortly.

Caesium 137

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, if he will make a statement on the discovery of concentration of caesium 137 and other isotopes in the silt of the Forth estuary on the Dunfermline district coastline.

Mr. Ancram: Sediments from the Dunfermline district coastline are sampled regularly as part of the marine monitoring programme conducted on behalf of the Scottish Development Department.

Results of this monitoring have been included since 1968 in reports in the series entitled "Radioactivity in Surface and Coastal Waters of the British Isles", published by MAFF and available in the Library. They confirm that the levels of radioactivity present in sediments in the Forth estuary are insignificant.

Forestry

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, if he will publish the names, location and areas of woodlands in Caithness and Sutherland awarded or approved for grants since March 1985 under the Forestry Commission's dedication schemes, basis I, II and III.

Mr. John Mackay [pursuant to his reply, 21 November, 1986, c. 389]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to him on 1 May 1985 in response to a similar question at c. 157. The information given in that reply is still applicable except for the following changes:

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

State Security

55. Mr. Winnick asked the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the progress of the Government's case in the Australian court in respect of a book concerning an ex-MI5 official.

The Attorney-General: The principle we are seeking to establish is clear—all those who served and have served in the security service owe a life-long duty of confidentiality to the Crown.

So far as the proceedings in Sydney are concerned, I must remind the House that I am the plaintiff and therefore cannot comment on anything which is in issue before the court. Although, under the rules of the House, judicial proceedings abroad are not subject to the sub judice rule, I have to be careful to avoid the risk of prejudicing the case or at the worst being in contempt of court in Sydney. It inevitably follows the Government are handicapped in respect of some of the allegations being bandied about.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General if a Law Officer will prosecute the right hon. and learned Member for Wimbledon (Sir M. Havers) under section 2 of the Official Secrets Act for giving confidential information to Mr. Chapman Pincher on 1 January 1983 concerning conversations between Nigel West and Arthur Martin.

The Solicitor-General: No, Sir.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Attorney-General when, pursuant to his answer of 26 November, Official Report, column 268, he hopes to complete his consideration with the Director of Public Prosecutions of the allegations against Sir Arthur Franks and Lord Rothschild.

The Attorney-General: The matter remains under consideration.

Westland plc

53. Mr. Dalyell asked the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the role of the Director of Public Prosecutions in relation to the inquiry into the selectively leaked Law Officer's letter in the Westland affair.

The Attorney-General: I have nothing to add to what has already been said in answer to questions and in statements.

Law Centres

56. Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Attorney-General if he will list the powers of the Lord Chancellor relating to the funding of law centres.

The Solicitor-General: The Lord Chancellor has no specific statutory powers in relation to the funding of law centres. Grants to those law centres which receive support from the Lord Chancellor's Department are made in accordance with the provisions of the Appropriation Act.

EC Budget

Mr. George Robertson asked the Attorney-General what was the cost to public funds of the legal action taken by Her Majesty's Government in the European Court of Justice against the European Parliament 1986 budget.

The Attorney-General: Disbursements from public funds in respect of legal action taken by Her Majesty's Government in the European Court of Justice against the European Parliament's 1986 Budget amounted to £17,360. Work carried out in connection with the case by Government officials was in the course of their ordinary duties and at no extra cost to public funds.

Fraud (Prosecutions)

Mr. Hancock asked the Attorney-General how many prosecutions have been made for fraud in the last two years; and what proportion have resulted in convictions.

The Attorney-General: Fraud is a generic term covering a wide range of offences of differing degrees of gravity but each involving an element of dishonesty. Such offences are prosecuted by a number of prosecuting authorities, whereas my ministerial responsibility is confined to the work of the Director of Public Prosecutions and my Department holds no figures as to the total number of fraud cases prosecuted.

I am able to inform the hon. Member that, during 1985, the fraud divisions of the office of the Director of Public Prosecutions, which handle serious cases of alleged fraud, commenced 150 prosecutions. Fifty-five trials on indictment were completed during that year, of which 42 resulted in conviction and 13 in acquittal. Comparable but more detailed figures for the first nine months of 1986 show that during that period 66 trials on indictment, involving 149 defendants, were completed.

Pleas of guilty or convictions were obtained in 59 cases. The outcome of those cases when analysed in terms of defendants was as follows:

	Number
Pleaded guilty	88
Convicted	45
Acquitted	16

The total sum at risk in the cases dealt with this year to 30 September was £147 million.

TRANSPORT

Airport Charges

Mr. Powley asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to issue permission to levy airport charges to the British Airports Authority's airports.

Mr. Moore: I have granted permissions to levy charges to the operators of Heathrow, Gatwick, Stansted, Prestwick, Glasgow, Edinburgh and Aberdeen airports. I have issued the permissions in accordance with part IV of the Airports Act 1986 and in particular under the powers in section 53; they take effect from today. Copies of the permissions have been placed in the Library.

All seven permissions include conditions requiring, inter alia, that the published accounts of the airport companies show any subsidies to the airport business and the income and expenditure attributable to the levying of airport charges and to operational activities at the airport, as defined in section 30(4) of the Airports Act.

In addition, the permissions for Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted include conditions limiting the maximum amounts which may be levied by way of airport charges. This regulation will operate by means of RPI minus X formulae applying for a five-year period both to BAA's London airport system as a whole and to Heathrow and Gatwick airports individually. In each case, X has been set at 1, reflecting an incentive to increase productivity, and recognising the very substantial airport capital investment programme planned for the next few years.

The conditions take effect from 1 April 1987.

The regulatory framework will protect airlines, their passengers and other airports from abuse by the BAA airports of their market power. The information to be provided in their published accounts will ensure that, if the airports receive any subsidies, these are identified, thus aiding the investigation by the Civil Aviation Authority of complaints of monopolistic or predatory practices. Price regulation will encourage increased cost effectiveness and efficiency at BAA's London airports—key goals of the Government's privatisation programme. It will also provide assurance for BAA's London airport users on the future charges they will face. Airlines using Heathrow airport will retain into the future the benefits of the real reductions in average payments per passenger achieved over the last five years, and airlines using both Heathrow and Gatwick airports should enjoy, on average, further real reductions over the next five years.

Airports, airlines and their passengers can now look forward with confidence to the privatisation of BAA plc, planned for summer 1987, and the benefits which this will bring.

PRIME MINISTER

State Security

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's Government will now withdraw from proceedings on the Wright memoirs in Australia.

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether the statement to the House of 26 March 1981, Official Report, columns 1079-85, regarding allegations against the former director general of MI5, Sir Roger Hollis, took account of information provided by Mr. Peter Wright since his retirement from the security services; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Pontefract and Castleford (Mr. Lofthouse) on 18 November at column 432.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether she was consulted about the visit of Mr. Peter Wright to the United Kingdom at the invitation of Lord Rothschild in 1980; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) on 28 November at columns 387-8.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister when, and by what means, a copy was first obtained on her behalf of Chapman Pincher's book, "Their Trade is Treachery"; and why she formally requested a copy of the book about three days before publication.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) on 28 November at columns 387-8.

Iran-Iraq (Arms Supplies)

Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister whether she will outline the policy of Her Majesty's Government regarding the supply of British made weapons or spare parts to either belligerent power in the war between Iran and Iraq; whether this policy has remained in place throughout the conflict; and what steps have been taken to ensure that it has been fully implemented and supervised throughout.

The Prime Minister: From the beginning of the conflict in 1980, we have consistently been impartial and adopted a highly restrictive policy on the supply of defence equipment to Iran and Iraq.

In 1984 this policy was refined to make it clear that we would not sell any defence equipment to either side that could significantly enhance their capacity to prolong or exacerbate the conflict. The revised guidelines were announced to the House by my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary on 29 October 1985 at column 454. The guidelines are applied rigorously and fairly.

Civil Servants (Appeals)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether she has instituted the system of appeals by civil servants to the head of the Civil Service proposed in the Government's reply to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee's report on "Civil Servants and Ministers: Duties and Responsibilities".

The Prime Minister: In their reply, Cmnd. 9841, to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee report, the Government noted that they accepted in principle the Committee's recommendation that the head of the home Civil Service should be prepared personally to consider appeals from officials in certain circumstances. The reply went on to note that the arrangements and procedures for this right of appeal would be discussed with the Civil Service unions. These discussions are not yet complete.

Westland plc

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister why the Solicitor-General was not consulted regarding the public disclosure of extracts of his letter to the then Secretary of State for Defence; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 17 November, at columns 49-50.

EC Grants

Mr. Hancock asked the Prime Minister what has been the value of grants from the European Economic Community to the United Kingdom for non-agricultural uses, for each of the last five years.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the latest public expenditure White Paper, Cmnd. 9702, pages 62 to 65.

Ministerial Titles

Mr. Frank Field asked the Prime Minister if she will take steps to ensure that the list of Ministers published periodically in the Official Report contains the correct designation of the hon. Member for Huntingdon (Mr. Major) as the Minister for Social Security and the Disabled; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have no responsibility for the contents of the Official Report. The October 1986 edition of the "List of Ministerial Responsibilities" published by the Cabinet Office accurately records the courtesy title of my hon. Friend the Member for Huntingdon as Minister for Social Security and the Disabled.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Mr. William McCrae

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland with regard to the death of Mr. William McCrae in April 1985, at what stage and on what grounds the procurator fiscal at Inverness decided that there were no suspicious circumstances involved in Mr. McCrae's death.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: The procurator fiscal reached a preliminary view that there were no suspicious circumstances after initial investigations had been completed and after receiving the results of the post mortem examination. The grounds on which he reached that view are confidential. His preliminary view, however, was confirmed on completion of full investigations.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland, with regard to the death of Mr. William McCrae in April 1985, at which hospital the post-mortem took place; by whom it was carried out; and to which members of the deceased's family the resulting information was given.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: The post-mortem was performed at Raigmore hospital, Inverness by Dr. Richmond; the resulting information was given to the deceased's brother.

EMPLOYMENT

Dock Workers

Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Paymaster General what is the reducible minimum of dock workers he envisages being employed in the dock labour scheme; and when he expects it will be reached.

Mr. Lee: These are matters of speculation. The number of registered dock workers has been declining for many years and some further decline is to be expected.

Port Employers (Redundancy Payments)

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Paymaster General if he will estimate the likely cost to the taxpayer of writing off debts by port employers in respect of redundancy payments over the next three years.

Mr. Lee: Arrangements for Government grants to assist with the financing of current and future severances of registered dock workers remain as set out by my hon. Friend and predecessor the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) on 24 October 1985 at column 242. In respect of past severances, the same reply stated:

"Interest and capital repayments on the outstanding Government loans to the National Dock Labour Board of £44·5 million will not be sought pending an opportunity to seek parliamentary approval for the write-off of the loans". No suitable opportunity for this has yet arisen.

Work Test

Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General how many of the 1,500 new staff needed to conduct the new availability for work test are in place.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I announced on 28 October that the additional staff required for the new procedure is 1,400. They are being introduced progressively over the next few months. Staff are recruited to meet the needs of new tasks and normal turnover and it is not possible to say how many currently in post relate to availability testing which is part of ordinary benefit assessment work rather than a separate function. However the number of offices who have introduced the new procedures was 386 at 21 November.

Claimant Officers

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Paymaster General if there is to be any link between a claimant officer's pay or bonus or incentive scheme and the reduction in the number of claimants on the unemployment register attributable to the work of that officer.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Claimant advisers are paid in accordance with standard Civil Service rates of pay and do not receive any form of performance bonus or incentive.

I should also refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East (Mr. Prescott), on 4 November 1986 at column 805, in which I said that no targets had been set for claimant advisers to reduce the number of people on the unemployment register.

Restart

Mr. Knox asked the Paymaster General how much is being spent in the current financial year on television advertising for the restart programme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Manpower Services Commission expects to spend some £11·3 million on television advertising for the restart campaign this year. The purpose of this expenditure is to prepare people for their counselling session and introduce them to the wide range of programmes on offer at their restart interview, so as to increase the take up of these programmes and improve the motivation and expectations of those who take part in them. The spending on advertising represents less than 1 per cent. of the total expenditure on these programmes.

Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General how many long-term unemployed people restart counsellors are expected to interview each week; and what is the average number of interviews given.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A survey of interviews in the nine restart pilot areas earlier this year indicated that a counsellor should be able to carry out about 45 interviews per week on a regular basis and to exceed that number for short periods.

Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General what is the average length of a restart interview; and how that average is worked out.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A survey of interviews in the nine restart pilot areas earlier this year indicated that the average length of a restart interview was about 30 minutes. Some lasted an hour, while many were appreciably shorter than the average. The length of each interview will vary according to the circumstances of the individual person whom the interviewer is seeking to help.

Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General how many long-term unemployed people there were in the Huddersfield travel-to-work area before the introduction of the restart scheme; and how many have now been interviewed as part of the restart scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Printing Industry, London

Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General what information he has about the extent of skill shortages in the London printing industry; and what steps are being taken to remedy them.

Mr. Trippier: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Nellist asked the Paymaster General if he will give the figures for unfilled vacancies at Coventry jobcentre, at the latest convenient date, broken down into (a) full-time jobs, (b) part-time jobs, (c) jobs located (i) within the city boundaries, (ii) up to 25 miles from Coventry and (iii) over 25 miles from Coventry and (d) placements on Government schemes.

Mr. Lee: Of the vacancies which had been notified to Coventry jobcentre, 1,198 remained unfilled as at 3 October. The detailed information requested is not readily available. I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Mr. Nellist asked the Paymaster General if he will give the latest information on the numbers of unemployed workers in Coventry, broken down by age, sex and duration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Following is the requested information, which is available in the Library.

Mr. Nellist asked the Paymaster General if he will publish in the Official Report the number of people unemployed in each district ward of Coventry and the number of such people who have been unemployed for one year or more.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the numbers of unemployed claimants at 9 October 1986 in each electoral ward in the Coventry local authority district, and the number of those who have been unemployed for over one year.

	Total unemployed	Unemployed over one year

Mr. Nellist asked the Paymaster General what information he has on the number of construction workers who are unemployed in Coventry and in the west Midlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: According to the labour force survey in the spring of 1985, the number of people without jobs and looking for work having left employment at some time within the previous three years with their last job in the construction industry was 23,000 in the west midlands region and 11,000 in the west midlands metropolitan area. Figures for Coventry are not available because of the sampling error that would be involved.

Mr. Nellist asked the Paymaster General what has been the average number of registered job vacancies in Coventry each month of the current year.

Mr. Lee: Information on unfilled vacancies is only available for a specified day in each month. The following table shows numbers of unfilled vacancies at the Coventry jobcentre on these dates in the period January 1986 to October 1986. This information is available in the Library.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Paymaster General if he will list the numbers of people unemployed for each of the last three months in the parliamentary constituency of Birkenhead; and if he will give these figures as a percentage of the total population of the constituency.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. The numbers of unemployed claimants in the Birkenhead parliamentary constituency for the last three months are as follows:

	Number
August 1986	9,922
September 1986	9,933

The latest estimates of population for parliamentary constituencies are based on the 1981 census when less than half the population of 90,913 in the Birkenhead constituency were economically active. Estimates of the current population are not available.

TVEI

Mr. O'Brien asked the Paymaster General if resources will be made available for all schools to carry out technical and vocational education initiative courses from September 1987.

Mr. Trippier: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Workfare

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General when he expects to complete his study into the workfare scheme in the United States of America; and whether he will publish the full report of this study, including his assessment of its relevance to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: The research study on "Workfare" is continuing and I cannot say yet when it will be completed. I hope that the results will be published in due course.

Parental Leave

Ms. Richardson asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the progress of the European Commission parental leave directive during the last six months.

Mr. Lee: No discussions have taken place since the Commission announced at the June meeting of the Council of Labour and Social Affairs Ministers that, instead of pursuing discussions on the draft directive, they would be proposing a small series of "actions" in the area of sharing family and occupational responsibilities.

Community Programme

Dr. McDonald asked the Paymaster General what was the number of married women in the community programme for each year since it started; and if he will also give the total number of participants.

Mr. Lee: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Overseas Students

62. Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report the number of students being grant-aided for studies on the development of rural and other co-operative societies at the Co-operative college, Loughborough, giving their country of origin.

Mr. Chris Patten: Forty-five overseas students have received assistance under the aid programme during 1986 for study at the Co-operative college, Loughborough. Twenty-three are there at present. I shall publish in the Official Report their country of origin.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

Overseas Aid

63. Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the proportion of gross domestic product represented by expenditure on overseas aid in 1979; and what is the comparable proportion for 1986-87.

Mr. Chris Patten: Net public expenditure on overseas aid as defined in British Aid Statistics, copies of which are in the Library of the House, represented 0·44 per cent. of gross domestic product in 1979 and 0·34 per cent. of gross domestic product in 1985, the latest year for which figures are available.

Children (Immunisation)

64. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the Government's contribution to the United Nations International Emergency Fund project to immunise children against six preventable diseases.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government's normal contribution to UNICEF covers the immunisation programme for children. In addition, we have agreed to contribute £1 million in response to the latest UNICEF appeal for Africa, which will support immunisation programmes.

Pakistan

65. Mr. Grist asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the size and range of the British aid programme to Pakistan and the level of support provided.

Mr. Chris Patten: We expect to spend about £25 million in Pakistan this year. The main elements of the programme are in irrigation, flood control, agriculture and power.

During my visit last week, I visited the left bank outfall drain project, to which we are contributing £27 million, the Sukkar barrage rehabilitation project to which we are contributing £9·4 million, and the Allama Iqbal open university project. I also announced that we would be providing a further £15 million grant for projects in the power sector. We are also assisting Afghan refugees within Pakistan. I visited some of the camps and announced that the Government would be giving £3·5 million to UNHRC for its work with the refugees.

EC Food Aid

66. Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is satisfied with the arrangements for providing European Community food aid to developing countries.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government have been concerned for some time at the inadequacies of the Community's food aid programme, but the new powers and procedures agreed by the Development Council on 11 November, while not perfect, provide the basis for a great improvement in the future.

Caribbean Basin

Mr. Garrett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to visit any aid project in any of the countries in the Caribbean basin.

Mr. Chris Patten: Neither my right hon. and learned Friend nor I have at present any plans to visit aid projects in the Caribbean or Central America.

Agriculture

Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans for increasing the emphasis on agricultural development in the aid programme.

Mr. Chris Patten: During the past two years project aid related to agriculture has increased from 14·5 per cent. of the total project aid programme to 18 per cent. I intend that this trend should accelerate.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Cutlery

Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will insist that all cutlery imported into the United Kingdom is clearly marked with the country of origin;

(2) if he will take steps to ensure that manufactured goods imported into the United Kingdom are clearly marked with the country of origin;

(3) what steps he is taking to protect the Sheffield cutlery industry when the country of origin is not clearly marked on imported cutlery.

Mr. Howard: The European Court of Justice has already made it clear that a requirement for imported goods, including cutlery, to be origin-marked irrespective of the circumstances, is incompatible with the EEC treaty.

As regards to the position on misleading indications of origin I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave today to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor).

Motor Cars

Mr. Malins asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish a table showing information to him on (i) production, (ii) exports and (iii) imports of motor cars by Japan, the United States of America and the European Community as a whole for the years 1970, 1975, 1980, 1985 and 1986.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Malins asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish (i) a table showing European Community exports to and imports from Japan in United States dollars for each year from 1970 to 1985 with estimates for 1986 together with the percentage change in each from the previous year, with a separate column showing the overall trade balance for each year and (ii) comparable information available to him on United States—Japan trade.

GNP Statistics

Mr. Malins asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will publish a table showing information available to him on (i) the nominal gross national product in United States dollars for Japan, the United States of America and the European Community for the years 1970, 1975, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986, estimated, and (ii) the nominal gross national product of Japan expressed in yen for the same years;

(2) if he will publish a table showing information available to him on (i) nominal gross national product per capita in United States dollars for Japan, the United States of America and the European Community for the years 1970, 1975, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986, estimated, and (ii) nominal gross national product per capita in Japan expressed in yen for the same years.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is in the following tables. Estimates for the whole of the European Community in 1986 are not readily available.

Radio Transmitter, Eastcote

Mr. Wilkinson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, in the light of the continued interference to the radio, television and telephone reception of the residents in Tudor Close, Eastcote, Middlesex from an amateur radio transmitter in the neighbourhood, he will now use his powers permanently to revoke the licence of this amateur radio transmitter.

Mr. Butcher: Reports of further reception problems in the locality have been received recently and are being investigated by the Department's radio investigation service. However, the amateur radio station in question still remains closed down pending the outcome of licence variation proceedings. I am now awaiting the results of exhaustive tests on the station that have been conducted by the radio investigation service jointly with representatives of the radio amateur concerned. When the report on these tests have been received and assessed a decision will be made as to what restrictions, if any, need to be applied to the amateur's licence.

Demon Pressure Washers

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he hopes to make a decision on regional selective assistance to Demon Pressure Washers, Ivybridge, Devon; and if he will explain the 11-month delay in processing the application.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Department of Trade and Industry has not received a formal application for regional selective assistance from Demon Pressure Washers, Ivybridge, Devon. I understand that the company has discussed a potential application with the Department's regional officials on a number of occasions during the past year, but has yet to submit a fully documented application.

Takeovers

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what is his policy towards takeovers of public limited companies by management groups from outside such companies;

(2) if the Director General of Fair Trading has provided him with information about the management buy-in of Simon Engineering plc by means of an offer by a new management and institutional consortium through Valuedale plc; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Invisible Exports

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to what factors he attributes the increase in the invisibles trade surplus in the month of October; and whether there have been any changes in methodology or statistical assumption in the calculation of the invisibles balance.

Mr. Alan Clark: The projection of the invisible balance for October is based on the same methodolgy as previous figures prepared at this stage of the quarterly cycle of balance of payments statistics. It reflects the latest evidence on trends in the main components of the invisible account available up to the middle of November on interest and exchange rate movements since the third quarter. It is rounded to the nearest £100 million to emphasise its approximate nature.

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will state the basis for the upward revision of the invisibles balance for the months of July, August and September; when was the last occasion on which the balance for the previous quarter was revised upward by one third; and whether there has been any previous occasion on which the projected monthly figures for the invisibles balance were revised in advance of the estimate for the full quarter.

Mr. Alan Clark: The revision to the monthly figures for July, August and September was based on the latest assessment of the main credit and debit flows in the invisible account in the third quarter based on information received from surveys of firms' overseas transactions, returns from financial institutions, etc by the middle of November.

The projected balance has frequently been revised upwards or downwards by £100 million when firm information becomes available, and in the third quarter of 1984 the initial projection of £250 million was later revised to £455 million.

The current practice is not to revise the quarterly projection until the quarterly figures are published in the full balance of payments accounts unless there is strong evidence that a substantial revision is required.

For the previous quarters of 1986, the indications were that the actual quarterly figures were reasonably close to the projection, allowing for rounding, but for the third quarter a significantly higher level was indicated.

Anti-pollution Technology

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will estimate the contribution to the United Kingdom economy and the export value of British anti-pollution technology, in particular catalytic converters for cars and gas cleaning equipment for power stations; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will provide estimates of the employment currently produced by, and reliant on, anti-pollution technology in Britain, in particular the production of catalytic converters for cars and gas cleaning equipment for power stations; and if he envisages any growth in this sector.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Anti-pollution equipment provides important opportunities for British industry. Catalytic converters for cars are manufactured for domestic consumption and export. The Government's recent decision to fit flue gas desulphurisation equipment to certain power stations will provide further opportunities. No estimates are yet available of the precise effect on employment or exports.

Westland plc

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry at what time and on what date his predecessor, the right hon. and learned Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Brittan) became aware that the Solicitor-General was contemplating writing to the then Defence Secretary regarding alleged material inaccuracies in relation to Her Majesty's Government's policy towards Westland Helicopters.

Mr. Channon: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 17 November, at columns 49-50.

NEDC (Research and Development)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next intends to meet the National Economic Development Council to discuss research and development funding.

Mr. Butcher: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

EC (Regional Fund)

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will produce a table in the Official Report showing the regional distribution of the European Economic Community's regional fund's project aid and showing the percentage allocation to Wales, Scotland, the west midlands, the east midlands, the north-west, Northern Ireland, Yorkshire and Humberside, the north and the south-west for each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I will write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Moneylending (Licences)

Mr. Michael Cocks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many money lending licence applications have been received and how many licences issued over the current year, under the Consumer Credit Act 1974;

(2) how many money lending licence applications have been received and how many licences issued over the current year under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 and in the Bristol district council area;

(3) how many money lenders licences the Director General of Fair Trading has suspended during the current year; and for what reason;

(4) how many money lenders licences the Director General of Fair Trading has suspended during the current year in the Bristol district council area; and for what reasons;

(5) how many current money lending licences have been issued under the Consumer Credit Act 1974.

Mr. Howard: The licensing of moneylenders under the Consumer Credit Act is the direct responsibility of the Director General of Fair Trading and I will ask him to write to the right hon. Member.

Trade Descriptions

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) why he has decided to seek to repeal the Trade Descriptions Act 1972; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps he will take to ensure that consumers are aware of the country of origin of products following the repeal of the Trade Descriptions Act 1972; and if he will make a statement;

Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from the European Economic Community seeking the repeal of the Trades Descriptions Act 1972; whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to comply with those representations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Earlier this year, the European Commission served formal notice, under article 169 of the EEC treaty, of its intention to open infraction proceedings against the United Kingdom in connection with the Trade Descriptions Act 1972. The Commission regard the Act as incompatible with article 30 of the treaty.

After careful consideration of the legal position, in particular the earlier judgment of the European Court of Justice against the Trade Descriptions (Origin Marking) (Miscellaneous Goods) Order 1981, the Government reluctantly concluded that the United Kingdom could not reasonably expect successfully to defend a case against the 1972 Act in the court. The Government accordingly informed the Committee of their intention to repeal the Act, and provision for this is made in the Consumer Protection Bill which is now before another place.

The Government remain of the view that consumers are entitled to protection against being misled about the origin of the goods they purchase and has already informed consumer and trade associations of its intention to explore with them the possibility of an order under section 8 of the Trade Descriptions Act 1968, to supplement the basic prohibition against false or misleading indications of origin in that Act, which itself is not in question. The Government will welcome any suggestions for such an order consistent with the requirements of Community law.

It is also the Government's intention that the entry into force of the repeal of the 1972 Act should coincide with that of any order providing for successor arrangements. Nothing in these developments affects in any way the right of British manufacturers to mark their goods "Made in Britain", nor the existing penalties for false statements of origin.

Rolls-Royce plc

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, following his answer of 24 November, Official Report, columns 8-9, on the arrangements for employees of Rolls-Royce plc to purchase shares in the offer for sale, what percentage of the offered shares could be purchased if all employees availed themselves of the special arrangements, excluding the 5 per cent. maximum of priority applications.

Mr. Pattie: The figure requested cannot be calculated until the offer price of the shares has been decided. A maximum of 5 per cent. of the offered shares will be reserved for the elements of the offer to which the hon. Member refers.

Telecommunications Apparatus (Approval)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to authorise the Director General of Telecommunications to approve telecommunication maintenance contractors to approve telecommunications apparatus and to designate standards, as provided for in the Telecommunications Act 1984.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend has today authorised the Director General of Telecommunications, under sections 20 and 22 of the Telecommunications Act 1984, to approve telecommunication maintenance contractors; to approve apparatus for connection to telecommunication systems; and to designate telecommunication standards.

Shipbuilding (Intervention Fund)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if any European shipbuilding intervention and payments have been made to private shipbuilding yards; and if he will list any such payments and the shipbuilding yards concerned.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 28 November 1986, c. 376]: Since the shipbuilding intervention fund scheme began in 1977, the following payments have been made to shipbuilding yards in private ownership:

Richards (Shipbuilders) Ltd.—£5,869,247 in respect of 11 ships.
Cochranes (Shipbuilders) Ltd.—£5,029,459 in respect of 20 ships.
Richard Dunston Ltd.—£3,600,000 in respect of 10 ships.
McTay Marine Ltd.—£2,628,479 in respect of 17 ships.
James Cook Ltd.—£328,273 in respect of 2 ships.
Cubow Ltd.—£197,110 in respect of 2 ships.
G. &. O. Brown Ltd.—£137,808 in respect of 2 ships.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if any intervention fund payments have been, or are to be made for shiprepair work.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 28 November 1986, c. 376]: Under the existing European Council directive on state aid to shipbuilding, shipbuilding intervention fund may not be used to support repairing. The draft directive now being discussed makes no provision for ship-repair contracts to receive production aid of this kind.

Cigarette Vending Machines

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he is satisfied with the operation of the regulations governing cigarette vending machines and, in particular, measures to deter juveniles from using them.

Mrs. Currie: I have been asked to reply. The Protection of Children (Tobacco) Act 1986 obliges the court to order those responsible for tobacco vending machines to prevent them being used by young people or to remove them. A circular drawing attention to these provisions was issued on 8 October, the day the Act came into force, to bodies responsible for enforcing the law and for the educational and social well being of young people. A copy was placed in the Library.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Tests (Radiation)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence when the survey by the National Radiological Board of service men who took part in the nuclear tests was set up; who were the members of the board; what percentage of those considered to be at risk were surveyed; on what criteria it was decided who was at risk; and when the results of the survey are expected.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The composition of the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) in October 1983 when the study commenced was as follows:

Sir Frederick Dainton (Chairman)
Mr. A. M. Allen
Professor R. J. Berry
Dr. J. S. Charlton
Professor K. M. Clayton
Professor K. T. Evans
Professor D. J. Jackson
Dr. R. Owen
Professor D. W. Pearce
Professor T. R. E. Southwood
Professor E. M. McGirr
Professor R. E. Steiner
Dr. J. W. Laws

Details of all United Kingdom personnel whom it is known may have participated including the 5,000 or so for whom radiation dose records are available, have been supplied to the NRPB. It is for the NRPB to decide the criteria for inclusion in the study.

The findings of the study are expected to be available in spring of next year.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take steps to set up a judicial inquiry into the current health of ex-service men who took part in the nuclear tests.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Any further inquiry would not be appropriate whilst the independent study by the National Radiological Protection Board is in train.

Crown Proceedings Act 1947

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make a statement on section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947.

Mr. Freeman: We are not yet able to set a date for an announcement of the outcome of our review of section 10. I can however confirm that such an announcement will be made as soon as possible.

Departmental Computers

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a list showing for each Cray computer system in his Department (a) the year and month of ordering and (b) the year and month of acceptance.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The following information is based upon dates of final order letters, and formal written acceptances. Broader conventions underlay the information that I gave on 30 October at c. 263-4 and account for the discrepancies.

Model	a. Ordered	b. Accepted
Cray 1A	October 1978	April 1979
Cray 1S	November 1982	February 1983
Cray 1S	January 1983	February 1984
Cray XMP	March 1983	January 1984

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information can be given on the approximate purchase costs of each Cray computer system in his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is a long-standing practice of the Ministry of Defence to treat details of individual contract prices as commercially confidential.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any information has been received by his Department from United States authorities on the operational specifications of Cray computers used for research and development purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will publish a list showing for each year since 1979 the number and types of DEC VAX computers (a) on order for use at his Department's research and development establishments and (b) operational at his Department's research and development establishments, specifying the relevant establishment in each case;

(2) if he will publish a list showing for each year since 1979 the numbers and types of IBM computers (a) on order for use at his Department's research and development establishments and (b) operational at his Department's research and development establishments, specifying the relevant establishment in each case.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Noble Friend, the Minister of State for Defence Procurement will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his reply of 17 November, Official Report, column 62, to the hon. Member for Yeovil, if he will describe the composition and membership of the evaluation team for each Cray computer system in his Department; if he will describe the functions of such teams; if he will list the dates each such team was formed; and whether each such team has completed its functions.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: These teams were composed of representatives of the user establishment, the MOD IT project support directorate, and project and contract staff of the Central Computer Telecommunications Authority (CCTA) of HM Treasury. The functions of the teams were to identify user requirements, discuss them with potential suppliers, and then evaluate the tenders and place the contract. The teams were formed at AWRE in 1977 and 1983, RAE and RARDE in 1981. All the teams have completed their functions.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated spending on outside consultancy contracts by his Department's research and development establishments in the current year; whether this estimated spending includes any consultancy advice on computer systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The estimated expenditure on separately identifiable outside consultancy contracts by the MOD research establishments in 1986-87 is £1,487,000. This figure includes £368,000 of expenditure on advice on computer systems.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the spending on outside consultancy contracts by his Department's research and development establishments in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The expenditure since 1979 on separately identifiable consultancy contracts by the MOD research establishments is:

Year	£
1979-80	60,000
1980-81	62,000
1981-82	60,000
1982-83	583,000
1983-84	1,563,000
1984-85	1,159,000
1985-86	1,271,000
1986-87	1,487,000

Airborne Early Warning System

Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent the Boeing offset offer for an airborne early warning system includes the large orders already placed or in the pipeline (a) at Shorts of Belfast for civil airliner parts and (b) at Rolls-Royce for engines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The precise way in which the Boeing company proposes to fulfil its offset commitment in the event that we decide to buy the E-3A airborne early warning system is a matter for it, but we would seek to ensure that as high a percentage as possible of such work was related to high technology defence industry.

Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if, in the financial comparison between the Nimrod and AWACS airborne surveillance systems, both tenders will be treated equally in respect of currency exchange, taxes and funding costs; what allowance he proposes to make for the airborne warning and control system purchase being in United States dollars; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The assessment of the cost of the two systems has been done with due regard to all these factors.

Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to how many right hon. and hon. Members have flown on the airborne warning and control system aircraft since they have been in service with the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information sought is not available.

Iran (Arms Sales)

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence on what date arms sales to Iran were restarted; if he will list (i) items supplied to Iran since 1979, (ii) the suppliers and (iii) the value of those items; whether they would be used in that country's war with Iraq; and if the United States Government was consulted at any stage.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No general embargo has been imposed upon the supply of defence or defence-related equipment to Iran. Deliveries were suspended at the time of the Iranian revolution and during the United States hostage crisis. Since then restrictions on defence exports have been applied. Currently these are as set out in the answer given on 29 October 1985 by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in reply to a question by the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel).

It has been the consistent policy of this and previous Administrations not to reveal details of specific defence exports to other countries or their consideration.

Chile

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many visits have been made by Chilean Government representatives, or defence personnel, to naval bases in the United Kingdom in the last five years.

Mr. Stanley: This information is not readily available and could not be compiled except at disproportionate cost.

USS Nathanael Greene

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what information is available to his Department on whether the USS Nathanael Greene proceeded to Holy Loch under nuclear propulsion or conventional propulsion following the recent incident in which it sustained damage; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether the United States authorities informed his Department of any release of radioactive substances by the USS Nathanael Greene in United Kingdom waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I understand that the nuclear propulsion system of the USS Nathanael Greene was not damaged in the incident on 13 March 1986; that there was no release of radioactive substances; and that the boat proceeded under nuclear power to the Holy Loch.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Defence what plans Her Majesty's Government have for researching strategic defence initiative technologies designed specifically to provide extra protection from ballistic missile attack for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As part of the United Kingdom's participation in the United States SDI research programme a study is currently being undertaken into the systems that would be necessary for the integrated defence of Europe within the context of a strategic defence system for the defence of the continentla United States and its Allies against ballistic missiles. This study is known as the European architecture study.

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest information as to the proportion of the United States defence budget for the financial years ending 1986 and 1987 which is assigned to researching strategic defence initiative technologies designed specifically to provide extra protection from ballistic missile attack from Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The SDI research programme accounts for about 1 per cent. of the United States defence budget in fiscal years 1986 and 1987. Much of the programme would be relevant to the problem of defending Europe against ballistic missile attack as well as the United States.

SCOTLAND

Drink Driving

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking during the current year to deter the drinking driver and to reduce his risk of involvement in alcohol-related road traffic accidents.

Mr. Ancram: The Government's road safety publicity campaign aims at making people more aware of the dangers of drinking and driving. It has been focused on specific times of year, and the December phase this year will again convey a clear cut message: "If you drink and drive you're a menace to society."

In addition, as part of European Road Safety Year, police forces in Scotland have initiated a policy of breath-testing, where practicable, every driver and motorcycle rider involved in a road acciden'

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps have been taken to achieve equal opportunities throughout his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Since January 1984 an officer within my Department has been designated as equal opportunities officer with responsibility for co-ordinating policy and advising on all equal opportunity matters concerning racial and sexual discrimination.

The implementation of the programme of action on equal opportunities for women in the Civil Service is being progressed in my Department by a joint management and trade union group and advice is given to staff as matters are agreed by the group.

Cumbernauld Development Corporation

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce any new appointments to the board of Cumbernauld Development Corporation.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 27 November the appointment of Mr. David W. Mitchell as chairman of Cumbernauld Development Corporation with effect from 1 January 1987. A further announcement about other appointments to the corporation will be made shortly.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current waiting list for hospitals administered by the Greater Glasgow health board and Lanarkshire health board.

Mr. John MacKay: The numbers on waiting lists as at 30 September 1985, the lastest year for which statistics are available, are as follows:

	Numbers
Greater Glasgow Health Board	16,006
Lanarkshire Health Board	6,605

These figures show continuing reductions from 1983 and 1984.

AIDS

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is his projected estimate of the numbers of persons suffering from acquired immune deficiency sydrome over the next five years in each health board area;

(2) what is his projected estimate of babies who will be born with the acquired immune deficiency syndrome virus over the next five years in each of the health board areas.

Mr. John Mackay: I regret that it is not possible to provide such estimates.

New Towns (Houses)

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many houses, formerly owned by the development corporations, have been sold in each of the new towns over the past five years.

Mr. Lang: The information is as follows:

	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985
Cumbernauld	565	203	419	448	311
East Kilbride	832	501	874	614	575

Irvine	21	55	93	98	84
Livingston	148	224	369	295	225

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been realised from the sale of assets, other than housing, in each of the new towns between 1980 and 1985.

Mr. Lang: Details of receipts from assets, other than housing, sold by the Scottish new town development corporations for the financial years 1980-81 to 1985-86 are given in the following table.

Receipts from Non-Housing Assets Sold by New Town Development Corporations

(£ million)

	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-4	1984-85	1985-86

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of people employed in manufacturing industry in Kilmarnock and Loudoun in 1979; and what are the latest available figures.

Mr. Lang: Comprehensive estimates fo the number of people working in manufacturing industry in Kilmarnock and Loudaun are not available. However, the estimated number of those working in manufacturing plants with over 10 employees in the Kilmarnock travel-to-work area in 1979 was 13,800 and in 1985, 8,600. These estimates are taken from the regional data system (RDS). No reliable information is available from this source for plants with less than 10 employees. The estimate for 1985 is provisional.

Industry Acts (Assistance)

Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the amount of money paid to companies under the Industry Acts in Kilmarnock and Loudoun since 1983; and how many jobs were either created or protected as a result.

Mr. Lang: In the period between the start of 1983 and 31 October 1986, total payments of regional selective assistance (RSA) to companies in the Kilmarnock and Loudoun parliamentary constituency amounted to £951,000. Comprehensive information on payments of regional development grant (RDG) on a constituency basis is not available. However, since 1983, payments of RDG exceeding £25,000 to firms in the Kilmarnock employment local office area amounted to over £2·3 million. Information on jobs created or safeguarded in the period since 1983 as a result of awards of RDG and RSA and on payments for other forms of assistance under the Industry Acts is not readily available.

Unemployment (Kilmarnock and Loudoun)

Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Kilmarnock and Loudoun have been unemployed for one year or more.

Mr. Lang: On 9 October 1986, the latest date for which information is available, the number of claimants who had been unemployed for one year or more in Kilmarnock and Loudoun local authority district was 2,188. This informaton is available in the Library.

Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of people unemployed in Kilmarnock and Loudoun district at the latest available date; what percentage rate this implies; and what are the comparable rates for Ayrshire and Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the precise form requested. On 9 October 1986, the latest date for which figures are available, the number of unemployed claimants in Kilmarnock and Loudoun local authority district totalled 5,479. Unemployment rates are not calculated for local authority districts or for Ayrshire. However, for the Kilmarnock travel-to-work area, the unemployment rate on the same date was 17·3 per cent.; the equivalent rates for Strathclyde region and Scotland were 18·3 per cent. and 15·6 per cent. respectively.

Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the average length of time a person spends on the unemployment register in Kilmarnock and Loudoun in each year since 1980.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The table below relates to unemployed claimants who had completed a period of unemployment in the Kilmarnock and Loudoun local authority district in October each year from 1983.

Kilmarnock and Loudoun local authority district

Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the average number of people unemployed annually in Kilmarnock and Loudoun in each year since 1979.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The average number of people unemployed in the Kilmarnock travel-to-work area in each year since 1979 is shown in the table below. This information is available in the Library. Due to the various changes which have taken place in the compilation of the unemployment statistics the figures are not directly comparable.

Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many school leavers under the age of 18 years have never had a job since leaving school in Kilmarnock and Loudoun.

Mr. Lang: On 9 October 1986, the latest date for which information is available, the number of school leavers under the age of 18 years who had never had a job since leaving school in Kilmarnock and Loudoun local authority district totalled 368. This information is available in the Library.

Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the numbers in each district council ward in Kilmarnock and Loudoun classified as economically active in the 1981 census.

Mr. Lang: The numbers of people, aged 16 or over and usually resident in each ward who were economically active at the time of the 1981 census are given below.

Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the latest unemployment figures for Kilmarnock and Loudoun in the Official Report by district council ward boundary.

Mr. Lang: I am arranging for this information to be printed in the Official Report today.

On 9 October 1986, the latest date for which information is available, the number of unemployed claimants in each electoral ward of Kilmarnock and Loudoun local authority district was as shown in the table. This information is available in the Library.

Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average level of unemployment in Kilmarnock and Loudoun in (a) 1966, (b) 1976 and (c) May 1979; and how this compares with the current figures.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The average number of people unemployed in the Kilmarnock travel-to-work area for the periods specified was as shown in the table below. Due to various changes which have taken place in the compilation of the statistics, the figures are not comparable.

Housing (Kilmarnock and Loudoun)

Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many houses have been started or completed in the public and private sector in Kilmarnock and Loudoun, and Ayrshire in each year since 1979.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is set out in the table for Kilmarnock and Loudoun district. This information is not collected centrally for areas other than district council areas.

House starts and completions, Kilmarnock and Loudoun district

Year	Starts		Completions
	Public Sector	Private Sector	Public Sector	Private Sector

Job Vacancies

Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current number of vacancies for jobs in (a) Kilmarnock and Loudoun, and (b) Ayrshire.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The table below shows the number of vacancies notified to jobcentres in Ayrshire which remained unfilled on 3 October 1986. The number of vacancies notified to jobcentres nationally is estimated to be only one third of existing vacancies overall.

Jobcentre	Vacancies unfilled
Ayr	296
Cumnock	85

Amphibians and Reptiles

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to improve the protection of amphibians and reptiles, especially the common lizard, slow worm, grass snake and adder; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him today on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Local Government

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a list of those responding (a) in favour and (b) against the proposals in the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government", and those responding to the consultation paper, "Community Charge: Operational Issues."

Mr. Ancram: I have placed in the Library of the House the following list of all the organisations which responded to the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) and to the consultation paper, "Community Charge: Operational Issues." Most of the responses to the Green Paper include comments in favour of some of the detailed proposals and against others. It is not therefore possible to provide separate lists in the form requested.

Universities

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the amount of funds given by his Department to extra-mural and continuing education in Scottish universities at the latest available date.

Mr. John MacKay: Grants for 1986-87 towards the administrative costs of extra-mural departments of universities in Scotland are as follows:

University of Aberdeen	8,100
The University, Dundee	5,400
University of Edinburgh	10,000
University of Glasgow	1,500

Torness Power Station

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for East Lothian on 26 November, Official Report, column 274, if he will publish the formal comments of Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate on the exercise that was conducted at Torness power station on 18 September; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for East Lothian on 26 November, Official Report, column 274, if the advanced gas-cooled simulator at Oldbury which has been used for the training of staff for Torness power station replicates that at the Heysham II station.

Mr. Lang: I am advised by the South of Scotland Electricity Board that the Oldbury AGR simulator replicates the Heysham II station which is, apart from some differences in control equipment, identical to Torness.

Law Reform (Parent and Child) (Scotland) Act

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to bring into operation the Law Reform (Parent and Child) (Scotland) Act 1986.

Mr. Rifkind: I have authorised the commencement of the provisions of the Law Reform (Parent and Child) (Scotland) Act 1986 with effect from 8 December 1986.

WALES

Motor Rallies

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state how many applications were made, through the Royal Automobile Club Motor Sports Association Ltd. for authority to hold motor rallies in each county of Wales during 1985; how many of these applications were granted and refused in the case of each county; whether any complaints were received subsequent to any of these rallies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: During 1985 the Royal Automobile Club Motor Sport Association dealt with 132 applications to hold motor sport rallies in Wales. The applications were recorded on the basis of police force areas and are given in the following table:

Police area	Applications
	Received	Cancelled by organisers	Rejected	Approved
Dyfed/Powys	74	6	11	57
Gwent	11	—	4	7
North Wales	30	4	4	22
South Wales	17	—	2	15
TOTAL	132	10	21	101

I understand that complaints were received after one of the rallies. I believe that each complaint was carefully investigated by the RAC with the aim of attempting to avoid in future the problem which gave rise to the complaint.

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what comments he has received from social services departments of the Welsh counties in response to Welsh health circular (85)46 on "The Changing Role of Specialist Mental Handicap Hospitals in Wales"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: None. The circular was addressed to district health authorities, who were asked to put forward proposals in consultation with county councils.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing for each of the counties of Wales the number of persons aged 16 years of age who were admitted during 1985 to mental handicap hospitals and units, other than as short-term case admissions; and if he will identify the reasons why these young people could not be cared for within the community.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The number of people aged 16 who were admitted to mental handicap hospitals and units in Wales in 1985 for periods of more than a fortnight was as follows:

Area of residence	Admissions
Clwyd	1
Gwent	2
Mid Glamorgan	1
WALES TOTAL	4

Information on reasons for admission is not held centrally. The aim of the all-Wales strategy for the development of services for mentally handicapped people is to prevent admission to hospital for reasons of mental handicap alone, but it will take time for services to build up to realise this aim.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total employed labour force in (a) the private sector and (b) the public sector in Wales; and what were the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The distinction between private and public sector employment is not usually made in the preparation of employment statistics for Wales. Work to provide a regular series for public sector employment for the period referred to is, however, currently in hand and I hope to make the results available soon.

Kidney Disease

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales what statistics he has on the prevalence of kidney disease in Wales since 1960; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not available centrally. The following table shows the numbers of new in-patients and day cases diagnosed as having kidney disease at hospitals in Wales in each year since 1971:

Year	Number
1971	812
1972	975
1973	880
1974	1,016
1975	1,016
1976	956
1977	1,011
1978	1,022
1979	1,291
1980	1,395
1981	1,469
1982	1,234
1983	1,427
1984	1,479
1985	1,574

Hospitals

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales what recent representations he has received concerning hospital services in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I receive many representations concerning a variety of aspects in relation to services in Wales. If the hon. Gentleman is concerned about any particular matter, he may wish to write to me.

Radiography

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the review of regional radiography services in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The review has been completed and a report is being prepared for submission to Ministers.

Home Improvement

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a list of those organisations in Wales that have responded to the May 1985 Green Paper, "Home Improvement — A New Approach".

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is as follows:

Perinatal Mortality

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to make a statement on the all Wales perinatal mortality survey before 31 December.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The final report of the survey group set up under this initiative will be published very shortly and a statement will be made at that time.

Artificial Limbs

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales are waiting for artificial limbs to be (a) repaired and (b) adjusted.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: On 26 November 1986, the numbers of unmet orders for repairs at the Cardiff and Morrison limb centres were 110. Adjustments are undertaken locally as required.

NHS Waiting Lists

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about national health waiting lists in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: We have received a number of representations about NHS waiting lists in Wales. If the hon. Gentleman is concerned about a particular aspect, he may wish to write.

Day Nurseries

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many children have attended day nurseries in Wales in each of the last seven years.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information on the numbers of children attending day nurseries in Wales is not available centrally. The numbers of places available at day nurseries in Wales for each of the last seven years are given in the following table:

Number of places available[1] at 31 March

Year	Number
1980	926
1981	904
1982	934
1983	1,025
1984	1,226
1985	1,243
1986	1,286

[1] Includes facilities provided by local authorities, other registered premises and premises exempt from registration (eg those on Crown property).

Private Schools

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to how many Welsh children attend private or independent schools in Wales; and if he will give the figures for each year from 1979-80 to 1986-87.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The available information is as follows and refers to January for each academic year:

Number of full-time and part-time pupils in independent schools in Wales

	Number
1979-80[1]	12,703
1980-81	12,795
1981-82	12,348
1982-83	11,747
1983-84	11,427
1984-85	11,129
1985-86	11,423

[1] Figures include information on three direct grant schools which, from 1980-81, became independent.

Amphibians and Reptiles

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has any plans to improve the protection of amphibians and reptiles, especially the common lizard, slow worm, grass snake and adder; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him today by my hon. Friend, the Minister for Environment, Countryside and Local Government.

ENERGY

Insulation

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of the number of homes in Great Britain which are inadequately insulated; and what would be the total cost of ensuring that they are all fully and properly insulated.

Mr. Hunt: The latest estimates of the information requested are:

Type of insulation	Definition of adequate[1] level	Number of inadequately insulated homes[2] in Great Britain million	Cost of insulating each home[3] £	Total cost[4] £ million
1. Hot water cylinder jackets	75-80 mm	8·4	10	80

Type of insulation	Definition of adequate[1] level	Number of inadequately insulated homes[2] in Great Britain million	Cost of insulating each home[3] £	Total cost[4] £ million
2 Loft insulation	100 mm in homes with access to loft	9·7	90	900
3 Draughtproofing	Insulation at least in main rooms	12·5	60	750
4 Cavity wall insulation	Insulation in homes with cavity walls	10·6	300	3,200
Total		[5]n.a.	—	5,000

[1]Adequate insulation is taken to be the amount of insulation that, on average, is cost-effective to instal in existing homes. The standard of loft insulation is the mandatory requirement under the Building Regulations for new homes.
[2]Source: Audits of Great Britain Ltd. survey for December 1985.
[3]Source: Department of Energy estimates. The cost estimates for measures 1-3 exclude labour; that for 4 includes labour.
[4]The total cost estimates are rounded.
[5]The available data do not indicate how many dwellings lack at least one of these measures.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Library Expenditure

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to expand the allocation of central Government funds specifically intended for book purchase and other library expenditure in universities, polytechnics and colleges.

Mr. Dunn: For the universities, my right hon. Friend has said that he expects the University Grants Committee to make provision for increases in library purchasing from the additional grants for the universities of £61 million for the financial year 1987-88 and £71 million for 1988-89 that he announced on 6 November at column 490. There is no specific earmarking of funds for book purchase and library expenditure in the advanced further educaton pool from which polytechnics and colleges are funded. The AFE pool will, however, show an increase of provision of 8 per cent. in 1987-88 over the current year.

Truancy

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his assessment of the relationship between the truancy rate in inner-city schools and the social and economic structures of (a) inner-city constituencies in general and (b) Lambeth and Vauxhall in particular.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department does not collect figures about truancy. Socio-economic factors may contribute indirectly to school attendance problems, but the attitude of parents to education and the quality of the experience offered to children at school are in the Government's view more influential in promoting good attendance. The important initiatives which the Government is taking to improve the quality of teaching, the school curriculum and examinations should affect school attendance beneficially.

Universities (Listed Buildings)

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether any provision is made in the calculation of the funds made available to the University Grants Committee for the upkeep of listed buildings occupied by universities and other institutions of higher education.

Mr. Dunn: There is no specified provision for the upkeep of listed buildings either in the recurrent grant allocated to universities on the advice of the UGC or in the funding of local authority and grant aided institutions of higher education.

Teachers of the Deaf

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he now expects to be able to make a statement about the training of teachers of the deaf.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government's policy on the training of teachers of the deaf, and teachers of children with other disabilities, was announced in "Better Schools" (Cmnd. 9469), paragraphs 145-147, published in March 1985.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will extend the mandatory qualification for teachers for the deaf to teachers in a peripatetic-advisory role; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to amend the Education (Teachers) Regulations 1982 as regards the mandatory qualifications for teachers of both the hearing impaired. Before extending the present requirement, he would need to be satisfied that there were sufficient opportunities for specialist training to meet the extra demand that would be created.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to reply to the letter sent to his Department by the National Deaf Children's Society on 1 August concerning the training of teachers of the deaf.

Mrs. Rumbold: I replied to the society's letter and subsequent correspondence on 27 November, and a copy of my reply has been sent to the right hon. Member.

Pupil Numbers

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list, by education authority, those maintained schools with fewer than 20 pupils on the roll in January 1986.

Mr. Dunn: The names of the maintained primary, middle and secondary schools in English local education authorities which had fewer than 20 pupils on the roll in January 1986 are:

Institute of Marine Biochemistry

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland, Official Report, 24 November, columns 35-6, he will itemise (a) the anticipated building costs consequent upon the removal of work from the Institute of Marine Biochemistry in Aberdeen to the Scottish Marine Biological Association Laboratory in Oban, (b) the anticipated receipts from the sale of the Institute of Marine Biology building, (c) the costs of the transfer of mobile staff to Oban and severance payments for non-mobile staff and (d) the forecast running costs at Oban as compared with Aberdeen, expressed as cost per employee.

Mr. Dunn: The information on the anticipated receipts from the sale of the Institute of Marine Biochemistry building at Aberdeen is commercially sensitive, but the receipts are likely to be comparable with the anticipated building costs consequent on the removal of work from the IMB to the Scottish Marine Biological Association laboratory at Oban.

The information requested for (c) and (d) is as follows:

(c) the costs of transfer of mobile staff to Oban are estimated to be £100,000. The severance payments of non-mobile staff are estimated to be £40,000 in the first year and £8,000 thereafter.

(d) The cost of running the IMB work at Aberdeen, excluding support staff, is £80,000 per year. The forecast running costs at Oban after the transfer are estimated to be £40,000 per year. Expressed as cost per scientist — i.e. mobile staff — the respective running costs are £5,700 at Aberdeen and £2,900 at Oban. In addition, the Natural Environment Research Council anticipates that furthrr savings in running costs will result from employing fewer support staff at Oban compared with the present situation at Aberdeen.

Construction and Engineering Courses (Brent)

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response has been received from the Brent education authority as to what action they and the governors of Willesden college of technology are proposing to take in response to the findings of Her Majesty's Inspectors on aspects of part-time further education professional courses in construction and engineering; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: Brent education authority has been unable to respond within the normal consultation period but has informed the Department that the newly reconstituted governing body of Willesden college of technology will be considering a report from the acting principal on 3 December. My officials will be meeting officers of the Brent education authority in December to discuss the accommodation problems of the college.

Avon

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how much has been spent per pupil in the county of Avon's infant schools in each year since 1979;

(2) how much has been spent per pupil in the county of Avon's secondary schools in each year since 1979.

Mr. Dunn: The information given in the table shows how much was spent per pupil in primary and secondary schools in Avon. Information is not available, centrally, on the expenditure on infant schools.

Net Institutional Expenditure per pupil

	Primary Schools £ cash	Secondary Schools £ Cash
1979-80	418	581
1980-81	520	739
1981-82	592	849
1982-83	660	946
1983-84	703	1,023
1984-85	736	1,087

Miss Maureen McGoldrick

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether, in the light of Brent council's decision to hold a disciplinary enquiry into the conduct of Miss Maureen McGoldrick, he will use his powers under section 68 to issue a direction to the council.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has asked the authority to explain immediately why it considers it reasonable to proceed with a disciplinary hearing; and under what powers it is suggested that the authority might investigate the behaviour of school governors and parents in this case. My right hon. Friend will consider whether further action is appropriate in the light of the authority's reply.

Extramural Departments

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the amount of funds given by his Department to extramural departments with responsible body status at the latest available date.

Mr. Dunn: Just over £5,462,000 was paid in grant by my Department to university extramural departments in the financial year 1985-86.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about Government policy on intermediate range nuclear weapons.

Mr. Renton: The Alliance has consistently made it clear that agreements on INF must include equal and global limits. An agreement for the elimination of longer-range intermediate nuclear forces in Europe would have to include tight constraints on the numbers of SS20s in Soviet Asia, and on Soviet short-range INF. As in other areas of arms control, effective verification will be essential.

Daya Bay Nuclear Plant (Hong Kong)

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assurances the Governor of Hong Kong, Sir Edward Youde, gave to senior Chinese officials in Beijing in September regarding the Hong Kong Government's intention to stand by its original decision to support the construction of the Daya Bay nuclear power plant.

Mr. Renton: The Governor of Hong Kong discussed the Daya Bay project with senior Chinese officials during his visit to Beijing in September. He confirmed to them that the Hong Kong Government would stand by the commitments it had made in respect of the project, and conveyed to them the concern felt by people in Hong Kong on Daya Bay. The Chinese authorities assured the Government that they were fully alive to and understood these concerns.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether he will now instruct the Governor of Hong Kong, Sir Edward Youde, to release the full Lazard Brothers report dealing with the financial and economic aspects of the Daya Bay nuclear power plant; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will now instruct the Governor of Hong Kong, Sir Edward Youde, to release the full Harwell report dealing with radiation monitoring, public education, accident assessment and contingency planning in Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No. These are matters for the Hong Kong Government.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the Governor of Hong Kong, Sir Edward Youde, voted on the motion calling for a special debate before the signing of the Daya Bay nuclear power station contract; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The possibility of a request to the President for a special debate during the summer recess was discussed at an in-house meeting of members of the Legislative Council on 3 September 1986. The Governor of Hong Kong as President of the Council does not attend these meetings. The majority of members present at the meeting voted against the suggestion.

Hong Kong

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the economic concessions that the United Kingdom expects to obtain in return for the transfer to China of sovereignty over Hong Kong.

Mr. Renton: None.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received the report from Dr. Steven Brown, technical attaché at the British embassy in West Germany, on the radioactive waste disposal facilities in that country and the report on the visit of the county councils coalition on 29 October; and if he will publish these reports.

Mr. Renton: No comprehensive report has been received recently from Her Majesty's embassy in Bonn either on radioactive waste disposal in the Federal Republic of Germany or to date on the visit of the county councils coalition.

Middletown (Terrorist Attack)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the British ambassador in Dublin made any representations to the Government of the Republic of Ireland following the attack by terrorists from Irish Republic territory on the joint army/police station in Middletown in the United Kingdom on Sunday, 23 November.

Mr. Eggar: No formal representations were made. There has been co-operation between the Garda Siochana in the Republic of Ireland, and the security forces in Northern Ireland over the incident; and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has discussed the incident with the Irish Minister for Justice.

Legion Zimbabwe

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Zimbabwe regarding the detention of the staff of the Legion Zimbabwe.

Mrs. Chalker: Of the two Legion Zimbabwe staff who were detained, one was a mono-British citizen and the other had dual Zimbabwean and British citizenship. However, both were released on bail after overnight detention. There was therefore no occasion for representations. Our High Commission in Harare is closely monitoring the situation and will continue to offer such consular assistance as they properly can during any subsequent legal proceedings.

Hong Kong (Elephants)

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will ensure that the Hong Kong authorities issue entry permits for three elephants, Camilla, Leila and Mina owned by Chipperfields circus.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Harry Cohen) on 28 November, at column 382.

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps will be taken by the Hong Kong authorities to assure the physical and physiological welfare of the three elephants, Camilla, Leila and Mina owned by Chipperfields at present on the way by ship to Hong Kong.

Mr. Renton: The Hong Kong Government have confirmed that all necessary arrangements will be made for veterinary inspection and for safe keeping of the animals while they are in Hong Kong.

Suriname

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British subjects are currently living in Suriname; what is the level of British investment there; what was the volume of trade between Britain and Suriname in each of the last three years; what overseas aid his Department has granted Suriname in the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Consular records indicate that the British Community in Suriname consists of 21 British citizens and 284 British Dependent Territories citizens.

There are no figures available with regard to the level of British investment there.

British trade with Suriname over the last three years was as follows:

	£ million
British exports
1983	8·9
1984	9·6
1985	9·4
British imports
1983	11·6
1984	18·3
1985	15·4

We have no aid programme to Suriname.

THE ARTS

Scottish Arts

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Minister for the Arts what recent representations he has received from the Scottish Arts Council about the level of central Government funding for the arts in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: None. Central Government basic provision for the Arts Council in 1987-88 will be £113·8 million; it will be for the council to determine the Scottish share of this. In addition, the Government have continued the special provision of £0·6 million for the support of Scottish national companies which was made in 1986-87 following Scotland's local government re-organisation.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Coombs asked the Minister for the Arts what is the increase in real terms in central Government and local authority funding for the arts within the arts programme between 1979-80 and 1987-88 (a) including the extra expenditure consequent upon the abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan counties and (b) excluding such money.

Mr. Luce: The increases in central Government and local authority funding between 1979-80 and 1987-88 are 16 per cent. and 10 per cent. in the two cases, respectively.

Mr. Coombs asked the Minister for the Arts what is the increase in central Government funding of the Arts Council in real terms between 1979-80 and 1987-88 (a) including the extra expenditure condsequent upon the abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan counties and (b) excluding such money.

Mr. Luce: The increases in Government funding of the Arts Council in real terms are 30 per cent. and 8 per cent, respectively.

Mr. Coombs asked the Minister for the Arts what is the increase in real terms in central Government expenditure on the arts between 1979-80 and 1987-88 (a) including the extra expenditure consequent upon the abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan counties (b) excluding such money.

Mr. Luce: The increase in the two cases are 28 per cent. and 13 per cent., respectively.

NATIONAL FINANCE

£1 Coin

Mr. J. Enoch Powell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what numbers, respectively, of £1 coins with the thistle reverse in 1984 and the leek reverse in 1985 were put into circulation; and what proportion of the 440,000 coins with flax reverse issued in 1986 have been put into circulation in 1986.

Mr. Lawson: Sixty-nine million £1 coins with the thistle reverse and 178 million £1 coins with the leek reverse have been put into circulation. All 442,000 £1 coins with the flax reverse in 1986 have been put into circulation. The Royal Mint is expecting to issue a further 8·5 million coins bearing the flax plant design in the week commencing 1 December.

European Community (Grants)

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all current grants, subsidies and other receipts from the European Communities for Scotland, England, Wales and Northern Ireland; and if he will publish a table listing the main projects which benefit from such financial assistance.

Mr. Brooke: A breakdown of Community budget receipts by receiving departments (including the Scottish, Welsh and Northern Ireland Officer) and by type of expenditure—for example, the regional development and social funds — is contained in table 3.3.3 of the last public expenditure White Paper, Cmnd. 9702-II, pages 62 to 65. Information concerning the precise breakdown of Community receipts by territorial areas could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

On-course Betting

Mr. Charles Morrison asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the revenue from on-course betting duty for each of the last five years with the percentage increase over the previous year; and if he will break down these figures into 1 April to 30 September and 1 October to 31 March for each year, again with percentage increases.

Mr. Brooke: Following is the information:

	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86
1 April—30 September* (£ million)	9·5	10·6	9·8	11·1	12·1
Change from previous year (percentage)	−12·7	+10·6	−7·5	+13·7	+9·1
1 October—31 March* (£million)	7·6	7·4	7·3	7·4	7·9
Change from previous year (percentage)	+2·4	−2·6	−0·9	+0·1	+7·1

Change from previous year (percentage)	−6·6	+4·8	−4·8	+7·8	+8·3

* These figures include revenue from Totalisators, and have been rounded; the percentage increases have been calculated from the unrounded figures.

Scenic Land

Dr. David Clark asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the scenic land, for which exemption from capital transfer tax or inheritance tax has been given, stating in each case the area of land concerned, the cost to the nation of the exemption, and the additional public access which has been obtained to the land as a result of the exemption.

Mr. Norman Lamont: This information is not maintained centrally and could not be produced without a disproportionate expenditure of time and resources. Tax confidentiality would in any event prevent me from listing areas of land by name. The available statistical data is as follows. With the exception of the years immediately following the introduction of the present scheme of heritage relief in 1976, there is no breakdown between land of outstanding interest (historic, scientific or scenic), buildings of outstanding interest (historic or architectural) and land essential for the protection of the character and amenities of an outstanding building.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Freud asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of harmonisation of value added tax on the commercial viability of the British antique trade; what letters he has received on this subject; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The effect would depend on the nature of the harmonisation — a hypothetical question. I have received a number of letters from the arts and antique trade and from the Museums and Galleries Commission.

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the annual value of zero-rated transactions in the United Kingdom on those goods and services which are the subject of infraction proceedings before the European Court on the issue of whether or not they should be subjected to value added tax.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Freud asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effects of harmonisation of value added tax on the art market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The question is entirely hypothetical, but the effects would depend on the nature of the harmonisation.

European Community (Receipts and Contributions)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the net contribution or net receipt which each member state of the European Economic Community paid or received in the calendar year 1985.

Mr. Brooke: The Commission does not publish such figures, and the United Kingdom does not have the figures available from which to estimate accurately what they might be. A considerable amount of relevant information will become available when the Court of Auditors publishes its report on the 1985 financial year. We expect this about the end of the year.

Oriental Credit

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Bank of England has been involved in the supervision, and eventual liquidation, of a licensed deposit taker called Oriental Credit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Bank of England supervises all licensed deposit-takers and recognised banks under the Banking Act 1979 and subject to the requirement of confidentiality imposed by section 19 of that Act. The steps taken by the Bank under the Act in respect of any particular institution are a matter for the Bank. The Bank has informed me that Oriental Credit Ltd. decided to cease trading on 3 October 1986, that a liquidator was appointed by the creditors at a meeting on 27 October, and that Oriental Credit Ltd. has been removed from the Bank's list of institutions licensed under the Act.

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the implications for his policy on banking supervision by the Bank of England of its appointment of a liquidator in the case of Oriental Credit.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer to my answer of today to the hon. Member which explains that the liquidator was appointed by the creditors.

Football Pools

Mr. Alton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the expected revenue from the levy on income from football pools in 1986-87.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 27 November 1986, c. 343]: I presume that the hon. Member is referring to pool betting duty. It is estimated that the revenue yield from pool betting duty in 1986-87 will be £260 million.

Income Tax

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the tax yield for the higher rate incomes falling within each band of 40 per cent., 50 per cent., 55 per cent.; and 60 per cent., and if he will give the total yield figure for the current financial year.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 27 November 1986, c. 342]: The latest estimates in respect of tax liabilities in 1986-87 are shown below. The figures show the liabilities in excess of the basic rate in respect of the slices of income chargeable at each higher rate.

Tax liabilities 1986-87

Income tax rate (per cent.)	Tax in excess of the basic rate (£ billion)
40	0·3
45	0·4
50	0·4
55	0·3
60	0·8
Total	2·2

Capital Allowances

Mr. Tony Speller asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will reinstate the 100 per cent. write-off on machinery against capital allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 28 November 1986, c. 399]: No. The phasing out of 100 per cent. first year allowances for capital expenditure on machinery or plant was an integral part of the business tax reform strategy. This was specifically aimed at producing a more neutral system based on lower rates of tax and allowances for depreciation more closely linked to the useful life of capital assets.

Commercial Bills

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Bank of England's current holding of commercial bills; and what significance the Bank's dealings in commercial bills is assumed to have for monetary policy.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 28 November 1986, c. 398]: At the end of October, the Bank of England's holdings of commercial bills were £9·6 billion.

The object of the Bank's dealings in commercial bills is broadly to offset the cash flows between the Bank and the money markets, and to leave the clearing banks within reach of their desired operational balances. The terms on which the operations are conducted may influence interest rates.

Earnings

Mr. Shore asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will provide figures for the weekly earnings after income tax, national insurance contributions and child benefit at (a) actual prices and (b) constant April 1986 prices of (i) a single man, (ii) a married man, (iii) a married man with two children under 11 years of age, (iv) a married man with four children, two under 11, one 11 to 15 and over 16 years of age and (v) a single woman, whose gross weekly earnings are at (a) the lowest decile, (b) the lower quartile, (c) the median, (d) the upper quartile and (e) the highest decile for full-time employees in April 1979 and April 1986, respectively.

Mr. Lawson [pursuant to his reply, 28 November 1986, c. 397]: Information in the following table is based on estimates of earnings for men or women as appropriate, in full-time work paid at adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. Estimates are based on information from the annual new earnings surveys. The calculations take no account of income-related benefits to which those at the lowest decile and quartile may be entitled. Taxpayers are assumed to have no reliefs or allowances other than the appropriate personal allowance.

CIVIL SERVICE

Consultants (Fees)

Mr. Dobson asked the Minister for the Civil Service what will be the spending of all Government Departments and agencies on fees to outside consultants in the current year; and what it was in 1979-80 and each intervening year.

Mr. Luce [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1986, c. 363]: Information is available only for management and computer consultants employed by Government Departments. Figures showing spending from 1984-87 are given below. The information for 1979-80 to 1983-84 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

1984-85	27,604,098
1985-86	45,327,450
1986-87[1]	70,071,359

These totals include figures from those Departments to whom the hon. Gentleman has addressed individual questions. They do not include any figures from the Home Office which will provide them at a later date.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Herring

Mr. Wallace asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received regarding the 1987 share out of North sea herring between the European Community and Norway.

Mr. Gummer: The industry has urged us to press for a lower share of North sea herring for Norway than was agreed that year, bearing in mind the need for continued access to whitefish opportunities in Norwegian waters.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Wareing asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what new measures he is taking to help the fishing industry exploit the new fishing opportunities arising from the introduction of the new 150-mile fishery limit around the Falklands.

Mr. Gummer: We hope that the establishment of the Falkland Islands interim conservation and management zone, in itself, will give the United Kingdom fishing industry the opportunity to expand its activities around the Falklands. However, this should be seen as an opening for private enterprise.

Fishing Industry (Aid)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy towards grant-aids being given towards the building of new pursers or new fishing vessels with a pursing capability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Fish Disease

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research Her Majesty's Government have commissioned or completed to examine the nature and causal factors of fish disease in coastal waters bordering the North sea within the last five years.

Mr. Gummer: My Department and the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland have a continuing programme of research to investigate the occurrence and cause of diseases of commercial fish stocks in the North sea. This research work involves investigative voyages and the examination of disease during stock assessment.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Steen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out in tabular form the milk quota for 1986-87, in thousands of tonnes for each of Germany, France, the Netherlands, Belgium, The United Kingdom, the Republic of Ireland and Denmark; and what information he has about the population of each country.

Mr. Gummer: The 1986-87 milk quota for each member state named by my hon. Friend and the latest information available to my Department relating to each country's population is as follows:

Member state	1986-87 Quota 1,000 tonnes (excluding Community Reserve)	Total Population[1] '000
Germany	23,553	61,175
France	26,508	54,947
Netherlands	12,074	14,424
Belgium	3,611	9,855
United Kingdom	15,725	56,488
Republic of Ireland	5,296	3,535
Denmark	4,883	5,112

Nuclear Installations

Mr. Ashdown asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on making available to independent researchers all records held by his Department of environmental monitoring around licensed nuclear installations; and if he will describe the arrangements under which such records may be used by independent researchers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Much of the environmental monitoring around licensed nuclear installations is undertaken by the operators as a condition of their authorisations under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. Summaries of the environmental monitoring data are regularly published for the benefit of local liaison committees. The more detailed information remains the property of the site operators and requests to consult it should be addressed to them.

The monitoring carried out by this Department provides independent verification of the accuracy and reliability of the site operators' data. Summaries of the information gathered on the aquatic environment are published annually and copies placed in the library of the House. Summaries of the information obtained in the terrestrial environment will be published annually from next year. The Ministry is always prepared to make available relevant data to the fullest practicable extent on written application.

Cod Fishing Ban

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any proposals to compensate the inshore fishermen financially for their loss of income due to the European Economic Community cod ban.

Mr. Gummer: No provision exists for compensation to be paid. However, the hon. Member will now know that we have been able to lift the cod ban with effect from 2 December following a quota swap with the Republic of Ireland.

Intervention Stores

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the quantity of butter in European Economic Community intervention which is two years old or more; what is the estimated value of such butter expressed in pence per pound; and what is the estimated cost of storing it for the average period in which such stocks have been in intervention.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current price, expressed in sterling per litre, at which wine is made available from European Economic Community intervention stocks for sale to eastern Europe; and what was the comparable figure 12 months previously.

Mr. Gummer: It is wine alcohol rather than wine that is held in Community public intervention stocks. However, the current minimum price at which low quality wine from the Community is available in bulk for export to some countries outside the Community, including some in eastern Europe, is about 6p per litre. This compares with a price of about 6·6p per litre at this time last year.

My hon. Friend will wish to be aware that the prices quoted do not include the costs of bottling, transportation, distribution, duty and VAT, which, by way of illustration, together make up nearly 90 per cent. of the price of a bottle of wine retailed at £2 in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the latest levels of various foodstuffs and wine in European Economic Community private and public intervention stores; and what were the totals 12 and 24 months previously.

Mr. Gummer: A note setting out, inter alia, the quantities of produce in intervention and private storage in the European Economic Community has been deposited monthly in the Library of the House since January 1985. The quantities for November 1984 are as follows:

Products in Intervention Storage: November 1984

'000 tonnes

Product	Stock Level
Public intervention
Butter	1,026
Skimmed Milk Powder	816
Wheat	5,975
Barley	1,506
Rye	337
Durum	837
Beef	547
Olive Oil	83
Oilseeds	20
Private Storage
Cheese	105
Butter	178
Pigmeat	26
Dried Fruit	46
Beef	143
Table Wine (million hectolitres)	6·28

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total sum spent by the European Economic Community, expressed in terms of pounds per week, on the storage, export and withdrawal of food and wine respectively, over the most recent annual period for which figures are available.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is as follows:

	1985 expenditure converted to weekly basis £
Storage of products in public intervention	15
Export refunds	75
Withdrawals (fish, fresh fruit and vegetables)	3

Bureau Européen des Unions de Consommateurs

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the official status of the Bureau Européen des Unions de Consommateurs within the European Economic Community; if the organisation receives any funding from the European Economic Community or its various institutions; and what contact his Ministry maintains with the organisation.

Mr. Gummer: I understand that the bureau is the representative organisation at Community level of consumer organisations in member states, and that it is consulted on consumer matters by the Commission, from which it receives a small subsidy. My Department maintains contact with the United Kingdom consumer organisations which are members of the bureau.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will urgently review the regulations and conditions under which live elephants may be removed from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) on 27 November 1986 at column 340.

Mr. Cohen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria were used in deciding that the crate containing three elephants belonging to Chipperfields, and now en route to Hong Kong, was satisfactory; whether his officials were informed in advance that the elephants were to be shipped to Hong Kong; and if he will take steps to ensure that elephants are not in future permitted to leave British ports under similar conditions.

Mr. Donald Thompson [pursuant to his reply, 28 November 1986, c. 375]: The container in which the elephants were shipped was examined by a Ministry veterinary officer to ensure that it conformed with the provisions of the Transit of Animals (General) Order 1973. In particular he was instructed to ensure that the container was soundly constructed, adequately ventilated and of a size suitable for the species of animals to be carried; that it afforded protection against the action of the weather or the sea and that it was free of any internal projections or removable partitions that might injure the elephants or cause them unnecessary suffering. He was also asked to satisfy himself that sufficient quantities of bedding were provided and that the container would be properly stowed with a clear area on all sides.

The exporter's agents informed my officials of the approximate date of shipment so that arrangements could be made to examine the container and inspect the elephants. Provided that the arrangements made for their journey comply with the requirements of the Transit of Animals (General) Order 1973 and the animals are fit to travel, I see no reason to place further restrictions on the shipment of elephants from British ports.

Departmental Information Technology Staff

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average number of days training per year given to professional information technology staff within his Department who are no longer trainees, in the most recent years available.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986, c. 61]: The average number of days training in information technology given, off-the-job, to staff classed as automatic data processing functional specialists in my Department was six in 1985 and 6·6 in 1986.

Rhizomania

Mr. Freud asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the testing time for rhizomania in respect of the different crops on which tests are carried out;

(2) whether he intends to seek to ban imported vegetables unless they have been washed; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will list the tonnage of unwashed potatoes imported from Holland in each of the last seven months;

(4) if he is satisfied that sufficient controls exist to minimise the spread of rhizomania in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(5) if he will list the number and locations of reported cases of rhizomania brought to the United Kingdom from the Continent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [pursuant to his reply, 28 November 1986, c. 375]: We have taken a number of measures to guard against the risk of rhizomania being imported into the United Kingdom. In particular, we have taken steps, by statutory order, to:

(i) impose import controls to ensure that all beet seed and stecklings brought into the United Kingdom are free of the disease;

(ii) require all imported seed potatoes to come from areas free from rhizomania;

(iii) require all agricultural machinery to be thoroughly cleaned before import.

In addition, we published last year a code of practice for the safe disposal of waste from imported vegetables which was distributed to all processing, packaging and waste disposal firms which have been encouraged to observe it on a voluntary basis. I regard these controls as providing a good defence against the introduction of this disease.

There have been no outbreaks of rhizomania in the United Kingdom. We were fortunate in being able to take preventive action when it became apparent that the disease was spreading in northern Europe some three years ago.

As part of our monitoring and risk assessment some tests have been carried out on soil attached to imports of ware potatoes: these tests take some eight weeks to complete. In one case rhizomania was detected in soil attached to potatoes imported from the Netherlands for processing in Cambridgeshire. This finding did not alter our assessment of the risk from this source, nor was any special action required as the waste from the consignment in question had already been disposed of in conformity with the voluntary code of practice to which I have referred.

Intensive surveys for signs of rhizomania in growing crops have revealed no trace of the disease in sugar or other beet crops in the United Kingdom. Laboratory tests on beet are necessary only when symptons of possible infection are found during growing crop inspections: these tests can take some two to three weeks.

I am looking into the question of the need for any additional arrangements to further minimise the risk from soil attached to imported vegetables for processing and packaging and I shall make a further statement about this.

Statistics available on imports from the Netherlands do not distinguish between washed and unwashed potatoes.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Northeye Prison

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has yet discussed with the Prison Officers Association the report of the Prison Reform Trust on the events that took place at Northeye prison on 30 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No. The trust submitted its report to Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons, who will evaluate it in preparing his report on the disturbances at Northeye and elsewhere.

Crime (Bristol)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to how many crimes were committed in Bristol in each month since the beginning of 1985; and if he will break these down into the main crime categories.

Mr. Mellor: The information that is available relates to the Avon and Somerset police force area and is given in the following table:

Notifiable offences recorded by the police in Avon and Somerset

Offence groups	1985				1986
	1st quarter	2nd quarter	3rd quarter	4th quarter	1st quarter	2nd quarter

"Operation Delivery"

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people were (a) arrested and (b) charged as a result of "Operation Delivery" in Bristol on 11 and 12 September; and with what offences;

(2) how many people charged as a result of "Operation Delivery" in Bristol on 11 and 12 September were (a) granted bail and (b) remanded in custody; and how many are still being held;

(3) how many people charged as a result of "Operation Delivery" in Bristol on 11 and 12 September have been (a) convicted and (b) acquitted; and how many charges have been (i) dropped or (ii) reduced;

(4) how many charged with affray as a result of "Operation Delivery" in Bristol on 11 and 12 September have been (a) convicted and (b) acquitted; and how many have had the charge (i) dropped or (ii) reduced and to what offence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Avon and Somerset Police that a total of 109 persons were arrested as a result of the operation referred to. Fifty-eight persons were arrested for alleged drugs offences only. The remaining 51 persons were arrested for alleged offences not connected with the purpose of the operation. Details of the latter cases, including offences charged and the outcome of court proceedings, are being collected centrally and will be published in due course. However, information is not being collected centrally on whether those charged were remanded, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Civil Defence

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library copies of the scenarios for the two regional civil defence exercises in the south-east and north-west at the end of November.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Yes. I have done so today.

Sentencing

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people convicted during 1985 for offences involving violence received non-custodial sentences;

(2) how many people convicted during 1985 for offences not involving violence received custodial sentences.

Mr. Mellor: The available information is summarised in table 7.2 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1985" (Cmnd. 10).

Police Officers (Murder)

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers were murdered between the years 1960 to 1970, 1970 to 1980 and 1980 to 1985 in the United Kingdom as a whole and in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland, separately; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: In a case of homicide, it is not possible in the absence of a court decision to distinguish between offences of murder and manslaughter. The available information is given in the following table.

Offences currently[1] recorded as homicide where the victim was a police officer on duty by outcome

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer in the Official Report, 19 November, column 201, how many police officers work on weeding records from the police national computer as a significant part of their duties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that the weeding of the criminal names index of the police national computer currently forms a significant part of the duties of 16 members of the Metropolitan police civil staff. No police officers are employed on this work.

Police (Graduates)

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many graduate entrants have joined the Metropolitan police in each of the last five years; what proportion of that force's manpower they represent; and what proportion of graduates recruited to the police service in England and Wales they represent.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The number of graduates recruited by the Metropolitan Police was 158 in 1981, 175 in 1982, 195 in 1983, 122 in 1984 and 113 in 1985. On 31 August, 1,324 graduates were serving with the Metropolitan Police —4·9 per cent. of the force strength and 24·2 per cent. of the total number of graduates serving in police forces in England and Wales.

Prisons

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information is available to him to show the average time served in prison by offenders sentenced to a term of nine months' and 18 months' imprisonment, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The average time served under sentence in prison department establishments in England and Wales by prisoners discharged in 1985 from sentences of nine months was about five months and from sentences of 18 months about seven and a quarter months. This excludes time served in custody on remand by sentenced prisoners, for which reliable estimates are not available centrally. The corresponding informaton for adult males analysed by sentence length is published in table 4*(f)* of "Prison statistics England and Wales 1985" (Cmnd. 9903).

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost per head of keeping a prisoner at each of Her Majesty's prisons; and how this compares with figures for each of the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: The cost per head of keeping a prisoner at each of Her Majesty's prisons during the financial year 1985-86, the latest year for which information is available, was published in the "Work of the Prison Department 1985/86" (Cmnd. 1) appendix 3, table F. The information for 1984-85 was published in Cmnd. 9699, appendix 2, table D, and for 1983-84 in the "Prison Department Financial Report 1983/84", appendix 1, table 7. Copies of these reports are available in the Library. The figures for earlier years are not available.

Immigration

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average length of time taken for his office to give decisions following hon. Members' representations on immigration cases during the past 12 months.

Mr. Waddington: I regret that this information is not available.

Ford Village

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of Wiltshire as to how many police officers were on duty in Ford village, Wiltshire on 14 and 15 November; why the police dispersed people standing outside the home of the right hon. Member for Bridgwater; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable that 16 officers were available for duty but not all were deployed. The police asked people standing outside the home of my right hon. Friend the Member for Bridgwater (Mr. King) to disperse in order to avoid possible obstructions to the highway and breaches of the peace.

Court Clerks

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received the Justices' Clerks Society's report "Professional Qualification of Court Clerks in the Magistrates' Courts"; and what substantive reply he made.

Mr. Mellor: We received the society's paper in September 1985. My right hon. Friend recently informed the society of his decision, not to propose any change in the qualifications provided for by the justices' clerks (qualifications of assistants) rules 1979 for the foreseeable future.

Broadcasting

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what conclusions he draws from the broadcasting research unit survey of television viewers' attitudes to (a) the British Broadcasting Corporation taking advertising, (b) coverage of crisis situations and (c) the role of current affairs programmes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We conclude that these are complex matters on which a wide range of views and research findings exist.

Extradition

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what conclusions he has reached following the review of procedures and the handling of extradition cases in the Irish Republic announced by him in the House on 24 March.

Mr. Mellor: Work is well advanced under the auspices of the intergovernmental conference on drawing up a memorandum giving guidance on the preparation of warrants. The purpose of this document is to reduce the risk that United Kingdom warrants are rejected by Irish courts on technical grounds.

Parole

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, following the restricted release criteria announced by him on 30 November 1983, he will state (a) the number of prisoners who, prior to 30 November 1983 were eligible for consideration by the Parole Board but were not so considered thereafter, (b) the number of prisoners serving over five years imprisonment for offences of violence or drug trafficking who have been considered for parole in the period November 1983 to November 1986, (c) the number of such prisoners who were recommended for release by the Parole Board as exceptional cases, (d) the number of prisoners so recommended who were released, (e) the average length of time such prisoners spent on parole before their expected date of release and (g) the reasons which guided the Secretary of State to exercise his discretion for and against early release.

Mr. Hurd: The more restricted policy on granting parole to certain categories of prisoners announced by my predecessor on 30 November 1983 did not affect the parole eligibility of any prisoner. Between that date and 30 December 1985, around 1,900 prisoners serving sentences of over five years for offences of violence or drug trafficking were considered for parole by the Parole Board. This figure does not represent the total number of prisoners in those categories who were considered for parole since the cases of some of those found unsuitable for parole by the local review committee at the prison are not referred to the board for further consideration. As recorded in its annual reports for 1984 and 1985, the board concluded that, in addition to those prisoners recommended at final review for a short period on licence at the end of their sentence where it was considered that parole was likely to reduce the long-term risk to the public, there were a further 80 prisoners who were regarded as suitable for parole on genuinely exceptional grounds. The board's recommendation was accepted in 38 of these cases. The average time served on licence by these prisoners was between 15 and 16 months. Each case was considered on its individual merits against the background of the general policy set out in the statement of 30 November. It has never been the practice to give the reasons for parole in individual cases.

Figures for 1986 are not yet available.

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, following the restricted release criteria announced by him on 30 November 1983, he will state for life sentence prisoners (i) the number of prisoners considered by the Parole Board in the three years prior to November 1983, (ii) the number of prisoners considered by the Parole Board in the three years since November 1983, (iii) the number of prisoners considered who were recommended for release by the Parole Board as exception cases, (iv) the number of prisoners so recommended who were released, (v) the average time spent in custody by such prisoners at their release, (vi) the number of prisoners so recommended who were not released, (vii) the average time spent in custody by these prisoners at the time of their review and (viii) the reasons which guided the Secretary of State to exercise his discretion both for and against release in these cases.

Mr. Hurd: The total number of life sentence cases considered by the Parole Board during the period 1981-85 is as follows:

	Number
1981	325
1982	310
1983	264
1984	235
1985	276

The figure for 1986 is not yet available, but it will exceed that for 1985.

No life sentence prisoners in the specific categories mentioned in my predecessor's announcement of 30 November 1983 have been recommended for release by the Parole Board since that date.

Women Prisoners

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women, both on remand and sentenced, were held in police cells in England and Wales on 1 November and for each succeeding day, to the latest day available.

Mr. Mellor: The number of women prisoners held in police cells in England and Wales from 1 November 1986 onwards was as follows. Records available centrally do not distinguish between untried and sentenced prisoners.

November	Number
1	73

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the longest period that a female prisoner has been held in police cells in the current year.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not readily available and could only be ascertained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of women aged under 21 years who have been held in police cells during 1986.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not recorded centrally.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the total number of women held in prison establishments in England and Wales at the latest date available; and what it was on 31 December 1985 and 31 December 1984;

(2) what is the total number of women held on remand in England and Wales at the latest date available; and what it was at 31 December 1985 and 31 December 1984.

Mr. Mellor: The total number of women and the number of unsentenced women held in prison establishments in England and Wales on the dates requested, which are not strictly comparable, was as follows:

Date	Total	Unsentenced
31 October 1986	1,567	334
31 December 1985	1,476	345
31 December 1984	1,359	320

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the total number of women sentenced to a period of imprisonment during 1985;

(2) what was the total number of women sentenced to a period of imprisonment for a crime of violence during 1985;

(3) what was the total number of women aged under 21 years sentenced to a period of imprisonment during 1985.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is published in "Criminal Statistics: England and Wales, 1985" (Cmnd. 10) and the supplementary volumes. Table 7.20 gives numbers sentenced by age group and table S1.1(A) and 2.1(A) give numbers sentenced by offence group.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the certified normal accommodation and the number of women actually held for each of the following establishments for the latest date available (i) Her Majesty's prison Holloway, (ii) Her Majesty's prison Styal, (iii) Her Majesty's prison Bulwood Hall, (iv) Her Majesty's prison Cookham Wood, (v) Her Majesty's prison Askham Grange, (vi) Her Majesty's prison Durham H Wing, (vii) Her Majesty's prison Pucklechurch, (viii) Her Majesty's prison Risley, (ix) Her Majesty's prison Drake Hall, (x) Her Majesty's prison Low Newton, and (xi) Her Majesty's prison Sutton Park.

Mr. Mellor: On 28 November 1986 the certified normal accommodation and total female populations of the establishments requested was as follows:

Establishment	Certified normal accommodation	Population on 28 November 1986
Her Majesty's prison Holloway	247	358
Her Majesty's prison and Her Majesty's youth custody centre Styal	237	279
Her Majesty's prison and Her Majesty's youth custody centre Bullwood hall	120	146
Her Majesty's prison Cookham Wood	120	120
Her Majesty's prison Askham Grange	134	111
Her Majesty's prison Durham H Wing	39	38
Her Majesty's remand centre Pucklechurch	56	81
Her Majesty's remand centre Risley (female wing)	92	123
Her Majesty's prison and Her Majesty's youth custody centre Drake Hall	252	246
Her Majesty's remand centre Low Newton	35	42

Establishment	Certified normal accommodation	Population on 28 November 1986
Her Majesty's prison and Her Majesty's youth custody centre East Sutton Park	74	75
Total	1,406	1,619

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of women remanded in custody during 1985 and subsequently either found not guilty, not proceeded with or given a non-custodial sentence.

Mr. Mellor: The available information is published in table 2.4 of "Prison Statistics England and Wales" (Cmnd. 9903).

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women with no previous convictions were given a prison sentence during 1985.

Mr. Mellor: The available information is published in tables 3.5 and 5.3 of "Prison Statistics England and Wales" (Cmnd. 9903).

London Borough of Brent

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will direct the Local Government Boundary Commission to review council ward boundaries in the London Borough of Brent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. Under section 50 of the Local Government Act 1972, the Secretary of State has no power to direct the Local Government Boundary Commission to carry out a review for the purpose of making proposals for a substantive change of electoral arrangements.

Equal Opportunities Commission

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in the last three months on the case for increased resources for the Equal Opportunities Commission.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None.

"Violence Against Women"

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he will take to monitor the implementation by chief constables of Home Office circular 69/1986 "Violence Against Women".

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The advice to chief officers of police contained in Home Office circular 69/1986 on violence against women provides guidance on operational matters. It is for individual chief officers to act on this advice in the light of local needs. I have asked Her Majesty's inspectors of constabulary to discuss the circular's recommendations with chief constables during their annual force inspections.

Griess Test

Mr. Richard Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department to whom the forensic laboratory at Chorley provided details of the method used by Dr. Skuse in his application of the Griess test on 22 November 1974.

Mr. Mellor: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Richard Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department to whom his Department has given copies of the letter from the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor), to the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills dated 11 September concerning the method used by Dr. Skuse for the Griess test on 22 November 1974.

Mr. Mellor: I sent a copy, at his request, to the hon. Member for Sunderland, North (Mr. Clay). This was on the understanding that my hon. Friend had made public the text of the letter.

Mr. Richard Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what tests his Department has made or has been made aware of in respect of Dr. Skuse's method for the Griess test of using a 0·1 per cent. caustic soda solution; and what results were obtained.

Mr. Mellor: A reappraisal of the Griess test by the Home Office forensic science service, included examination of the effect of using various concentrations of caustic soda, including 0·1 per cent. on the specificity of the test. We are considering the results of this reappraisal in the context of our review of the case of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. Richard Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to whether Granada Television was provided with details of Dr. Skuse's method for the Griess test used on 22 November 1974 whilst Dr. Skuse was still in service, in connection with the "World in Action" programme on the Birmingham pub bombing.

Mr. Mellor: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Patrick Hill

Mr. Richard Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action has been taken following the letter to the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills of 5 February, concerning inquiries by the governor of Gartree prison into the tape-recorded interview with Patrick Hill.

Mr. Mellor: The governor's inquiries into the precise circumstances of this matter proved inconclusive. Staff have been reminded of the need to follow laid-down procedures regarding visits.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Unemployment

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the level of long-term unemployment in the Province.

Mr. Viggers: At 9 October 1986, 64,251 claimants had been continuously unemployed for more than one year in Northern Ireland, representing 49·2 per cent. of unemployed claimants in the Province on that date.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the level of unemployment in Belfast at the latest date; and what were the figures for December 1979.

Mr. Viggers: At 9 October 1986 there were 41,994 unemployed claimants in the Belfast employment service jobmarket area. At 6 December 1979 there were 21,325 people registered as unemployed in the Belfast jobmarket area. Figures are not comparable due to changes in the method of counting.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures are being taken to reduce unemployment in the Province; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: Government measures are extensive and operate in a wide field. They include the substantial measures to secure new jobs in Northern Ireland through the Industrial Development Board, the Local Enterprise Development Unit and through a unique framework of financial assistance, distributed to that end. They also include a variety of employment measures such as Action for Community Employment, Enterprise Ulster, the new workers scheme, jobclubs, the restart programme and the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the level of youth unemployment in the Province at the latest date; and what were the figures in December 1979.

Mr. Viggers: At 9 October 1986, 49,356 unemployed claimants in Northern Ireland were under 25 years old; 5,940 of these claimants were under 18 years old. At January 1980 (figures for December 1979 are not available) 26,899 unemployed people under 25 years old, of whom 5,111 were under 18 years old, were registered at employment service jobmarkets in Northern Ireland. Figures are not comparable due to changes in the method of counting.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if any further measures are to be introduced to help reduce the level of long-term unemployment in the Province.

Mr. Viggers: I have recently increased the number of restart courses on the programme from 11 to 19 and I intend to provide more jobclubs in the Province. I am considering what further measures might be appropriate, including the possible further extension of the restart programme, taking account of the pilot projects now under way in the rest of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the measures to reduce youth unemployment in the Province.

Mr. Viggers: I keep under constant review, and commission specific evaluations of, all measures introduced both to reduce youth unemployment and to assist young unemployed to get jobs or to become self-employed.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the level of unemployment in the Province at the latest date; and what were the comparable figures for December 1979.

Mr. Viggers: At 9 October 1986 there were 130,635 unemployed claimants in Northern Ireland, representing 19·3 per cent. of the working population. This compares with an estimated claimant figure of 60,200 at December 1979, representing 8·8 per cent. of the working population.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list the unemployment levels in Northern Ireland constituencies at the latest date;

(2) if he will list the current level of unemployment in the Province on a constituency basis.

Mr. Viggers: The numbers of unemployed claimants in each parliamentary constituency in Northern Ireland at 9 October 1986 are as follows:

Parliamentary constituency	Male	Female	Total
Belfast East	3,504	1,556	5,060
Belfast North	6,646	2,315	8,961
Belfast South	4,350	2,215	6,565
Belfast West	9,755	2,533	12,288

Amphibians and Reptiles

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any plans to improve the protection of amphibians and reptiles, especially the common lizard, slow worm, grass snake and adder; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: No. The common, or viviparous, lizard is already listed in the Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Order 1985 as an animal which is protected at all times; the slow worm, grass snake and adder are not native Northern Ireland species and do not naturally occur there.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing, for the last three years, a list of those voluntary organisations which have received grants from Departments under his control, together with the amounts received in each case; if he will state the total amount paid in grants to voluntary organisations and the headings under which they were paid; what steps are taken to monitor the use to which these funds are put; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The answer is as follows:

All expenditure on Government grant aid to voluntary bodies and organisations in Northern Ireland is subject to careful scrutiny to ensure that it is used for the genuine purpose of improving social, environmental or economic conditions in areas of need. There are special circumstances in Northern Ireland requiring particular care in administering grant aid and where it is considered that payment of grant would not be in the public interest, no grant is paid.

TRANSPORT

Rail Services

12 Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he next intends to meet British rail unions to discuss rail services.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend would be pleased to meet the railway unions if they ask to see him on matters concerning Government policy affecting the railways.

Road Hump Regulations

13. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the opportunities for speed-reducing measures in the revised road hump regulations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Road humps are one of a number of measures which can reduce road casualties in built-up areas. The new regulations — which come into force today — will make it significantly easier for local authorities to install humps. Humps, and particularly humps on zebra crossings, offer special benefits to pedestrians.

Shipping Industry

14. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to arrest the decline in Great Britain's shipping industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government are closely monitoring the situation of the British shipping industry. A large part of the apparent decline can be attributed to the transfer of vessels within British ownership to other registries, very often under the British flag, rather than to a withdrawal from shipping.

London Regional Transport

15. Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on revenue subsidies for London Regional Transport.

Mr. Moore: LRT's accounts for 1985-86 show that it reduced its need for revenue support to £97·4 million, so virtually achieving in one year the target reduction to £95 million for which we had allowed three years. Increased efficiency has not been won by cutting services, which are being maintained or expanded, but it has allowed more money to be spent on investment in improving the system, so that LRT has planned to increase investment from £234 million last year to £261 million during 1986-87. The overall result for London ratepayers is also satisfactory since, despite increased investment, we have been able to reduce the levy in support of LRT from 10·80p in the pound last year to 9·79p in the pound for 1986-87.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of London Regional Transport to discuss the quality of services.

Mr. Moore: I would expect this to be included among the many issues which I discuss with Dr. Bright from time to time.

Highway Code

16. Mr. Lewis Stevens asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to publish the revised highway code.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I expect to publish the revised highway code before the end of January. Details of the changes have already been widely publicised. A press notice will be issued when the revised code is published.

Road Safety

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the relative performance of the United Kingdom on road safety compared with that of other European countries.

Mr. Moore: The United Kingdom has the lowest road death rate in the European Community. In 1984, the rate was 10·2 per 100,000 population — 30 per cent. lower than the Community average. Rates for Norway and Sweden are lower still.

British Rail Engineering Ltd.

18. Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he next intends to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss British Rail Engineering and the reorganisation of Rail House, Crewe.

Mr. David Mitchell: We discuss a range of issues at our regular meetings with the British Rail chairman, but details of management organisation are matters for the board.

Settle-Carlisle Line

20. Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the report of the transport users' consultative committees on the application by British Rail for the closure of the Settle to Carlisle line.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that the transport users' consultative committees for north-eastern and north-western England expect to be able to submit a joint report before the end of this year.

Buses (Deregulation)

21. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with the progress to date of his deregulation programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: I am very satisfied with the first results of deregulation, including the new minibus services which have been introduced, and the subsidy savings which have been made. I look forward to further benefits from the continuing effects of competition.

27. Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress to date in bus deregulation in the north-west; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am generally very pleased with the first results of deregulation. In some places in the north-west there have been problems, but I know that all concerned locally are working hard to make improvements. I am particularly encouraged by the way in which competitive tendering for subsidy contracts has helped Lancashire county council make savings equivalent to over £5 million in a full year, whilst maintaining service levels; this should make it possible for the county council to make additional funds available if it sees a need. I am also pleased to read that a new operator plans to start a substantial new minibus operation in Greater Manchester.

33. Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to future levels of subsidy for local bus services following deregulation.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is for local authorities to decide what levels of subsidy is needed for local bus services, bearing in mind the interests of both travellers and ratepayers. The introduction of competitive tendering for subsidy contracts has helped to secure better value for money, and many local authorities will need to spend less to maintain a similar level of service as a result of this requirement in the 1985 Transport Act.

42. Sir Fergus Montgomery asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress of deregulation in the bus industry.

Mr. David Mitchell: Across the country as a whole, broadly the same level of service is being provided. Teething problems, as staff and passengers have become familiar with new routes and timetables, are being resolved. A few areas continue to experience difficulties, but bus operators and local authorities are working hard to secure improvements. Substantial savings of up to 70 per cent. have been achieved in ratepayers' subsidy to bus operators as a result of competitive tendering. A notable feature is the appearance of improved services in a significant number of places, often involving minibuses.

Severn Barrage

22. Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Transport what conditions as regards the inclusion of a lock for ships his Department has laid down for plans for a Severn barrage.

Mr. Michael Spicer: None, Sir. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy has initiated a further study to establish criteria for a Severn barrage, including the lock or locks necessary for ships. The study team will consult fully with interested parties.

Airports (Noise)

23. Mr. Alexander asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he will announce the results of the reviews of noise management around United Kingdom airports.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Good progress is being made on the current reviews. On night noise at Gatwick and Heathrow, for example, I hope to be able to make an announcement early next year. I will, of course, consult those concerned on any proposed changes.

Aviation Industry

24. Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence he has about the effects on consumers on domestic air routes of liberalisation of the airline industry in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Spicer: There is clear evidence that the introduction of competition on domestic routes has benefited consumers through improved levels of service and a wider range of fares. Furthermore, traffic on the Edinburgh and Glasgow trunk routes from London, for example, has grown faster since the introduction of competing services at Heathrow than might have been expected by comparison with growth on other major domestic routes.

28. Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he expects at the next Council of Transport Ministers towards liberalisation of aviation in Europe.

Mr. Michael Spicer: At the last Transport Council, six member states opposed our proposals for allowing the introduction of cheaper air fares. We are now trying to persuade these countries to change their minds and in the light of these bilateral discussions we will decide how best to take work forward at the December Council and in whatever ways are appropriate thereafter.

40. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the contribution of the United Kingdom's air transport industry to the national economy.

Mr. Michael Spicer: As I said in my reply to my hon. Friend the member for Bristol, North-West (Mr. Stern) on 3 November 1986 at column 348, civil aviation directly provides about 80,0000 jobs in the United Kingdom. In 1985 British airlines contributed some £650 million to the balance of payments. About £29 billion of our visible trade last year passed through United Kingdom airports.

Motor Vehicles (Child Restraints)

25. Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the use of child restraints in motor vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have received representations from a number of hon. Members, including my hon. Friend, and from a range of organisations and individuals.

We have had over 10,000 calls to our road safety hotline (0800 234888) asking for advice. The Department will continue to press home to parents the message that the use of restraints saves children's lives.

The summer sales of child restraints was about 20,000 per week. We are working closely with the Child Accident Prevention Trust on loan schemes for child car seats.

Basildon (Ministerial Visit)

26. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the Minister of State's visit to Basildon in November.

Mr. David Mitchell: On 17 November I addressed a seminar arranged by the Essex Taxi Federation and sponsored by my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon. This enabled me to describe the opportunities made available to the taxi trade by the Transport Act 1985, and the benefit to the public of lower cost taxi journeys made under the shared taxi provisions in the Act. This will lead to more business for taxi operators, as the market grows. I also described the new opportunity for enterprising taxi operators to initiate pre-booked shared taxi journeys.

Trunk Roads (Crash Barriers)

29. Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to review the criteria governing the erection of crash barriers on major trunk roads.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. A major study into safety fence criteria for all-purpose dual carriageway roads has been completed. The implications of the study are now being actively considered by the Department.

Airports (Security)

30. Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of security at United Kingdom airports in comparison with those in other countries.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We do not try to make direct comparisons. Circumstances vary from airport to airport and country to country. The Department regularly discusses security standards and practices with other countries and gives active support to British airlines in ensuring that the security they are afforded in foreign airports is satisfactory. My own contacts with other national aviation security authorities, and those of officials in my Department, lead me to believe that security at United Kingdom airports is among the most effective in the world. This is confirmed by our excellent security record. Our aim is to ensure that this record is maintained in the future.

M40-M42

31. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he estimates the M40 will be completed from London to its junction with the M42.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Subject to satisfactory progress through the statutory processes, the whole of the M40 extension may be open to traffic by the end of 1990.

Humber Bridge

34. Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the level of debt and future toll arrangements for the Humber bridge.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The outstanding debt on the Humber bridge at the end of the 1985-86 financial year was £256·1 million. The debt continues to rise as annual deficits are capitalised. The Government accepted in their response to the Transport Committee's report on tolled crossings that the Humber bridge is a special case. Officials of the Humber bridge board and my Department are evaluating ways of putting the finances of the bridge on a sound footing. I hope this will help the board when it presents its preferred solution for consideration.

Tree Planting

34. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will report the progress of his Department's tree-planting programmes for motorways and trunk roads.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am happy to announce in what is National Tree Week that during the current season the Department will plant about 1·3 million trees and shrubs alongside its roads. This will be the 16th successive year that the 1 million figure has been exceeded. Since 1963 a total of around 30 million trees and shrubs will have been planted alongside national roads in England and Wales.

Continuing maintenance is just as important as planting. We will be undertaking, in addition to new planting, a full programme of maintenance in relation to trees planted in earlier years.

Road Casualties

36. Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the number of road deaths and serious injuries, respectively, in each of the years 1983, 1984, 1985 and to the latest available date of 1986.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Following is the information:

Road casualties in Great Britain: 1983 to 1986

	Deaths	Serious injuries
1983	5,445	71,000
1984	5,599	73,000
1985	5,165	71,000
[1]1986	2,407	31,000

[1] First half, provisional.

Rail Services (Scotland)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he next intends to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss the future of rail services in Scotland.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend meets the chairman of British Rail frequently to discuss matters of mutual interest.

M3 (Bar End-Chilworth)

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to be able to announce his decision upon the line of route of the M3 motorway from Bar End to Chilworth.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friends are considering the inspector's report of last year's public inquiry. There are a number of detailed and complex issues to be considered before decisions are taken. We will make an announcement as soon as possible.

London (Lorry Ban)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to meet the chairman of the London residuary body to discuss the operation of London's night-time and weekend lorry ban.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Such a meeting is not appropriate. The lorry ban is the responsibility of the London boroughs for whom the London residuary body is acting temporarily as agent.

Rail Services

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those rail services eligible for public service grants; and what changes he proposes to make thereto.

Mr. David Mitchell: The public service obligation grant is at present laid down towards the cost of all the passenger services of the British Railways Board. It is not paid for specific routes or areas of expenditure. As my right hon. Friend explained in his letter of 21 October to the chairman of the board, he will be redefining the public service obligation later this year. This will confirm the Government's commitment to supporting with grant the railway services in Network SouthEast and the provincial sectors, and will provide for a final payment of grant towards inter-city services in 1987-88 before the sector ceases to be eligible for grant from 31 March 1988.

Road Safety

43. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to increase the resources available to enable traffic commissioners to implement the safety implications of the Transport Act 1985.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Traffic Commissioners ask for an increase in their resources if it is necessary and have already been given an extra 24 vehicle inspectors to check vehicles.

Bypasses

Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the programme of road bypasses around towns and villages.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: An increase in trunk road capital spending as announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his autumn statement. This additional provision will enable us to maintain the present momentum of the trunk road construction programme, comprising nearly 300 schemes. More than half are bypasses or relief roads.

My hon. Friend will also wish to refer to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 3 November at columns 342-343.

Motorways (Speed Limit)

45. Mr. Higgins asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place signs on motorways indicating that the maximum legal speed limit is 70 mph.

Mr. Moore: National speed limits are not generally signed numerically on any roads, including motorways. The current motorway sign, placed only at the entrances to motorways, denotes that the motorway regulations apply; these include the 70 miles per hour limit unless there are specific signs showing a lower limit is in force.

47. Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to raise the 70 miles per hour limit on motorway traffic.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No.

British Rail (Franchise Income)

46. Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the value of franchise income to British Rail for each year since 1978; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The only franchise operation with which BR is directly associated is the "Serviceman" scheme for car servicing centres at stations. This is still in its early stages, and no detailed financial results are available.

BR also obtains income from licences for the use of its technology. The sums involved in recent years were:

Year	£(000)
1978-79	43
1979-80	115
1980-81	17
1981-82	174
1982-83	41
1983-84	33
1984-85	149
[1]1985-86	343

[1] To June.

Air Traffic Control

48. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the recent discussions between his Department and the Civil Aviation Authority on air traffic controller adminstration at Heathrow and other major United Kingdom airports.

Mr. Michael Spicer: There have been no recent discussions with the CAA on administrative matters concerned with air traffic control. My right hon. Friend wrote however on 24 July to the incoming chairman of the authority setting objectives for his term of office. A copy of the letter was placed at the time in the Library of the House.

M25 (Service Area)

49. Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce his proposals for the construction of a motorway service area at Iver on the M25.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I expect to make an announcement early in the new year.

MV Derbyshire

50. Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, in the light of the loss of the MV Kowloon Bridge, he will now hold a full inquiry into the loss of her sister ship the MV Derbyshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. William Powell asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether, in the light of the loss at sea of MV Kowloon Bridge, he will now institute an inquiry into the loss of MV Derbyshire.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer my hon. Friends to the statement that I made to the House on 25 November.

Merchant Seafarers

Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the number of British merchant seafarers no longer serving at sea who would be available for such service in time of emergency; and what estimate he has made of the number likely to be available in the 1990s.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Urgent consideration is being given to the question of the availability of British seafarers, both currently serving and also no longer at sea, in the context of planning for the use of the merchant fleet in emergency or war.

Public Transport

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Transport what changes he proposes to make for the regulation of public transport in the light of his recent visit to Leeds.

Mr. David Mitchell: None. Deregulation was bound to produce adjustment problems in some areas. The overall policy has been very successful.

"Operation Pride" (Expenditure)

Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 25 November, of the £13·4 million earmarked by Network South-East on Operation Pride in 1986-87, if he will itemise expenditure on the following (a) more capacity to relieve overcrowding, (b) more frequent train cleaning, (c) better services at telephone inquiry bureaux, (d) the painting of rolling stock and (e) modernisation of stations.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand from British Rail that the expenditure on "Operation Pride" in 1986-87 can be itemised as:

	£ million
More capacity	2
Train cleaning	1
Better inquiry bureaux service	1
Painting of rolling stock	1
Station renovation/cleaning	4
Other	4

This expenditure is additional to the very much larger sums that are spent by NSE on a continuing basis which will improve the quality of service, by replacing rolling stock, modernising stations and signalling, and improving passenger information systems.

M40 Extension (Service Area)

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many possible alternative sites for a motorway service area his Department has considered between Stokenchurch and Barn Hill on the proposed M40 extension.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In searching for a site for a motorway service area on the M40 between Stokenchurch and Barn Hill, the possibilities were reduced to a shortlist of six sites. Ardley was selected.

Public Service Vehicles (Test)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what was the number of vehicles that failed the annual public service vehicle test in 1985-86, in Wales, by operator group;

(2) what was the number of vehicles that failed the annual public service vehicle test in 1985-86, in Great Britain, by operator group;

(3) if he will publish in the Official Report, by operator group for 1985-86, separately distinguishing between Great Britain and Wales, the number and percentage of tests which resulted in immediate prohibition of annual public service vehicle tests;

(4) if he will publish in the Official Report, for 1985-86, separately distinguishing between Great Britain and Wales, the results of spot checking of public service vehicles and the immediate prohibition rates;

(5) if he will publish in the Official Report for the South Wales traffic area for 1985-86 the number of vehicle examiners employed by his Department, together with the number of public service vehicles and goods vehicles for which they are responsible;

(6) if he will publish in the Official Report, by operator group, the numbers of public service vehicles which (a) failed the annual test for each traffic area in Great Britain for 1985-86, and (b) failed the annual test for each traffic area in Great Britain after rectification of minor faults for 1985-86;

(7) if he will publish in the Official Report, by operator group, the numbers of public service vehicles which failed the annual test for the South Wales traffic area in 1985-86.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am having the information gathered and will answer these questions as soon as possible.

Vehicle Examiners

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report the vehicle examiner staff in post figures for May 1986, by traffic area.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Following reorganisation, the vehicle inspectorate is now based on a region and district structure. The district staff in post figures can be amalgamated to give figures which equate broadly to traffic areas, but in some cases the boundaries do not correspond.

The difference in boundaries coupled with changes in the professional and technology grading structure and in the spread of duties undertaken by the vehicle examiners in the inspectorate mean the 1986 figures are not directly comparable with statistics produced for previous years.

Vehicle Inspectorate PTO staff (vehicle examiners)

Vehicle Inspectorate Region	Vehicle Inspectorate Districts roughly equivalent to Traffic Areas	Vehicle examiners in post May 1986
North	North Eastern	67
	North Western	63

Vehicle Inspectorate Region	Vehicle Inspectorate Districts roughly equivalent to Traffic Areas	Vehicle examiners in post May 1986
South Wales and West	Western	44
	West Midlands	45
	South Wales	24
South East	Eastern	78
	South Eastern	40
	Metropolitan	57
Scottish	Scottish	52
Total		470

School Buses (Accidents)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department holds on the incidence of injuries and deaths to children being conveyed on vehicles taking them to or from school.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Deaths and injuries to children aged 16 or under on vehicles taking them to or from school, by type of vehicle:

Great Britain: 1985

	Deaths	Injuries
Pedal Cycles	9	1,855
Motorcycles	—	163
Cars	5	922
Other vehicles	—	568
All vehicles	14	3,508

There were in addition 60 deaths and 6,959 injuries to child pedestrians on their way to or from school.

Motorways (Contra-flow Systems)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will set out in tabular form the days and nights in each of the years since 1980 on which it was possible for a motorist to drive from junction 1 on the M1 motorway to Leicester, or in the opposite direction from Leicester to London, without encountering lane closures or contra-flow systems; and when he next anticipates a similar free flow of traffic in either direction.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Lane closures on motorways are necessary not only for major roadworks but also for routine maintenance and other minor operations. Short duration lane closures for such minor works are not recorded, so I cannot give dates for when it was last possible or when it will next be possible to drive between junction 1 and Leicester on the M1 without encountering a lane closure. Details of planned works for the remainder of 1986-87 were given in reply to a question by the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner) on 27 October at columns 35 and 36.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will list those days during 1986 when any single motorway in England was entirely free from lane closure or contra-flow systems; and which were the motorways concerned.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Lane closures on motorways are necessary not only for major roadworks but also for routine maintenance and other minor operations. Short duration lane closures for such minor works are not recorded. I cannot give dates for when during 1986 any motorway was entirely free from lane closure or contra-flow systems.

Roads (Repairs)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will set out in tabular form the road works delaying motorists on motorways which he required to be removed before the 1986 August bank holiday weekend; and what arrangements he has made for the forthcoming Christmas and New Year holidays.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The table shows the major roadworks which were removed over the 1986 August bank holiday weekend. In addition, the Department's agent authorities were urged to limit as far as practicable closures for smaller items of work. For Christmas and New Year, agent authorities will again be urged to keep to the minimum practicable level closures for either major or minor works. There are few major works at this time of the year because of the weather conditions.

Motorway	Location	Comment
M1	J7-9 Hertfordshire	Closure partially lifted to allow 3 lanes in both directions
M1	J11 Bedfordshire	Closure lifted
M1	J14-15 Buckinghamshire	Closure lifted
M1	J15-16 Northamptonshire	Closure lifted
M1	J20-21 Leicestershire	Closure lifted 23 August to 25 August 1986
M1	J27-28 Nottinghamshire	Commencement planned to avoid Bank Holiday period
M1	J35-36 South Yorkshire	Closure lifted
M2	J5-6 Kent	Closure partially lifted to allow 2 lanes in both directions on this 2 lane motorway
M18	J1-2 South Yorkshire	Closure partially lifted
M20	J7-8 Kent	Closure lifted 25 July to 31 August 1986
M25	J19 Hertfordshire	Closure lifted

M1 (Traffic Jam)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the reasons for the traffic jam on the north-bound carriageway of the M1 between junctions 12 and 13 on 20 November between 23.15 hours and midnight; and what steps were taken to minimise the inconvenience to road users.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Lane closures were in force to allow improvements to the motorway signalling. Although evening working was deliberately chosen to minimise disruption, the onset of heavy rain and several vehicle breakdowns unfortunately combined to cause the tailback.

British Airways

Mr. Denis Howell asked the Secretary of State for Transport why Her Majesty's Government has rejected the proposal to ensure that the work force of British Airways shall be allocated at least 25 per cent. holding in the company upon privatisation; and what are the objections which have led Her Majesty's Government to oppose the establishment of a trust to administer such a holding.

Mr. Moore: My objectives in this flotation are both to foster the commitment of the employees of British Airways to the company's future, and to give the public, including British Airways' many customers, an adequate opportunity to participate. Because I cannot forecast the level of demand, I wish to retain flexibility in the allocation arrangements for the public in the event of heavy oversubscription. It would severely limit that flexibility if I were to reserve 25 per cent. of the shares on offer to employees, and I have therefore decided that their legitimate aspirations are best satisfied by the generous terms I announced on 21 October.

If employees wish to place shares in a trust when they have acquired them, that is entirely a matter for them. But the investment decision is one which each employee should take individually when the terms of the offer are known.

Mr. Denis Howell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the basis upon which any share offer will be made to the directors and executive management of British Airways upon privatisation of the company, the numbers of such staff in each category who will benefit from the receipt of an allocation and the total percentage of the company's shareholding that is likely to be allocated in these categories.

Mr. Moore: I refer the right hon. Member to my answer on 21 October at column 102. Directors and executive management eligible to apply for free, matching and priority shares at the time of the initial public offering will be given exactly the same opportunity to subscribe for shares as all other eligible staff of British Airways. I cannot forecast how large an allocation senior staff will receive, but it is likely to be small, as a percentage of the company's total market capitalisation.

Aircraft Noise (Gatwick)

Sir Peter Hordern asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to complete his review of night noise disturbances from Gatwick; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer today to the question by my hon. Friend the Member for Newark (Mr. Alexander).

Pelican Crossing, Bradford

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking following the recommendations made by the local police in Bradford and supported by the city coroner for the installation of traffic lights, with a pelican crossing for pedestrians, at the junction of Thornton road with Chat Hill road and School green, Bradford, together with the lowering of the speed limit on Thornton road to 30 miles per hour and enlargement of the pedestrian refuge in Thornton road, are implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: These are local roads under the control of Bradford city council as the highway authority.

Shipping (Lights and Navigational Aids)

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what information he has for each member country of the European Communities about the main sources of finance for lights and navigational aids to shipping;

(2) whether he will publish in the Official Report a tabular statement of such information as he has about the methods used in each member country of the European Communities to finance the provision of lights and other navigational aids to shipping around their coasts, indicating, in particular, whether the costs are borne by the users of the aids or are met from national or local taxation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Light dues are levied on shipping in ports in the Republic of Ireland in the same way as in the United Kingdom; the charges, which are in Irish pounds, apply to the same categories of shipping and—subject to exchange rate variations—are broadly similar to those in the United Kingdom; in addition, the Irish Government have undertaken to make supplementary payments to the general lighthouse fund in accordance with a cost-sharing formula agreed in 1985. I understand that light dues are also levied in Greece, but I have no detailed information on the arrangements; in the other member states of the European Community, I understand, in broad terms, that the cost of navigational aids to shipping is met from general taxation, although the aids provided by harbour authorities may be financed from port dues in whole or in part.

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport what categories of users of United Kingdom ports do not contribute, by way of light dues, to the cost of aids to navigation around the United Kingdom coast; what estimate he has made of the value of such aids to those exempted categories; and whether he has any proposals to seek an appropriate contribution from the exempted categories to the costs involved.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The categories of vessels at present exempt from light dues in United Kingdom ports are set out in part III of the schedule to the Merchant Shipping (Light Dues) Regulations 1981: I am sending a copy to my hon. Friend.

I have made no estimate of the value to these vessels of the aids that are at present financed from light dues, nor do I think it would be practicable to do so. But as my right hon. Friend told the House on 7 November, subject to parliamentary approval of the prerequisite orders, the cost of the United Kingdom transmitters of the Racal-Decca Navigator system will be borne by the general lighthouse fund from 1 January next. The system is an important marine navigational aid, and of particular value to a large part of the fishing industry. With that in mind, I am examining the feasibility of extending light dues' liability to fishing vessels and of making some minor changes to the present structure of light dues.

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the gross expenditure of each of the general lighthouse authorities in the most recent accounting period; what income was derived from light dues in the area of each authority in the same period; and what was the net cost of light and navigation aids in the Irish Republic, borne by users of United Kingdom ports.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The general lighthouse fund accounts for 1985-86 have not yet been completed, but provisional figures are as follows:

£ Million

	Gross Expenditure	Light dues collected
Trinity House	31·3	32·1
Northern Lighthouse Board	11·6	8·5
Commissioners of Irish Lights	IR13·4	IR1·5 and 0·4

Under an agreement reached in 1985 for sharing certain costs deemed to be incurred in the republic by the commissioners, the Irish Government have undertaken to make a supplementary annual payment to the general lighthouse fund. The expenditure within the scope of this agreement excludes certain items. The expenditure incurred in the republic by the commissioners is not separately identified in the accounts, but solely for the purposes of the cost-sharing agreement is deemed to be 70 per cent. of the commissioners' total relevant expenditure. In 1985-86, after deducting from this relevant expenditure the income from light dues collected in the republic (£IR1·5 million) and the expected contribution (£IR1·3 million) from the Irish Government, the general lighthouse fund met the remaining costs of £IR6·7 million deemed to have been incurred in the republic.

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of the light dues paid by merchant shipping using United Kingdom ports is devoted to the provision of lights and other aids to the navigation of ships in the Irish Republic; and what information he has as to whether similar subsidy arrangements for navigational aids exist with or between any other member countries of the European Communities.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I will answer this question shortly.

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to merge, or to arrange for the joint operation of, the navigational services provided by Trinity House, the Northern Lighthouse Board and the Commissioners of the Irish Lights; and what financial savings he estimates would be achieved by such merger or joint operation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The three general lighthouse authorities are required to undertake the superintendence an management of lighthouses, buoys and beacons, and certain duties in relation to wrecks, within their areas of responsibility. For these purposes, each authority uses its own tender vessels, some of which are nearing the end of their useful life and would be costly to replace. We have therefore commissioned Arthur Young and Co., the consultant accountants, to undertake a study of these requirements, including the possibility of a unified tender service. But no estimate has yet been made of the savings, if any, that might result.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the prerequisite order, and to contractual arrangements that are being negotiated, the authorities propose jointly to undertake the superintendence and management of the United Kingdom transmitters of the Racal-Decca Navigator system, from 1 January next.

Merchant Shipping (Assistance)

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the aids to merchant shipping on both capital and current account now available in each of the member countries of the European Communities.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I cannot add to the information given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, South (Sir W. Clark) in his replies on 30 June and 2 July 1986 at columns 443-44 and 548-50.

M25 (EC Finance)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the European Economic Community financial contribution to the building of the M25 orbital motorway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The European Community contributed £5·8 million of transport infrastructure grant under EC regulation 3620/84 on specific measures in the field of transport infrastructure. In addition, £79·9 million was allocated in respect of schemes on the M25 under EC regulation 1889/84 introducing special measures of Community interest relating to transport infrastructure.

Local Authorities (Accident Investigation and Prevention)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Offical Report those local authorities in England and Wales which have accident investigations and prevention teams.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is for local highway authorities to determine the arrangements they need to fulfil their obligations for road safety under section 8 of the 1974 Road Traffic Act. They are not required to tell the Department whether they have accident investigation and prevention teams; it is not therefore possible to list authorities with such teams, but I think two thirds do.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to amend the regulations governing the use of heavy goods vehicles on public roads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are consulting on proposals to raise the weight limit for two-axled heavy goods vehicles from 16,260 kg to 17,000 kg, in line with two-axled buses. I am sending my hon. Friend a copy of the official consultation letter. This is also to be found in the Library of the House.

ENVIRONMENT

Cockroaches

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions his Department has had with Stockport metropolitan borough council over the last five years concerning the presence of cockroaches in flats at Lancashire Hill; and what reasons have been given to his Department by the council as to why eradication has not yet been achieved.

Mr. Tracey: The Department has not had discussions with Stockport metropolitan borough council about cockroach infestation in the Lancashire Hill flats.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities have consulted his Department about problems of cockroach infestation; in how many cases eradication programmes have been successful; and which insecticides have been used.

Mr. Tracey: Some local authorities have drawn the Department's attention to the problem of cockroach infestation. However, responsibility for disinfestation rests entirely with the authority.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken to ensure the adequacy of the human health and safety aspects of the methods of treating cockroach infestations being recommended by his Department to local authorities.

Mr. Tracey: The Department has not issued guidance to local authorities on the treatment of cockroach infestations. It is entirely a matter for each local authority to satisfy itself as to the safety of the products and methods used.

Housing Investment Programme

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what he proposes as the amount of housing investment programme allocation to be withheld from local authorities in 1987-88 for distribution by his Department's urban housing renewal unit; what urban programme resources will be available for distribution by the urban housing renewal unit; and what will be the amount available for distribution by the urban housing renewal unit for community refurbishment schemes.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend has not withheld any housing investment programme allocation from local authorities in 1987-88 for distribution by the urban housing renewal unit (estate action). He has proposed that an additional £75 million should be made available, on top of local authorities' main allocations. This will be available for local authorities to spend through their housing investment programmes, through the urban programme or on community refurbishment schemes and other environmental projects on estates. At this stage, it is not possible to predict the proportion of such expenditures in schemes to be approved next.

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is his estimate of expenditure in the full financial year 1986-87 in relation to (a) targeted housing investment programme allocation, (b) targeted urban programme resources and (c) community refurbishment schemes approved by his Department's urban housing renewal unit;

(2) what is his estimate of spending by local authorities so far in 1986-87 in relation to targeted housing investment programme allocations approved by his Department's urban housing renewal unit.

Mr. John Patten: According to information supplied by local authorities, it is estimated that targeted expenditure on urban housing renewal unit (estate action) schemes which involve combinations of housing investment programme, urban programme and community refurbishment schemes, will be some £50 million in 1986-87. It is not possible at this stage to categorise this expenditure precisely, nor to say exactly how far each authority has got with each project.

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total amount of housing investment programme allocation available for distribution by his Department's urban housing renewal unit in 1986-87; and what is the total amount approved so far by the urban housing renewal unit as (a) targeted housing investment programme allocation, (b) targeted urban programme resources and (c) community refurbishment schemes.

Mr. John Patten: In 1986-87, the total of resources available for allocation to schemes approved by the urban housing renewal unit (estate action) is £50 million. For the 86 schemes so far approved, the resources already committed for expenditure this year are:

	£ million
(a) Housing investment programme	37
(b) Urban programme for community refurbishment schemes	1·8
(c) Other urban programme projects	2·5

More approvals will be announced shortly.

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how he will treat expenditure by local authorities with respect to spending authorisations under the housing investment programme distributed by the urban housing renewal unit for 1986-87 if that expenditure falls in 1987-88; and if, in that event, expenditure will count against the amount he proposes to withhold from local authorities for distribution by the urban housing renewal unit in 1987-88;

(2) if approvals for the total amount of housing investment programme he proposes to withhold from local authorities for distribution by the urban housing renewal unit in 1987-88 will exclude any approvals originally made in relation to expenditure in 1986-87; and what arrangements he has made to ensure that the total amount withheld from local authorities is spent during 1987-88.

Mr. John Patten: The additional resources being made available to local authorities in 1986-87 relate to expenditure to be carried out within the current financial year. My Department is allocating resources on the basis of local authorities' contract tender information, and on councils' advice on the spending profile of their particular schemes. Similar arrangements will apply in 1987-88. Where schemes are planned to continue in future years, we shall take account of their needs in allocating any extra resources available in those years.

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what special arrangements have been made for London authorities in 1986-87 for housing investment programme allocations available for distribution by the urban housing renewal unit; and what special arrangements will be made for 1987-88.

Mr. John Patten: No special arrangements have been made for local authorities in London and none are planned for next year. They will be invited to submit applications for additional resources in the same way as other authorities.

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what will be the criteria for the approval by the urban housing renewal unit of schemes in relation to targeted housing investment programme allocations in 1987-88;

(2) what are the criteria for the approval of schemes by his Department's urban housing renewal unit for targeted housing investment programme allocations; and if those criteria have changed during the financial year 1986-87.

Mr. John Patten: The urban housing renewal unit (Estate Action) has been promoting a wide range of innovatory approaches to revitalising rundown council housing estates. These are described in detail in the unit's annual report, which I have placed in the Library.

Estate Action takes a flexible approach, and each application for additional resources is considered on its merits. In general it gives priority to schemes which offer the residents greater choice and control over their lives and environment, and which take full advantage of any opportunities for combining public and private sector skills and resources. In July we launched the UHRU homelessness initiative to give local authorities additional resources to help bring vacant dwellings back into use to benefit homeless people.

We propose to apply the same general priorities in 1987-88.

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if works to provide central heating and modern kitchens and bathrooms are eligible for approval by his Department's urban housing renewal unit for targeted housing investment programme allocation for local authorities.

Mr. John Patten: Any capital works needed to tackle specific problems identified on council housing estates can benefit from Estate Action's additional resources — provided they form part of a coherent package of measures which give value for money, and which offer long-term and sustainable benefits.

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he or his Department have received concerning the withholding from local authorities of housing investment programme authorisations for distribution by his Department's urban housing renewal unit in 1987-88.

Mr. John Patten: We have not withheld resources from allocation through local authorities' housing investment programmes in 1987-88, although we have received representations based on this misconception. In fact, we are proposing to give councils additional allocations for important, urgent, well-thought-out schemes they choose to bring to the attention of my Department's urban housing renewal unit (Estate Action).

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many schemes approved by his Department's urban housing renewal unit for targeted housing investment programme allocation in 1986-87 include any element of private sector involvement (a) in Greater London and (b) in England; and what proportion they represent respectively of total approvals.

Mr. John Patten: Nearly all the 86 schemes so far approved involve private contractors in carrying out refurbishment and improvement works. Twenty schemes involve disposals of land or housing for refurbishment and resale. Two of these are in London and 18 in authorities in the rest of England. These represent 23·25 per cent. of total approvals.

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been (a) the shortest, (b) the average and (c) the longest period between the submission by a local authority of a bid for targeted housing investment programme allocation for 1986-87 to his Department's urban renewal unit, and its approval by the urban housing renewal unit.

Mr. John Patten: There is no simple approval/rejection process in the work of allocating extra resources to local authorities through the urban housing renewal unit. Estate Action schemes are developed collaboratively between the Department's regional office, the unit, and the council concerned. The number and length of the discussions needed depend crucially on the complexity of the problem, the readiness of the authority to consider novel solutions and the ability of the authority to marshal the relevant information. Once agreement has been reached, and a final proposal prepared and submitted, approval follows within days.

Improvement Grants

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish the 1983 survey of improvement grants referred to in the Green Paper "Home Improvement: A New Approach" (Cmnd. 9513).

Mr. Tracey: A summary of the main findings of the distribution of grant inquiry was published in May 1985 as an annex to the Green Paper on home improvement policy. A final report will be published as soon as possible.

Housing Deprivation

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what indicators he has to show where (a) the constituency of Leyton or (b) the London borough of Waltham Forest ranks in terms of housing deprivation, (i) in London and (ii) nationally.

Mr. Tracey: Waltham Forest council's housing deprivation is measured most directly by housing z scores; the borough ranks 14 in London and 17 nationally. The generalised needs index provides a further measure; figures for 1986 are not available, but in 1985 the borough ranked 17 in London and 32 nationally.

Refuse Collection and Waste Disposal

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was allocated in grant-related expenditure allocation for (a) Waltham Forest and (b) nationally, in respect of refuse collection and waste disposal in each year since 1981-82.

Mr. Chope: Following is the information:

£ million

	Rufuse collection		Waste disposal
	Waltham Forest	England	Waltham Forest	England
1981-82	2·343	435·442	[1]	159·455
1982-83	2·227	409·800	[1]	182·800
1983-84	2·338	428·100	[1]	170·200

	Refuse collection		Waste disposal
	Waltham Forest	England	Waltham Forest	England
1984-85	2·287	420·200	[1]	197·300
1985-86	2·336	429·300	[1]	213·200
1986-87	2·114	408·500	1·975	224·400

[1]Prior to 1 April 1986, GRE in respect of waste disposal services went to GLC as the authority carrying out those services in London.

Housing (Expenditure)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was allocated in grant-related expenditure allocation for (a) Waltham Forest and (b) nationally, in respect of housing in each year since 1981-82.

Mr. Chope: Following is the information in respect of HRA housing and non-HRA housing services combined.

£ million

	Waltham Forest	England
1981-82[1]	[1]5·979	[1]508·988
1982-83	5·073	509·877
1983-84	4·898	443·188
1984-85	4·006	362·019
1985-86	2·450	461·383
1986-87[2]	5·187	635·995

[1]Figures for 1981-82 include GRE assessments for rent rebates and rent allowances which are not separately detailed in that year.
[2]Following abolition of GLC, Waltham Forest inherited a portion of GLC's GRE in respect of housing services.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has any plans to visit the radioactive waste disposal facilities at Forsmark, Sweden, Asse in West Germany and Cherbourg in France; and if he intends to meet the disposal authorities from these countries;

(2) if he intends to hold discussions with the Environment Minister of Sweden regarding the safe disposal of radioactive waste in the United Kingdom and Sweden;

(3) if he has held discussions with the Environment Minister of Sweden on the safe disposal of radioactive waste in the United Kingdom and Sweden.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend and I have separately visited Centre de la Manche near Cherbourg in France. I have also visited Forsmark. Officials of the Department have visited Asse. Members of the respective waste disposal authorities were present on these occasions. My right hon. Friend has not met, and has no current plans to meet, the Swedish Environment Minister. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy and I met the Environment Minister of the Federal Republic of Germany in July and discussed, among other matters, radioactive waste management.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends to meet members of the county councils opposed to the shallow trench disposal of radioactive waste to discuss the NIREX plans.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have no current plans for further meetings with the local authorities concerned.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he intends to discuss with his fellow European Economic Commission Ministers the safe disposal of radioactive waste within the United Kingdom and the rest of the Community;

(2) if he has held discussions with his fellow European Economic Community Ministers regarding safe disposal of radioactive waste within the United Kingdom and the rest of the Community.

Mr. Waldegrave: The most recent discussion between Environment Ministers of the European Community relating to nuclear issues was at the Council held on 24 November 1986. I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made on 27 November at columns 318-20 in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Heddle), in which reference is made to that discussion and the prospect of further discussions.

Pollution

Sir George Young asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what initiatives Her Majesty's Government have taken to reduce emissions of sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxides in the European Community.

Mr. Waldegrave: In its presidency role within the European Community, the United Kingdom tabled proposals with the aim of making progress on the draft Community directive on reducing emissions from large combustion plants. If accepted, these proposals would set Europe an ultimate goal of at least a 60 per cent. reduction in sulphur emissions. Regrettably, a number of countries found these proposals too onerous, and it was not possible to agree conclusion at the Council of Environment Ministers on 24 November. Nevertheless, the United Kingdom will continue to pursue throughout the presidency all prospects for progress on this important proposed directive.

Rivers (South-West England)

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has received from the South-West water authority as to the causes of the substantial quality deterioration in the Rivers Axe, Otter, Exe, Tavy, Tamar, Torridge and Taw; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I receive regular reports from all water authorities on the qualities of their rivers. I am aware of the particular problems in the South-West water authority area. The authority is preparing for the Department an action plan setting out proposals for dealing with these problems.

Right to Repair

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authority tenants in England and Wales availed themselves of the right to repair scheme introduced under the Housing and Building Control Act 1984 in the first six months of the current year; and what was the total cost of such repairs carried out under the scheme, and the average cost of each claim.

Mr. Tracey: Current estimates, based on incomplete returns from local authorities for the first six months of 1986, show that 450 local authority tenants in England submitted applications to exercise the right to repair. Thirty-five were accepted and, of these, 15 claims had been paid during the period, at a total cost of £1,550. In about 160 of the cases, the landlord elected to carry out the repair within 28 days of being served with the application. The remaining applications were rejected, mainly on the grounds that the proposals were outside the scope of the scheme.

Estimates of figures and costs for the right to repair scheme in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the total cost to his Department and to local authorities in England and Wales incurred as a result of the introduction of the right to repair scheme under the Housing and Building Control Act 1984 in terms of administration, training and publicity, excluding the cost of any payments made to tenants under this scheme.

Mr. Tracey: The Department has spent £35,817·80 on publicity for the right-to-repair scheme and incurred costs of £3,750 on training for tenants. The Department's administrative costs for this scheme cannot be identified separately. Information on local authorities' costs, other than on meeting claims, is not collected by this Department.

Information about the costs to local authorities in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Home Improvement

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to make a statement on the responses to the Green Paper "Home Improvement — A New Approach", published in May 1985, before 31 December.

Mr. Tracey: I will answer this question shortly.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide in the Official Report a list of those organisations in England that have responded to the May 1985 Green Paper, "Home Improvement — A New Approach."

Mr. Tracey: There were over 400 responses to the Green Paper. I have placed a full list of those who responded in the Library.

Estuaries

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the environmental quality standards which have been drawn up by Her Majesty's Government to protect the existing uses of the (a) Thames estuary, (b) Humber estuary, (c) Tees estuary, (d) Tyne estuary, (e) Forth estuary, (f) Clyde estuary, (g) Mersey estuary and (h) Severn estuary.

Mr. Waldegrave: The application of environmental quality standards is in the first instance for the relevant water authorities (in England and Wales) and for the relevant river purification authorities (in Scotland). In so doing, they take account of relevant EEC directives and of Government policy. I am seeking the information the hon. Member requests about the application of environment quality standards and will write to him shortly.

On 2 September 1985, my Department and the Welsh Office issued a joint circular—18/85 (Department of the Environment) and 37/85 (Welsh Office)—which set out the Community environmental quality standards for mercury, cadmium and hexachlorocyclohexane, and established national standards for the following list II metals: lead, chromium, zinc, copper, nickel and arsenic.

Housing Defects

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each of the designated houses in the Housing Defects Act the progress made in obtaining an approval and warranty scheme for repair methods.

Mr. John Patten: The National Housebuilding Council's subsidiary, PRC Homes Ltd., has now approved 23 repair systems, covering the Airey, Cornish Unit, Orlit, Parkinson, Unity, Wates and Woolaway house types. Details of progress on the approval of repair systems are as follows, for all designated types. I have arranged for PRC Homes Ltd's progress reports to be placed in the Library as they become available.

North Sea Coastline

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if Her Majesty's Government will draw up a national water quality plan for the coastline bordering the North sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The control of coastal water quality is for the water authorities (in England and Wales) and for the river purification authorities (in Scotland). They discharge this function having regard to local circumstances, and to Government policy and the United Kingdom's international obligations. It is not necessary to have a formal national plan, although the performances of the individual water authorities and river purification authorities are reviewed regularly by the Government.

Local Authority Services

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the cost per client served of the provision of each appropriate local authority service for each shire county.

Mr. Chope: Information on costs per client, by service for individual local authorities, is not available in the Department. I understand, however, that it is published in "Local Government Comparative Statistics, 1986" by the statistical information service of CIPFA.

Amphibians and Reptiles

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to improve the protection of amphibians and reptiles, especially the common lizard, slow worm, grass snake and adder; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on 27 November, at column 318. We will consider this matter in the light of the representations and comments invited.

Gas Flaring

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what controls he exercises over the emission in gas flaring of carcinogens and other substances inimical to human health.

Mr. Waldegrave: Works operating land-based flaring systems on processing plant to dispose of hydrocarbon gases are required, under section 5 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, to render the flares harmless and inoffensive when emitted into the atmosphere. These works come under the direct control of Her Majesty's industrial air pollution inspectorate in England and Wales and of Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate in Scotland, with whom they must be registered annually.

Pollution Inspectorate (Director)

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the appointment of a director for Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution; what technical qualifications he proposes to require of the new director; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The matter is under consideration and I expect to make an announcement shortly.

Radioactivity

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide estimates of the input of radioactive isotopes, hydrocarbons and nitrogen oxide into the atmosphere in Britain; and how this compares with other European Economic Community countries on a consistent basis.

Mr. Waldegrave: Estimates of radioactive atmospheric discharges from major establishments using radioactive materials in the United Kingdom are published annually in the Department's "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Statistics on the emissions of nitrogen oxides and hydrocarbons are also included in this publication. Estimates of emissions of hydrocarbons and nitrogen oxides for all EEC countries are not available on a consistent basis. Some comparisons were made in the OECD's second state of the environment report and showed that United Kingdom emissions of nitrogen oxides in 1980 were lower than emissions in West Germany and of the same order as those in France. Data on the discharge of radioactive effluents from 1976-80 in EEC countries were published by the European Commission in 1983 in "Radioactive Effluents from Nuclear Power Stations and Nuclear Fuel Processing Plants in the European Community".

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide estimates of the input of radioactive isotopes, hydrocarbons and atmospheric nitrogen into the sea by Britain; and how this compares with other European Economic Community countries on a consistent basis.

Mr. Waldegrave: Comprehensive up-to-date information of the kind requested is not available at present. However, this information is currently being assembled by the Department in its role as secretariat for next year's North sea conference.

Departmental Offices (Coatbridge)

Mr. John Corrie asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether funds are to be made available for the proposed new Department of Health and Social Security/Department of Employment offices at Coatbridge.

Mr. Chope: I have authorised the Property Services Agency to proceed with the Department of Health and Social Security/Department of Employment offices at Coatbridge. The building is scheduled for completion by March 1988.

SOCIAL SERVICES

AIDS

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the additional resources made available to the National Health Service in the Chancellor's "Autumn Statement" will be devoted to publicising, preventing and researching acquired immune deficiency syndrome and caring and counselling for those infected.

Mr. Newton: My right hon. Friend has announced that £20 million will be spent over the next 12 months on public education on AIDS. Additional resources will also be allocated for costs of treatment, counselling and training; we shall make an announcement on this shortly.

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those hospitals and clinics in Avon which have in-patient facilities for treatment of acquired immune deficiency syndrome sufferers.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 20 November at column 323.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the level of current expenditure, and in each of the last four years, on, respectively, research into an AIDS cure or vaccine; screening of persons for AIDS antibodies; advice and counselling for AIDS victims; national publicity for a public health education programme, regional publicity, support for voluntary bodies combating AIDS, clinical care (including hospices) for AIDS victims; and how much is now planned for each of the next three years.

Mr. Fowler [pursuant to the reply, 27 November, c. 352]: I refer the hon. Member to my speech on 21 November, when I reported to the House that there were no known cases of AIDS before 1981; that the first case of transmission by blood transfusion was reported in the United States of America in 1983; and that a reliable test for routine screening for blood donations was developed in 1985.

Research in the United Kingdom is being co-ordinated by the Medical Research Council (MRC) which receives its grant-in-aid through the science budget of the Department of Education and Science. The MRC has awarded 15 special project grants for research on AIDS and immunodeficiency viruses totalling about £1·5 million. Included in the total is an annual special allocation of up to £300,000 from 1986-87 by the health Departments for epidemiological studies of AIDS and support of the United Kingdom centre for co-ordinating epidemiological research on AIDS. Additionally the Department is supporting directly AIDS-related research projects costing £50,000 this year, and £80,000 in 1987-88, and will consider proposals for further directly supported research. Over and above this, a number of major pharmaceutical companies in this country are devoting increasing resources to research relevant to AIDS.

The following information sets out the allocations made by the Department in England in 1986-87:

An effective screening test for the presence of AIDS antibodies suitable for routine use only became available last year. The Blood Transfusion Service is spending some £2 million to £3 million per annum on tesing all blood donations. The Department has specifically allocated nearly £¾ million in 1986-87 to the Public Health Laboratory Service Board to do tests for other parts of the National Health Service. In addition the Public Health Laboratory Service Board is spending another £500,000 in 1986-87 on other AIDS related work.

The Department has also made available in 1986-87 £270,000 to the haemophilia reference centres for the provision of advice, testing and counselling services for haemophiliacs. Similar services have also been provided in genito-urinary medicine clinics for those who fear they have been infected by the virus, but comprehensive data are not available on its cost.

As I announced to the House on 21 November, the Government will be making available £20 million over the next twelve months for a national public education campaign. In addition, regional and district health authorities are mounting AIDS public education campaigns from within their own resources.

The Department provides financial support for a number of voluntary bodies providing advice, counselling and care for AIDS patients. In 1986-87, £204,000 was allocated for this purpose.

So far as the cost of clinical care is concerned, the Government made available a total of £2·5 million in 1986-87 to the three regions coping with the largest number of cases. The total cost of clinical care will of course depend on how many cases occur; treatment costs can also vary considerably between cases. On the basis of the numbers of cases notified total expenditure in 1986-87 could be of the order of £3 million to £5 million nationally.

Allocations to health authorities and other bodies for 1987-88 in respect of AIDS are currently under consideration.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the average weekly level of housing benefit paid weekly in respect of supplementary benefit recipients in the latest period for which figures are available; and what breakdown of this information is available for different types of supplementary benefit recipients, classified according to number of dependants.

Mr. Lyell: The latest available information is for December 1985 and is given in the following table. Information is not collected on different types of supplementary benefit recipients, classified by number of dependants.

Average weekly level of certificated housing benefit (Great Britain)

	December 1985 £
All supplementary pensioners	15·05
All supplementary allowances	17·99
All beneficiaries	16·74

Health Education Council

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on what the Health Education Council is spending in the current, and planning to spend in the next, financial year on (a) smoking, (b) alcohol, (c) diet and (d) AIDS; and whether he is satisfied with the Council's current order of priorities.

Mr. Newton: As my hon. Friend will be aware, my right hon. Friend has announced that the Health Education Council is to be reconstituted as a special health authority with effect from 1 April 1987. It is envisaged that it will in due course assume responsibility for public education on AIDS, which is currently being conducted primarily by the Government themselves, and for which up to £20 million is available in the next twelve months. However, following are the figures for expenditure planned by the present Health Education Council in this financial year and the next:

	1986-87 £	1987-88 £
Smoking	1,769,000	1,504,000
Alcohol	478,000	437,000
Diet	1,000,000	2,000,000
AIDS	98,000	80,000

Asthma

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate, for the past 10 years up to the most recent year for which figures are available, and broken down by region (a) the number of patients suffering from asthma, (b) the number of deaths from asthma and (c) the number of inhalers prescribed by type.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that I cannot give the hon. Member all the information in the form requested.

It has been estimated that around 2 million people in the United Kingdom suffer from asthma. Further information is provided in the following tables.

An article in The Lancet of 9 August 1986 discussed the evidence that the death rate from asthma had been rising in the last decade, after falling in the late 1960s. The reason was not known. The article pointed to the apparent paradox that while under-treatment was suggested as one cause, this coincided with rising sales of all forms of treatment for asthma. The problem is not confined to this country.

National Insurance

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the latest available figures for those class 2 national insurance contributors who are also class 1 secondary national insurance contributors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: I regret that the information requested by the hon. Member cannot be obtained without incurring disproportionate cost.

Single Payment Allowances

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when his Department will deal with (a) the application for single payment allowance by Georgina McKoy, made to 6 Camberwell New Road, S.E.5 about 3 November, (b) the application for severe disablement allowance and supplementary benefit by Julian Wall made on 27 August to 6 Camberwell New Road, S.E.5 and (c) the letter from Brixton Law Centre to the regional office complaints section at 29 Brighton Road, Sutton about Noel Phillips dated 4 September;

(2) when the following letters and applications will be dealt with, namely (a) a claim by Mrs. Fatima Alani for a single payment on moving home made to his Department's Oval office in May, (b) an application by Eric Barclay of 28 Westgate Court, London S.W.9 for a lump sum payment and a special heating grant raised in a letter from the hon. Member for Norwood to the Oval office on 27 October, (c) a letter sent by the hon. Member for Norwood to the Oval office on 20 May in respect of Mr. S. E. Brown of flat 8, 258 Coldharbour Lane, London S.W.9 and (d) a letter sent by the hon. Member for Norwood to the Oval office about late payments to David Kress of 37 Adelaide Walk, Moorlands estate, Brixton, London S.W.9;

(3) when the following letters and applications will be dealt with: (a) a letter sent by the hon. Member for Norwood to the Oval office on 27 October about Mrs. Kate Leigh of 11 Canterbury Crescent, London S.W.9; (b) a letter sent by the hon. Member for Norwood to the Oval office on 19 September about Ms. M. McKenna of flat 1, 25 Eastlake road, London S.E.5; (c) a letter sent by the hon. Member for Norwood to the Oval office on 11 March about Mr. G. S. Ravatte of 39 Swinford gardens, Barrington road, London S.W.9 in respect of assistance to return to Mauritius; and (d) a letter sent by the hon. Member for Norwood to the Oval office about Jean F. Slatter of 7 Leicester house, Loughborough estate, Loughborough road, London S.W.9;

(4) when the following letters and applications will be dealt with: (a) a letter sent by the hon. Member for

Norwood to the Oval office on 17 September about Miss Sonia Stewart of 2 Enfield house, Stockwell gardens, London S.W.9; (b) a letter sent by the hon. Member for Norwood to the Oval office on 30 October about Mrs. J. E. Turner of 3 Secker house, Loughborough estate, Brixton, London S.W.9; and (c) an application for single payment for bedding made by Edna G. Victor in August to the Oval office.

Mr. Lyell: I have instigated inquiries to ensure that all these cases are handled as a matter of urgency. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many single payments in respect of additional heating expenditure incurred during last winter's exceptionally cold weather were made (a) in Great Britain, (b) in the Greater London area, (c) in the constituency of Fulham and (d) in the constituency of Hammersmith; and what was the total cost and average value of such payments.

Mr. Lyell: Full returns have not yet been received on the number of payments made in Great Britain and the Greater London area. Information is however available in respect of the local offices covering the parliamentary constituencies of Fulham and Hammersmith, as follows:

Parliamentary constituency and local offices[1]	Total number of payments	Total amount paid	Average payment
Fulham: Chelsea, Kensington	454	10,415	22·94
Hammersmith: Acton, Chelsea, Kensington, Notting Hill	797	16,854	21·15

[1] The boundaries of the parliamentary constituencies and local offices are not coterminus. The local offices quoted are those which are wholly or partly within the relevant constituencies.

Supplementary Benefits

Mr. J. Enoch Powell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pending legislation, he will authorise the extra-statutory concession, corresponding with Northern Ireland circular 522/86 and providing continuity of supplementary benefit at the long-term rate for beneficiaries who have removed from Northern Ireland to Great Britain.

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend has already authorised extra-statutory payments. I refer the right hon. Member to circular S22/86, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in Kilmarnock and Loudoun are now claiming supplementary benefit; if he will break these figures down into claimant groups such as pensioners, one-parent families and the unemployed; and how these figures compare with May 1979.

Mr. Lyell: Information is not available in precisely the form requested. The constituency of Kilmarnock and Loudoun is covered by the Department's office at Kilmarnock but their boundaries are not coterminous. The number of people receiving supplementary benefit from that office on 13 August 1986, the latest available figures, and on 15 May 1979 were:

	May 1979	August 1986
Unemployed	1,379	3,717
Over pension age	2,648	2,777
Others (including one parent families)	1,101	2,681
Total	5,128	9,175

Source: 100 per cent. count of cases in action.

Pensioners (Earnings)

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list, for each year since 1978, the maximum weekly permitted earnings of a married pensioner aged between 65 and 70 years before commencement of clawback of the pension.

Mr. Major: The earnings limit applying to all male pensioners between 65 and 69 in the uprating month in each year is given in the table.

November 1978	45
November 1979	52
November 1980	52
November 1981	52
November 1982	57
November 1983	65
November 1984	70
November 1985	75
July 1986	75

Female pensioners are subject to these earnings limits between ages 60 and 64, but no earnings limit applies to pensioners of either sex from five years after minimum pension age.

Equipment (Prescriptions)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will decide whether to make blood glucose monitoring equipment and disposable syringes available on a general practitioner's prescription.

Mrs. Currie: As I said in the House on 23 October, at c.1434, the provision on general practitioner prescription of blood glucose testing strips will have a high priority if and when resources become available, but disposable syringes are not likely to be available on general practitioner prescription at present.

Service Pensions

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many widows of servicemen who took part in the nuclear tests have applied for service widows' pensions on the grounds that their husbands' deaths resulted from the nuclear tests.

Mr. Lyell: I assume that the right hon. Member is referring to claims for war widows pensions. Since mid-1983, about 50 such claims have been recorded.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many service veterans of the nuclear tests have applied for a service invalidity pension; how many applications have been accepted; and what percentage this represents of the total applications.

Mr. Major: Since mid-1983 it is known that about 110 claims to war disablement pension have been made on the grounds that disablement was caused by exposure to radiation from atomic bomb tests. None has been accepted on those grounds. In one case only however, a pension was awarded on appeal by the independent pensions appeal tribunal on the grounds of reasonable doubt.

Mental Nurses

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many state registered mental nurses and state enrolled mental nurses are unemployed at present and from which regional health authorities.

Mr. Newton: The Department of Employment is the source of statistical information on the unemployed, but I understand that information by occupation has not been available since the introduction of the voluntary registration procedure in October 1982.

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he proposes to take to deal with the acute shortage of qualified mental handicap nurses.

Mr. Newton: I regret that information about shortages of staff is not collected centrally. However I am aware of the results of a survey of a sample of health authorities conducted for the review body for nursing staff, midwives and health visitors which showed that at 31 March 1985 in England 3 per cent. of all whole-time equivalent funded posts for mental handicap nursing staff remained vacant for at least three months, compared with the average of 2·5 per cent. of all nursing and midwifery staff.

Responsibility for recruiting nursing staff to meet local needs and priorities must rest with individual health authorities. Only they have the detailed local knowledge necessary to make these judgments. Their performance is, of course, monitored and reviewed through the accountability review process.

About 80 per cent. of the Department's national recruitment publicity is directed towards mental illness and mental handicap nursing.

Patients (Waiting Lists)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what response he has had from health authorities to his request for plans to reduce patient waiting lists and patient waiting time; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he proposes to issue a list of measures all health authorities can take to reduce waiting lists and waiting time; if further resources will be made available to enable the measures to be implemented; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if health authorities will be left to implement individual strategies to reduce patient waiting lists and waiting time; if extra resources will be made available to enable the strategies to be implemented; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he has received a report from the North-East Thames regional health authority concerning methods of reducing waiting lists and waiting times for patients; what plans he has to put their recommendations into effect; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Thames Health Authorities (Resources)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive the findings of the inquiry into the application of the resources allocation working party in the Thames health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Hearing Therapists

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the cost of training hearing aid therapists and the number trained in the seven years when it was centrally funded; how many regional health authorities are now providing training; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: During the period from 1978 to 1985 when central funding was provided, 64 students completed the course at the City Literary Institute. The cost of training in 1984-85 was around £5,000 for each student hearing therapist. There are 12 students, sponsored by their district health authorities, on the current course.

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what financial support he proposes to give to the British Society of Hearing Therapists for the year 1987-88.

Mrs. Currie: The Department keeps in touch with the society in regard to the development of this new profession, but it is not our practice to grant aid to professional bodies.

Breast Cancer Screening

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when he received the final report of the Forrest working group on breast cancer screening;

(2) when he will publish the final report of the Forrest working group on breast cancer screening.

Mrs. Currie: The report was received on 28 November. It has been sent for printing. We expect the report to be published within the next three weeks. I shall arrange for copies to be placed in the Library as soon as they are available. The Government are now considering their response to the report.

Blood Products Laboratory, Elstree

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how much was committed in each year since its inception to the blood products laboratory at Elstree;

(2) what reductions have been made in the funds originally estimated to be provided for the blood products laboratory at Elstree;

(3) if he will make a statement on the progress of the project to build the blood products laboratory at Elstree;

(4) when it was originally proposed that the United Kingdom should become self-sufficient in the blood product Factor VIII;

(5) when Her Majesty's Government were first committed to the blood products laboratory at Elstree; and what was the original estimate of its cost and of its likely completion date;

(6) when the production of Factor VIII was estimated to come on stream at Elstree; and when it actually came on stream.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Doctors (Computerised Practices)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the expenses incurred by general medical practitioners to computerise their practices is re-imbursed; if his Department keeps records of the number of computerised practices and the present proportion of all practices now computerised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: All expenses incurred in providing general medical services are reimbursed. About half, including expenditure on computers is returned indirectly on an average basis through fees and allowances. The Department does not have a record of the number of computerised practices; this is a matter for general practitioners themselves as independent contractors and is not subject to any central control or return. It is estimated, however, that some 800-1,000 practices, or a little under 10 per cent. of the total, now have computers.

Preventive Medicine

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report figures showing the proportion of total National Health Service resources devoted to disease prevention and health promotion in the years 1975, 1980 and 1985.

Mrs. Currie: Aspects of disease prevention and health promotion form part of the work of many National Health Service staff, and it would not be practicable to attempt an assessment of the total resources devoted to these matters.

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of medical research funds contributed by his Department was devoted to prevention of disease and the promotion of health in the last full year to a convenient date.

Mrs. Currie: Much of the research funded directly by the Department is intended to improve health and prevent disease. Research projects aimed specifically at the prevention of disease, the misuse of drugs and alcohol, or the promotion of health account for about 10 per cent. of the Department's programme of centrally funded research in the field of health and personal social services. In addition, research in the prevention of disease and promotion of health is supported by the Health Education Council and other centrally funded bodies sponsored by the Department.

Kidney Patients

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report tables showing the numbers of patients taken on to treatment for renal dialysis according to regions in England, and the number of patients accepted per million of the population in European Community countries.

Mrs. Currie: According to data supplied by the European Dialysis and Transplant Association for the year 1985, the information is as follows:

	Number of patients	Rate per million population
National Health Service regions in England
Northern	140	45·2
Yorkshire	134	37·2
Trent	210	45·7

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received seeking the inclusion of Mucodyne within the limited drug list; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We have received many letters and other representations about the drug Mucodyne and other oral mucolytics. The Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs has considered these drugs on a number of occasions and following its advice oral mucolytics have been made available under the National Health Service only for patients with specified conditions. Following further representations from the manufacturers the advisory committee has again reviewed the position of Mucodyne and we are presently considering the committee's recommendations.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons, and of which grades, are employed in his Department on monitoring and surveying his agreement with the tobacco industry on advertising.

Mrs. Currie: The new voluntary agreement on cigarette advertising, concluded earlier this year with the Tobacco Advisory Council, provided for a new committee with responsibility for monitoring the agreement to be set up under an independent chairman. On 4 November my right hon. Friend announced the appointment of Sir Peter Lazarus to chair the new body, which plans to start work before the end of the year. The committee is drawn equally from the industry and the five Government Departments mainly concerned. The three officials representing this Department are in grades 2, 3 and 5 respectively; other officials provide administrative support.

Income Support

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state his estimate of the numbers likely to be eligible for the additional premium on income support for the severely disabled.

Mr. Major: We are re-examining our estimate in the light of comments made by organisations representing disabled people. I shall write to the hon. Member when this work is complete.

Restart Scheme

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to answer the letter from the hon. Member for Birkenhead of 19 November concerning the Government's restart scheme.

Mr. Major: I replied to the letter on 28 November.

Benefits

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to ensure that information concerning benefits is circulated amongst senior citizens.

Mr. Lyell: The Department has adopted a wide range of measures designed to ensure that all claimants, including senior citizens, receive information about the benefits to which they may be entitled. These include the display of leaflets in local offices and Post Offices and the operation of DHSS freephone which provides free advice and information, nationwide.

As far as pensioners are concerned, a supplementary benefit leaflet and claim form is sent to all new recipients of retirement and widows benefits and all retirement pension order books include information about supplementary pensioners.

Individual local offices have mounted many initiatives to provide more advice and information to the communities they serve. In 1985-86, a quarter of all the Department's offices mounted special exercises geared specifically to providing more advice and information to elderly people.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the numbers who claim (a) unemployment benefit and (b) supplementary benefit as unemployed claimants; what are the total numbers who are dependent on these claimants; what are the total yearly amounts paid in unemployment benefit and supplementary benefit for the unemployed; and if he will publish these figures also on a regional basis.

Mr. Lyell: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the numbers of departmental staff, and the proportion of staff time, involved in the administration of (a) benefits for the unemployed and (b) benefits for pensioners.

Mr. Lyell: The numbers of staff in the Department employed on administering benefits to the unemployed and pensioners, expressed in whole time equivalents, are estimated to be 17,000 and 13,500 respectively.

These totals represent 20 per cent. and 16 per cent. of all departmental staff engaged on social security work.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Blair asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list those areas in the north-east and Cumbria which have experienced weekly average temperatures below −1·5°C. in 1985-86; if he will list the number of weeks such temperatures were experienced; and what estimate he has made of the amount of money involved in severe weather payments to these areas: (a) under his present system of exceptionally severe weather payments and (b) under his proposed system;

(2) if he will list those areas in Scotland which have experienced weekly average temperatures below −1·5°C. in 1985-86; if he will list the number of weeks such temperatures were experienced; and what is his estimate of the amount of money involved in severe weather payments to these areas (a) under the present system of exceptionally severe weather payments and (b) under his proposed system.

Mr. Major: Details of the areas in which exceptionally cold weather payments would have been made under the proposed new criteria last winter are contained in annex C to the report published by the Social Security Advisory Committee on these proposals (Cm. 18), and annex B to the Secretary of State's statement published with that report.

Payments actually made by the Department's local offices in the north-east of England and Cumbria last winter totalled approximately £2 million. Final figures are awaited from some local offices in Scotland, but the provisional total for local offices for which returns have so far been received is approximately £1·9 million. It is not possible to make a reliable estimate of what expenditure would have been under the proposed new rules last winter since this would depend on claimants' capital holdings and take-up in the areas concerned.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the average annual expenditure over a five-year period on the proposed cold weather payments.

Mr. Major: It is not sensible to make projections for the future since the crucial factor—the weather—cannot be predicted. Nor is it possible to make valid retrospective assessment, since amounts paid would depend on claimants' capital holdings and take-up in the attached areas. However, our intention and expectation is that, over the years, the new system implies help on broadly the same scale as has operated in the years since 1980.

Pensions, Prices and Earnings

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for each year since 1978, the percentage increase in the retirement pension, the retail price index increase and the increase in national average earnings; and by how much the pension, prices and average earnings have increased between May 1979 and October 1986.

Mr. Major: The percentage increases applying in the uprating month in each year since 1978 are given in the following table.

November	Percentage increase since previous uprating: Retirement pension-single pension	Retail price index	National average earnings
1978	11·4	8·1	13·3
1979	19·5	17·4	19·1
1980	16·5	15·3	17·9
1981	9·0	12·0	11·5
1982	11·0	6·3	8·3
1983	3·7	4·8	7·3
1984	5·1	4·9	6·5
1985	7·0	5·5	8·6
1986 (July)	1·0	1·7	5·9

Meaningful comparisons over a period of time can only be made between uprating dates. The percentage increases applying between November 1978 and July 1986 are:

	Percentage increases
Retirement pension	98·5
Retail price index	90·0
National average earnings	123·0

Housing Benefit

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to introduce legislation to ensure that all local authorities disregard war pensions and war widows' pensions when calculating housing benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lyell: Legislation currently provides for all authorities to disregard a statutory amount and gives authorities discretion to disregard any additional amounts if they wish. These provisions will remain the same under the reformed scheme to be introduced in April 1988. The Social Security Act 1986 contains the power for authorities to disregard discretionary additional amounts. The proposals on statutory disregards will be included in regulations to be made under the Act next year.

Sick Pay

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Servies how many representations the Government have received complaining of the complexity of the three rate system of statutory sick pay; and from what individuals or organisations they were received.

Mr. Lyell [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986 c. 145]: There have been no complaints specifically about the structure of three rates for statutory sick pay, but some employers' representatives have instanced the three rates when pressing generally for simplification of the scheme.

Baby Units

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details by health region of the number of cots available in special care baby units (a) as a percentage of all cots and (b) as a percentage of live births for 1985.

Mrs. Currie: [pursuant to her reply, 27 November 1986, c. 356]: I regret I cannot provide the hon. Member with all the information he seeks. Information on the total number of cots is not separately recorded. The available figures are given in the table.

NHS hospitals 1985 England

Regional Health Authority	Average daily number of available cots in special care baby units	Cots available per 10,000 live births during year
Northern	288·7	71·0
Yorkshire	303·8	64·3
Trent	341·3	61·8
East Anglian	144·7	60·4
North West Thames	292·7	75·7
North East Thames	317·7	61·3
South East Thames	281·0	59·7
South West Thames	186·5	59·9
Wessex	192·6	56·1
Oxford	195·6	61·6
South Western	207·7	56·3
West Midlands	433·7	61·0
Mersey	188·3	58·8
North Western	341·4	60·3
All RHAs	3,715·7	62·1

Health Authorities (Expenditure)

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a list in the Official Report of expenditure undertaken by each of the regional health authorities on (a) smoking, (b) alcohol, (c) diet and (d) acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 27 November 1986, c. 359]: This information is not collected centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to enquire of the individual health authorities. Information on spending on AIDS generally is included in my right hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) today.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Procurator Fiscal, Hamilton

Mr. George Robertson asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland what plans he has to remedy the accommodation problems of the procurator fiscal's office in Hamilton.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: The most recent option considered for the rehousing of the procurator fiscal was the development proposed by Hamilton district council on the vacant site in Almada street. As the letter from my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, Acton (Sir G. Young) dated 22 July 1986 to the hon. Gentleman intimated, none of the tenders received was acceptable to the Property Services Agency, but it advised the council that it would be prepared to consider a revised scheme.

To date the district council has not come forward with further proposals. Discussions are continuing between the PSA and my officials and a meeting has been arranged for Monday 15 December to discuss possible alternatives. Until the outcome of these discussions is known, I am unable to comment further.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Ministerial Actions (Advice)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Attorney-General if he will now make it his policy to answer parliamentary questions about advice sought from or given by him concerning the lawfulness of actions taken by Ministers in relation to nationalised industries; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: There is a well established convention that advice given by the Law Officers to Ministers is confidential and is disclosed only in exceptional circumstances. I do not propose to depart from that practice.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Attorney-General whether all advice given by him concerning the lawfulness or legal implications of ministerial actions or proposed actions is treated as being covered by the Official Secrets Acts; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The application of the Official Secrets Acts to advice concerning the lawfulness or legal implications of ministerial actions or proposed actions will depend on the facts of an individual case.

PRIME MINISTER

Bristol

Q57. Mr. Hayward asked the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Bristol.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

State Security

Q145. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister why Sir Robert Armstrong in approaching the United Kingdom publishers of the book by Mr. Chapman Pincher "Their Trade is Treachery", seeking page proofs of the book, failed to disclose that the security services had been in possession of page proofs of the book for over a month; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: It would be inappropriate for me to comment on matters which may arise in the proceedings concerning the Peter Wright case in Australia while those proceedings continue. I also intend to follow the precedent set by previous Prime Ministers of not commenting on security matters.

EC (Subsidised Exports)

Q155. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the implications for the 4 December 1984 agreement of the Council on budgetary control of the subsidised export of food and wine to eastern Europe; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I shall continue to use every suitable opportunity to emphasise the need for decisions on common agricultural policy reform. Bringing surpluses and their associated budgetary costs under better control will reduce the need for subsidised exports.

MI6

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether there (a) has been and (b) is now an organisation called MI6; and whether she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I intend to follow the precedent set by previous Prime Ministers of not commenting on security matters.

Westland plc

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if any consideration was given to bringing into the public domain the letter of 7 January from the Solicitor-General to the then Secretary of State for Defence, immediately after a copy of the letter was received in her office; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 17 November, at columns 49-50.

Engagements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 2 December.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 2 December.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 2 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

Departmental Staff (Investigative Duties)

Mr. Kaufman asked the Prime Minister if she will list the number of staff in each Government Department or public body who are regularly employed on investigative duties.

The Prime Minister: There are no central records of the numbers of all such staff.

Hoover (Relocation)

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister on what basis grant is to be paid to Hoover to relocate from Perivale to Merthyr Tydfil.

The Prime Minister: The company is eligible to claim regional development grant in respect of the creation of new jobs in a development area.

Merchant Fleet

Sir Edward du Cann asked the Prime Minister whether the statement by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Department of Transport, Lord Brabazon of Tara, on 24 November at Chelmsford to the effect that he could offer no hope that the Government would take action to halt the decline in the United Kingdom merchant fleet represents Government policy; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government monitor the size of the merchant fleet closely and will continue to keep the position under review.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Northern Ireland (Terrorism)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the British ambassador in Dublin made any representations to the Government of the Republic of Ireland following the attack by terrorists from the Irish Republic on the Fane Valley co-operative building at Newtownhamilton on the border between the Republic of Ireland and the United Kingdom on Tuesday 25 November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: No such representations were made, nor were they necessary. The Royal Ulster Constabulary is able to obtain the assistance of the Garda Siochana in investigating incidents of this kind.

Hong Kong

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether moneys of the Hong Kong Foreign Exchange reserve form part of the security for the loan arrangements concluded on 23 September in Peking for the Daya Bay nuclear power project.

Mr. Renton: No.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what responsibilities Her Majesty's Government exercise towards the safety of the people of Hong Kong; and how these responsibilities are carried out.

Mr. Renton: We exercise full responsibility for the welfare and wellbeing of the people of Hong Kong. This responsibility is carried out in close consultation with the Governor and Executive Council of Hong Kong.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has received (a) opposing and (b) favouring the building of the Daya Bay nuclear power plant.

Mr. Renton: (a) One, (b) None.

European Economic and Social Committee

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the full membership of the European Social and Economic Committee, with dates of appointment of members.

Mrs. Chalker: Copies of a list of the 189 members of the Economic and Social Committee, giving dates of appointment, are being placed in the Library of the House.

South Korea

Mr. Parry askd the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Government of South Korea concerning that Government's record on human rights.

Mr. Renton: Contacts with the Government of the Republic of Korea ensure that they remain well aware of the views of Her Majesty's Government and organisations in the United Kingdom on human rights matters.

Raoul Wallenberg

Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to obtain from the Swedish Government as much information as is in their possession about the case of Raoul Wallenberg; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The Swedish Government have always been ready to make information available in this case. A copy of a document which they produced was placed in the Library of the House last year, bringing together the main evidence then available. We remain in close touch with them.

Disarmament

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards disarmament in the light of the statement of Soviet Foreign Minister Mr. Shevardnadze on 27 February that, if United States medium-range missiles in Europe were liquidated, there would no longer be any need to keep Soviet operating tactical missiles where they have been deployed.

Mr. Renton: In the event of an agreement limiting and reducing longer-range INF warheads in Europe, we would expect the Soviet SS22 launchers, forward deployed to the GDR and Czechoslavakia as so-called "counter-measures" to United States LRINF deployments in 1983, to be moved back to Soviet territory.

Nuclear Forces

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list the proposals the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation allies have received from either the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics or its allies since January 1981 on constraining short and medium-range European nuclear forces in Europe;

(2) if he will list the proposals made by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation allies to the Warsaw Pact allies since January 1981 on constraining short and medium-range nuclear forces in Europe.

Mr. Renton: The progress report published in December 1983 by NATO's special consultative group on INF arms control gave full details of the first United States-Soviet INF talks between 1981-83. A copy is available in the Library of the House.

Both sides have agreed to respect the confidentiality of the current Geneva nuclear and space talks. However, the US and Soviet Union have each given detailed accounts of the six rounds of the negotiations that have so far taken place, and of the terms of the INF agreement discussed at Reykjavik. This would provide for zero LRINF warheads in Europe; 100 LRINF warheads each outside Europe on United States territory and Soviet Asia respectively; constraints on shorter range INF with subsequent negotiations about reductions to begin within six months; and measures for effective verification including on-site inspection.

RAF Fylingdales

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list the parameters under which he has determined the legal status of the planned radar modernisation at RAF Fylingdales;

(2) what assessment he has made of the compatibility of the planned modernisation of radar facilities at RAF Fylingdales with the anti-ballistic missile treaty.

Mr. Renton: As we have already made clear, we have no doubts that the modernisation of RAF Fylingdales will be fully in accordance with United States obligations under the ABM treaty. There was a ballistic missile early warning system installation at Fylingdales before the treaty was signed in 1972. The treaty does not prohibit modernisation of ballistic missile early warning system radars already in existence when the treaty provisions came into force.

EC (Youth Exchange)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial support the Government are giving to the proposed new youth exchange scheme in the EEC; and how much money will be distributed.

Mr. Eggar: Discussions on the proposed EC youth exchange programme are still at an early stage, with the size, scope and cost yet to be determined. It is therefore not possible to say what the size of any contribution from us might be, or how money for the programme would be distributed.

ENERGY

Mines and Quarries Act

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will place in the Library correspondence between himself and the chairman of the National Coal Board in connection with any proposed changes in the Mines and Quarries Act.

Mr. David Hunt: Any such changes are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

European Parliament (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on his recent visit to the European Parliament and his meeting there with the Committee on Energy Research and Technology; and if he will detail the issues raised at that meeting.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have not made such a visit. Arrangements have been made for my right hon. Friend the Minister of State to meet the Committee on Energy, Research and Technology on 15 December.

Nuclear Power Research

Mr. McGuire asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the total amount of Government funding for all forms of nuclear power research in the last 12 months.

Mr. Goodlad: The 1986-87 provision for expenditure by the Department of Energy on nuclear R and D is set out in section D of the Supply Estimates 1986-87, class VI,2. This totals £180·5 million.

The Estimates (section C3 of class X.5) also contain provision for expenditure of £11·5 million by the Department of the Environment for research into radioactive waste management.

Power Stations

Mr. McGuire asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list in the Official Report the top 10 power stations which produce the cheapest electricity on a cost per unit basis, giving in each case the type of fuel used, the date the station was commissioned, the original estimated cost, and the real cost when completed, the original estimated building time and the actual building time, the original planned life of the station and the current planned life of each station.

Mr. Goodlad: Following are the top 10 power stations in the Central Electricity Generating Board merit order, based on efficiency of plant and cost of fuel used:

	(1) Date of synchronisation	(2)	(3) Cost (£ million) original	(4) now	(5) Building (months) original	(6) now
Hinkley Point B	February 1976	1966	117	142	52	98
Wylfa	January 1971	1963	140	136	53	81
Oldbury	November 1967	1961	74	72	47	64
Dungeness A	September 1965	1959	77	68	44	58
Hartlepool*	August 1983	1967	117	257	57	175
Hinkley Point B	February 1965	1957	76	86	57	89
Dungeness B*	April 1983	1965	111	267	49	204
Sizewell A	January 1966	1960	70	66	47	56
Heysham 1*	July 1983	1969	168	282	52	147
Trawsfynydd	January 1965	1959	77	80	50	66

Notes:
Column 1: Date power first supplied to the grid.
Column 2: Scheme base date.
Column 3: Original cost estimate (including risk margin and initial fuel) in constant scheme base date prices.
Column 4: Cost to completion in constant scheme base date prices (including estimated future costs at stations marked * which are not yet fully commissioned).
Column 5: Estimated construction time from start on site to the date of first power supply to the grid.
Column 6: Actual construction time defined as in column 5.

All the stations are nuclear. The originally planned nominal life of all the stations was 25 years with the exception of Wylfa, 20 years. The currently assumed nominal life remains 25 years for AGR stations (those marked * and Hinkley Point B). All the others, including Wylfa, now have an assumed nominal life of 30 years.

Electricity in Scotland is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Energy how much plutonium has been created at the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, Winfrith steam generating heavy water reactor nuclear station since it was commissioned; what quantity of this plutonium has been reprocessed and to what purpose any reprocessed plutonium thus arising has been put.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1986, c. 352]: Since May 1979 the discharge of irradiated fuel from the SGHWR, operated by the UKAEA at its establishment at Winfrith, has contained an estimated 170kg plutonium. None of this has been reprocessed.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

South Africa

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will release the latest figures and calculations of the University of South Africa that provide the current guidelines for the European Community code of conduct in South Africa.

Mr. Alan Clark: I am placing in the Library of the House the table published by the University of South Africa of supplemented living level requirements for August 1985 and February 1986. These are the figures relevant to the latest completed reporting period for which companies are now submitting their returns under the EC code of conduct for companies with interest in South Africa. The code requires that pay based on the SLL for an average sized family must be considered the absolute minimum. Further explanatory guidance to British companies is contained in Cmnd. 9860.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what he is doing to ensure that companies failing to report on their holdings in South Africa for the 12 months ended 30 June 1985 comply with the European Community code of conduct.

Mr. Alan Clark: The EC code of conduct remains voluntary, but I and my officials take every opportunity to urge all the British companies concerned to comply fully with it and submit full reports. Of the 138 companies whose interests were known or believed to warrant a full report under the code, only three declined to submit returns for the 1984-85 reporting period, and two of these offered certain general assurances about the conditions of employment of their black South African employees.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the minimum living levels and the supplemented living levels for South Africa.

Mr. Alan Clark: The supplemented and minimum living levels are calculations by the bureau of market research of the University of South Africa. The supplemented living level makes provision at current local prices for items considered by researchers to be essential to human needs in South Africa, additional to those costed in minimum living level, which is regarded as the minimun subsistence level in African conditions. Separate calculations are made for individual districts and household sizes and are expressed in rands per months. The calculations are revised every six months in February and August.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information is provided by his Department to companies with interests in South Africa on levels of wages relevant to the European Community code of conduct.

Mr. Alan Clark: Guidance on the level of minimum wages advocated by the code for black African employees is contained in the explanatory guidance published in Cmnd. 9860. Companies are referred to the statistics published by the bureau of market research, University of South Africa.

Consultation Documents (Responses)

Mr. Forman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to make public the responses received to future consultation documents issued by his Department, unless respondents have specifically asked for their comments to be confidential; and if he will make clear arrangements for publication of responses when such documents are issued.

Mr. Butcher: No. Frank expression of views could be inhibited if there were a presumption in favour of publication, but I continue to be ready to do so in appropriate cases and when the respondent has explicitly agreed to publication.

Privatisation (Golden Shares)

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what communication he has received from the European Commission concerning limits on golden shares in privatised British companies.

Mr. Butcher: None.

British Aerospace

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what communications he has received from the European Commission regarding foreign ownership shareholding restrictions in British Aerospace; and what account he has given.

Mr. Butcher: None.

Rolls-Royce plc

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what advice has been received from the European Commission regarding foreign shareholding restrictions in the proposed privatisation of Rolls-Royce.

Mr. Butcher: None.

Iraq (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement on the Minister for Trade's visit to Iraq on 10 November; and what discussions he held with Iraqi leaders regarding the progress of the war with Iran.

Mr. Alan Clark: I visited Iraq on 10-11 November as co-chairman of the United Kingdom-Iraq Joint Commission to review the development of bilateral trade and the prospects for the coming year. The joint commission approved the extension of the financial protocol providing credit facilities for United Kingdom exports until the end of 1987. Iraqi Ministers confirmed their intention of meeting Iraq's current payments obligations to the United Kingdom. With Iraqi Ministers I discussed the economic implications for Iraq of the fall in oil prices and the war with Iran. Iraq continues to face a period of severe economic stringency; nevertheless, our exports to this market show a welcome increase of almost 9 per cent. in the first 10 months of 1986. I also visited the United Kingdom pavilion at the Baghdad international fair, where 70 British companies were exhibiting. My hosts commented favourably on the large British presence.

Relocation Grants

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what grants are available to companies to relocate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My Department does not provide grants specifically to help companies with relocation expenses. However, firms which relocate in the assisted areas may qualify for regional assistance in respect of projects which provide new assets and create or safeguard jobs in those areas.

Nightwear

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will publish in the Official Report the definition of the term nightwear to which his Department was working when it published its guidelines "Nightwear and Fire" recently;

(2) on what date it was decided to include in the Nightwear (Safety) Regulations 1985 babies garments other than nightwear; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Regulation 3(1) of the Nightwear (Safety) Regulations 1985 provides that the meaning of "nightwear" extends also to other garments such as bath robes and includes babies garments. The regulations define "baby's garment" to mean any garment with a chest measurement not exceeding 53 cm which would normally be worn only by a child under the age of 3 months.

The decision to include babies garments was taken after considering the response to consultations on proposals for regulations in the period November 1984 to January 1985. The definition includes all babies garments (with a chest measurement) since it is not possible to distinguish between garments worn by a young baby during the day or night.

The draft regulations, which were laid before Parliament in November 1985 and approved by a resolution of each House, provided that all such babies garments should carry a label showing whether or not they are capable of meeting the new flammability standard. The regulations were made on 20 December 1985 and come into effect on 1 March 1987, which allowed a 15-month period for the trade to make the necessary adjustments.

The Department's "Nightwear and Fire" guide to the regulations, which was published on 25 September, has been widely distributed to the trade. Copies of the guide have been placed in the Library.

Company Law

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish a list of all those who commented on the Prentice report on the ultra vires rule in company law; and if he will indicate his intentions now that the date for representations has passed.

Mr. Howard: As at noon yesterday, 32 responses to the consultative document had been received. I expect to receive more in the course of the next few days. All responses will be considered fully before decisions on future policy are taken. The list of respondents so far is as follows:

The Institute of Directors
The Institute of Chartered Secretaries and Administrators

Internal Market Council

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Internal Market Council on 1 December.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Internal Market Council which I chaired agreed 12 measures in the United Kingdom presidency's internal market action programme. These were a regulation on controlling the circulation of counterfeit goods within the Community; and package of five measures on procedures governing the marketing and testing of human and veterinary medicines; directives on the introduction of good laboratory practices for chemical and other products, on standards for roll-over protection structures on narrow track agriculture and forestry tractors, on legal protection of the original designs for the internal layout of semiconductor products, and on the labelling of noise of domestic appliances; a recommendation on measures to improve the safety of hotels against fire; and a regulation on the abolition of customs formalities on exit from one member state to another. The Council also made excellent progress on a number of other internal market items so that it should be possible to agree further measures before the end of the presidency, including on information technology, telecommunications standards, and amendment to the Public Procurement (Supplies) Directive.

The Commission also adopted a directive on the approximation of member states' laws, regulations and administrative provisions on consumer credit.

Exports (Statitics)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the percentage of British-made goods leaving the United Kingdom for export and which have been carried on British-registered ships in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have been asked to reply.

In 1985, United Kingdom registered vessels carried 35 per cent. of the value (23 per cent. of the weight) of United Kingdom exports. Information is not available separately for exports which were British-made.

EC (Regional Fund)

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will produce a table in the Official Report showing the regional distribution of the European Economic Community's regional fund's project aid and showing the percentage allocation to Wales, Scotland, the west midlands, the east midlands, the north-west, Northern Ireland, Yorkshire and Humberside, the north and the south-west for each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 1 December 1986, c. 434]: Commitments to the United Kingdom under the European regional development fund quota arrangements, analysed by region, for the years 1983, 1984 and 1985 are shown in the table. Commitments from the fund in respect of a particular region are likely to be affected by the volume of eligible applications made.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Higher Education

10. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what number of students are currently in full-time higher education in England and Wales; and what was the figure in 1978-79.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: In 1986 there were 457,000 home students in full-time higher education in England and Wales. This compares with 384,000 in 1979—this is an increase of 19 per cent.

12. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what figures he has on the percentage of disabled students in higher education.

36. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what figures he has on the percentage of disabled students in higher education.

47. Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what figures he has on the percentage of disabled students in higher education.

77. Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what figures he has on the percentage of disabled students in higher education.

Mr. Walden: As explained in my reply on 18 November to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher) information on disabled students in higher education is not available routinely. However, in 1985 a DES funded survey estimated that there were some 600 students in public sector higher education who had special educational needs which required additional support or equipment.

The Open University had just over 2,000 disabled students in the undergraduate programme at the start of 1986. Information is not available about other universities.

16. Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what funds will be available in 1987-88 for public sector higher education capital expenditure.

Mr. Walden: The total available for capital allocations to local authorities for higher education has yet to be determined. Subject to parliamentary approval, £3·3 million will be available for capital allocations to voluntary and direct grant colleges.

20. Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what figures he has on the percentage of students in higher education who are of Asian or Afro-Caribbean parentage.

48. Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what figures he has on the percentage of students in higher education who are of Asian and Afro-Caribbean parentage.

50. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what figures he has on the percentage of students in higher education who are of Asian and Afro-Caribbean parentage.

Mr. Walden: This information is not collected centrally. Discussions are in progress within the Department about means of collecting such data for the future.

24. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the levels of academic salaries in higher education.

68. Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the levels of academic salaries in higher education.

72. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the levels of academic salaries in higher education.

73. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the levels of academic salaries in higher education.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals and the Association of University Teachers have made proposals for a restructuring of academic pay. Those have been discussed with my Department, most recently on 19 November, against the background of my right hon. Friend's willingness to provide additional resources for a satisfactory outcome. I very much hope that such a result can be achieved.

61. Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the future of higher education.

Mr. Walden: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 6 November, at columns 487-91 about the the Government's expenditure plans and to that which he gave to the hon. Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Hargreaves) on 20 November, at columns 281-82, about projections of future demand for higher education.

74. Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the levels of pay of non-academic and ancillary staff in higher education.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Members for Preston (Mr. Thorne), for Barnsley, East (Mr. Patchett) and for Midlothian (Mr. Eadie) earlier today.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the chairman of the National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Education; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend last met the National Advisory Body committee, including its chairman and the chairman of the NAB board who is a member, on 9 July when the main subject was resources for 1987-88.

Burnham Committee

13. Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his plans to replace the Burnham negotiating machinery.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Bill which I introduced on 28 November makes provision for the repeal of the Remuneration of Teachers Act 1965, and will thereby scrap the Burnham committee. The employers and unions are agreed that Burnham must go.

School Meals

17. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in the past three months on the provision and nutritional quality of school dinners.

80. Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in the past three months on the provision and nutritional quality of school dinners.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has received two letters on this subject from members of the public in the last three months.

38. Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what priority Her Majesty's Government attach in the allocation of overall resources to education to the provision of school meals.

Mr. Dunn: The Government have made increased provision for expenditure on school meals next year, but they continue to regard school meals as one of the services, along with caretaking, cleaning and administration, where it is open to many LEAs to emulate the practice of the best and achieve substantial savings in their net costs by introducing more efficient methods of working.

Teachers (Pay)

21. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to meet the National Association of Schoolmasters and Union of Women Teachers to discuss teachers' pay and conditions.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend would welcome an approach from the National Association of Schoolmasters and Union of Women Teachers, and any of the other teachers' unions, to discuss teachers' pay and conditions of service.

26. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the latest position regarding negotiations with the teaching unions and the teachers' employers.

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on teachers' pay and conditions.

31. Mr. Barnett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on teachers' pay and conditions.

33. Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on teachers' pay and conditions.

34. Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the current position on the teachers' pay negotiations.

35. Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement on teachers' pay and conditions.

39. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on teachers' pay and conditions.

40. Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the current position regarding teachers' pay and conditions of service.

44. Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on teachers' pay and conditions.

51. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the pay and conditions of teachers.

52. Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the most recent developments in the teachers' pay dispute.

58. Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the teachers' dispute about pay and conditions.

69. Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on teachers' pay and conditions.

89. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement regarding the teachers' pay dispute.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I refer hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Cornwall, South East, (Mr. Hicks).

53. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in respect of the Government's intention to repeal the Remuneration of Teachers Act 1965; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has not as yet received any formal representations in response to the proposals in the Bill which he introduced on 28 November to repeal the Remuneration of Teachers Act and make new arrangements for determining school teachers' pay. Reaction to the announcement in the Queen's Speech that the RTA was to be repealed was generally favourable.

86. Mr. Ray Powell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy towards the settlement on teachers' pay and conditions negotiated between the teachers' unions and employers.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend indicated the Government's position in relation to the negotiations between the teacher unions and the local authority employers in a statement to the House on 27 November.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will state which are the paragraphs of the Main report in the remuneration of teachers in Scotland on which he bases his requirements for differentials in his proposed pay scales for teachers in England and Wales.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend's proposals for a pay structure for teachers in England and Wales drew on careful consideration of chapters 10 to 12 of the Main report. I refer in particular to paragraphs 10.5-6, 10.11, 11.9-10, 12.24 and 12.27.

Text Books

22. Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in the past three months from teachers' unions about the provision of text books in schools.

41. Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for ducation and Science what representations he has ceived in the past three months from teachers' unions out the provision of text books in schools.

56. Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for ducation and Science what representations he has ceived in the past three months from teachers' unions out the provision of text books in schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: Recent meetings and correspondence th teachers' unions have considered resources for GCSE general, but not text books in particular.

Primary Schools

23. Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for ducation and Science how many rural primary schools ere closed in 1985-86: and which were in rural velopment areas.

Mr. Dunn: In the period 1 April 1985 to 31 March 1986, rural primary schools were approved for closure, of hich six were in rural development areas.

Student Grants

25. Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for ducation and Science when he last met with the National nion of Students to discuss student financial support.

32. Mr. Torney asked the Secretary of State for ducation and Science when he last met the National nion of Students to discuss student financial support.

75. Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for ducation and Science when he last met the National nion of Students to discuss student financial support.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend met representatives the National Union of Students on 30 September 1986, hen a range of issues, including financial support for udents, were discussed. In addition, officials met presentatives of the National Union of Students on 21 ovember 1986 to discuss the subject.

30. Mr. James Hamilton asked the Secretary of State r Education and Science what representations he has ceived in the past three months on the level of student nancial support.

71. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of ate for Education and Science what representations he s received in the past three months on the level of udent financial support.

Mr. Walden: I refer the hon. Members to the reply hich I gave earlier today to the hon. Members for ackburn (Mr. Straw), for East Kilbride (Dr. Miller), for oventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist) and for Wigan (Mr. ott).

Passive Solar Techniques (Buildings)

27. Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for ducation and Science if his Department issues any design idance and requirements to local authorities and others r new school and other educational buildings and novation work to encourage them to use passive solar chniques and technology; and if he will make a atement.

Mr. Dunn: My Department does not issue design idance or requirements specifically on passive solar techniques. It is for local authorities to decide whether such techniques would be cost-effective in individual cases. We are reviewing the need for more research in this area.

Conductive Education

28. Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations and requests for financial support he has received regarding the development in the United Kingdom of conductive education; and what response he has made.

81. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department has carried out any research on the value of conductive education.

Mr. Dunn: Over the past two years representations have been received from a number of parents and others about the development of conductive education in this country and the need for it to be given financial support. It has been explained that the Government need more information before deciding whether the method should be supported and encouraged. The Department is currently considering in conjunction with the DHSS the possibility of funding some independent investigations, which would include a study of current provision and an evaluation of the educational and other implications of any wider development here.

Lower Attaining Pupils

37. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of the lower attaining pupils programme.

Mrs. Rumbold: I am sending my hon. Friend a copy of the speech which my right hon. Friend made on the programme at Warwick university on 1 July, together with a copy of the recently published report by Her Majesty's Inspectorate on the first two years. Briefly, the main impact of the programme so far has been on the motivation of pupils and their attitude to school. The challenge for the future is to exploit this to raise the educational attainment of the pupils concerned. A formal evaluation is in hand.

Education Act 1986

42. Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will be publishing guidelines to accompany the Education Act 1986.

78. Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to bring into force the provisions of the Education Act 1986 regarding school governing bodies.

Mr. Dunn: It is proposed that the school government provisions of what has become the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 should, in general, apply to any new school from 1 September 1987, to county and maintained special schools by not later than 1 September 1988 and to voluntary schools by not later than 1 September 1989. In advance of that, all schools would, from 7 January 1987, be subject to the requirement for governors annual report and parents meeting and, from 1 September 1987, benefit from the new arrangements for financial information and delegation. Guidance on the Act's provisions for early implementation will be issued shortly. Guidance on the remaining provisions is planned for early April.

School Buildings

43. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in the past three months on the state of repair of school buildings.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Members for Coventry, North-East (Mr. Park) and for Burnley (Mr. Pike).

Health Education Council

45. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy not to approve distribution of the Health Education Council's amended resources list called "Relationships and Sexuality"; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend will be considering carefully the revised resource list on "Relationships and Sexuality", recently submitted to this Department by the Health Education Council, both against the originally agreed criteria for its revision and also in the light of the new legislative provisions for sex education in schools. This consideration will necessarily take a little time and I cannot at this stage anticipate the conclusions he will reach.

School Attendance

46. Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the levels of truancy in inner cities.

60. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the percentage rate of truancy amongst 15-year-old pupils on the most recent date for which figures are available; what was the comparable figure for five years previously; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is not available. However, research and local surveys show some deterioration in the attendance of 14 and 15-year-olds, in inner city schools and elsewhere. It is clear that unjustified absence occurs too often in some schools and that valuable educational opportunities are being missed. In February 1986 my right hon. Friend issued guidance to local education authorities on how to use their education welfare services to tackle more effectively non-attendance at school. In addition, the Government are taking major initiatives to improve the quality of teaching, the school curriculum and examinations, all of which should beneficially affect school attendance.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many education authorities responded by 31 May to the request in his circular on school attendance and educational welfare services issued on 10 February, that a review be undertaken of their educational welfare structure and organisation; whether he was satisfied with the nature of the responses; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Forty-five responses were received by 31 May. Replies are still outstanding from seven authorities. The responses are currently being analysed.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many educational welfare officers were employed by education authorities in England and Wales on the most recent date for which figures are available; what were comparable figures two and five years previously; and if he will provide separate figures on this basis for the Essex county council.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department has not collected such information in the past in relation to local education authorities in England, but it will be available when the responses to circular 2/86 on "School Attendance and Education Welfare Services" have been analysed. The figure for the Essex county council is 77. Information about Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what was the statistical basis for his statement in his circular of 10 February regarding school attendance rates in general and attendance rates for pupils in the 14-16 year age group; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will take steps to require local education authorities to make periodic returns of school attendance rates in the various age ranges to his Department; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what information he has received from local education authorities and Her Majesty's inspectorate about changes in the patterns of school attendance over the past two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Although the Department does not collect national statistics on attendance, it has received information from a small number of local education authorities. The statement in question was based on this information supplemented by reports by Her Majesty's inspectorate and independent surveys. There are widely differing views on what constitutes unjustified absence and difficulties in applying any such definition in individual cases. Before embarking on the collection of national statistics we should need to be satisfied that the problems of definition could be overcome and that the value of such statistics, justified the cost of collection.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing the number of prosecutions which have been initiated by local education authorities in respect of non-attendance at school under the Education Act in each year of the most recent five-year period for which figures are available; and if he will publish a separate table showing the number of supervision orders initiated by education authorities in co-operation with social services departments under the Children and Young Persons Act for the same offence in each of these years.

Mrs. Rumbold: Numbers of prosecutions in England and Wales under the Education Acts in the years 1981 to 1985, the most recent five years for which figures are available, are as follows. It is not possible to distinguish between different offences under the Acts, but most are believed to relate to failure to attend school regularly.

	Prosecutions under Education Acts
1981	3,287
1982	3,214
1983	2,757
1984	2,970
1985	3,158

Statistics of supervision orders on grounds of failure to attend school regularly do not distinguish between those initiated by local education authorities and by other agencies. The total numbers of such orders made in the same five-year period are as follows:

	Supervision orders related to School Attendance
1981	427
1982	551
1983	456
1984	361
1985	445

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what decision he has made on the recommendation of the interdepartmental working party, published in October 1985, on the use of child care law in relation to non-attendance of pupils at school; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: As announced on 1 May, at column 472, by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services, proposals will be published shortly as the basis for legislation.

Review Body Pay Awards

49. Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he has had with the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals concerning increases in costs arising from review body pay awards.

Mr. Walden: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 24 November at column 33, to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood).

Children (Special Education Needs)

54. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his policy towards the provision of resources for children with special education needs.

Mr. Dunn: The Government's recently announced plans for local authority spending on education for 1987-88 represent a cash increase of 18·8 per cent. over the figure for 1986-87. The increase should enable authorities to pursue their policy priorities, including those for special education.

Class Sizes

55. Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent discussions he has had with local education authorities about future policy on class sizes: and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has had no recent discussions with the local education authorities on this subject.

Police Officers (School Visits)

57. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidance his Department is giving to education authorities on school visits by police officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: On 28 April the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Society of Education Officers published a discussion document "Liaison between police and schools". The document, which was prepared in association with the Home Office and the Department of Education and Science, was welcomed by my right hon. Friend for its comments on the relationship between the police, schools and the community and its recommendations. Copies were distributed to all local education authorities and schools in England. My right hon. Friend attaches great importance to constructive co-operation between schools and the police who have a valuable contribution to make in educating children about crime prevention and many other aspects of law and order, drugs and road safety.

City Technology Colleges

59. Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement on his plans for the establishment of city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has invited sponsors to work in partnership with the Government on this initiative. A large number of organisations and companies have responded constructively, many wish to explore the practicalities with the Department and others have indicated that they will support the proposals in other ways.

French Language Teaching

62. Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy towards the amount of French language teaching in secondary schools; and if he plans to make any changes.

Mrs. Rumbold: The draft statement of policy, issued by my right hon. Friends in June, called for more pupils to study foreign languages throughout their secondary schooling, and for a wider choice of alternative first and of second foreign languages. The effects of these changes on French would depend upon local decisions about the range and duration of language provision within the available curricular time. Following consultations on the draft, a final version of the policy statement will be issued.

Vocational and Academic Assessment

63. Mr. Jim Callaghan asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the proposed integration of vocational and academic assessment.

64. Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about his plans to integrate vocational and academic assessment.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government attach considerable importance to the need both to build bridges between GCSE and A-levels on the one hand and vocational qualifications on the other, and to ensure that opportunities exist for entry into, and progression within, higher education and higher level professional qualifications. We have made it clear that the recently established National Council for Vocational Qualifications would be expected to work in collaboration both with the Secondary Examinations Council and with those responsible for higher level qualifications to establish linkages with the NVQ framework so as to ensure the minimum of barriers to access, progression and interchange. I am aware that several commentators on the report of the review group on vocational qualifications have called for a more radical integration of qualifications systems; the Government believe, however, that a more appropriate and feasible way forward is to develop qualifications from existing bases, ensuring that possible linkages and equivalences are fully exploited. Only if an effective national system of vocational qualifications is established, with pathways commanding the respect and status to draw in the ablest young people, will the unhelpful divide that exists between the so-called "academic" and "vocational" routes of learning be bridged.

Unemployed Persons

65. Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans for an increase of educational opportunities for the unemployed.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Newcastle under Lyme (Mrs. Golding).

School Hours

66. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will introduce legislation to empower school governors to opt for continental school hours.

Mr. Dunn: No. Local education authorities and school governing bodies already have considerable discretion in determining the structure of the school day.

Universities (Scientific Research)

67. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the funding of scientific research in British universities.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend endorses the University Grants Committee's policy of selectivity in the allocation of research funding and its plans for the development of that policy in conjunction with the research councils as described in a letter from the chairman of the committee, which has been published in the Official Report for 6 November, at columns 494-6. Research in universities will benefit from the additional funding for the universities and research councils announced by my right hon. Friend on 6 November, at columns 487-91.

Education Maintenance Allowances

70. Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his plans for education maintenance allowances.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has no plans to change the system under which local education authorities may, at their discretion, pay grants and allowances to 16 to 19-year-olds in full-time education.

Further Education

76. Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many full-time students are registered at institutions of further education in the north-east; and what was the figure in 1979.

Mr. Walden: There were 32,300 full-time and sandwich students in further education establishments situated in the counties of Northumberland, Durham, Tyne and Wear and Cleveland in November 1985 and 24,300 in November 1979.

Careers Advice

79. Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has to review the provision of careers advice in schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the White Paper "Working Together — Education and Training" which stated the Government's view that it is essential that every authority should formulate a policy for educational and vocational guidance and careers education and that the policy should set out the responsibilities of each professional group and the ways in which they can work together to ensure that policies are put into practice. Officials are now considering the next steps in conjunction with officials from the Department of Employment, and will consult as necessary with educational interests, employers and others.

Chatsmore High School, Worthing

82. Mr. Higgins asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will pay an official visit to the Chatsmore high school in Worthing.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Dual-purpose Buildings

83. Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the construction of special dual-purpose buildings designed to serve both education and the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has received no such representations.

Technology Teaching

84. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give details of plans to improve the teaching of technology in East Anglia; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The place of technology in primary and secondary education is one of the aspects of national policy set out in the White Paper, "Better Schools" (Cmnd. 9469). However, local responsibility for curriculum policy and for the organisation and delivery of the curriculum rests in East Anglia, as elsewhere, with each local education authority, its governing bodies and head-teachers. The introduction of the technical and vocational education initiative in the region, and its extension as a national scheme from September 1987, is enhancing the place of technology in the curriculum. The proposed city technology college in Norwich will build on good practice in the maintained sector and will further strengthen the development of technology teaching in the area.

In the further and higher education sectors, colleges and universities in the area have benefited from a range of Government initiatives intended to improve the teaching arrangements in technological disciplines.

Microcomputers

85. Mr. Haselhurst asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has carried out a study of the use of microcomputers in primary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: A survey of the use of microcomputers in primary and secondary schools has been undertaken, and a "Statistical Bulletin" has been produced. I am placing a pre-publication copy of the bulletin in the Library.

School Sport (Competitiveness)

87. Mr. John Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the outcome of the seminar on 26 November on the competitiveness of school sport.

Mrs. Rumbold: Some 90 individuals representing sports and education organisations attended this seminar about sport in schools, which was chaired by my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for sport.

Following wide-ranging discussions in groups and plenary sessions it was agreed that the Department of Education and Science and the Department of the Environment would commission a study of the place sport has in the school curriculum. In addition, a group will be set up, led by the Sports Council, to provide a forum for continuing discussion of the issues raised at the seminar. The group will be assisted in its work by the results of the jointly commissioned study, will be based on the council's physical education advisory panel and will include representatives of the Central Council for Physical Recreation, local authority associations and education bodies.

Universities (Pay Restructuring)

88. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to announce further additional funding in respect of pay restructuring for universities.

Mr. Walden: I refer the hon. Member to paragraph 21 of the answer given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 6 November. The discussions envisaged in that answer have now begun.

Bishop's Hatfield Girls School

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has received any representations from pupils or parents regarding the future of Bishop's Hatfield girls school; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: Hertfordshire county council is currently undertaking public consultations about the reorganisation of secondary education in the county. Correspondents to the Secretary of State have been advised of their right under section 12 of the Education Act 1980 to lodge statutory objections in the event of formal proposals being published by the local authority.

Disease Prevention

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report figures showing the proportion of Medical Research Council and Economic and Social Research Council funds devoted to prevention of disease and promotion of health in the last full year to a convenient date.

Mr. Dunn: It is not possible to give exact figures. The approximate figures for 1985-86 are:

	£ million
Medical Research Council
1. Total gross expenditure	[1]129·0
2. Funds spent on research devoted to prevention of disease and promotion of health	[1]121·1
3. Line 2 as percentage of line 1	94 per cent.
Economic and Social Research Council
1. Total gross expenditure	[1]23·8
2. Funds spent on research devoted to prevention of disease and promotion of health	[2]0·4
3. Line 2 as percentage of line 1	2 per cent.

[1] Provisional outturn.
[2] From Economic and Research Council.

Essex Institute of Higher Education

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take into account the economic and social implications for the East Anglian region of the designation of a further centre of high quality advanced education and research when considering the application by the Essex institute of higher education for polytechnical status.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend will take all relevant factors into account in considering further polytechnic designations on which he awaits advice from the National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Education.

Fine Arts

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the future of fine arts courses at universities; what has been his response; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has not received any recent representations on the future of fine arts courses at universities.

Medical Students

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the annual cost to the taxpayer of tuition fees payable to a recognized university in respect of a student reading medicine; and what was the total cost in respect of all such home students for the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Walden: The maximum tuition fee payable per annum by a local education authority in pursuance of a mandatory award is currently £536, irrespective of the student's subject of study. Local education authorities are reimbursed by the Department of Education and Science for 90 per cent. of this expenditure. It is not possible to identify separately the cost of tuition fees in respect of home students of medicine.

"Jenny Lives With Eric and Martin"

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations Her Majesty's inspectorate have received about the use by the Inner London education authority of the book, "Jenny lives with Eric and Martin"; what action they are taking as a result; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Her Majesty's inspectorate has received no direct representations. My right hon. Friend has made clear to the ILEA his view that this book, which the authority acknowledges is unbalanced, has no place in any school whatever the circumstances, and that there can be no justification for retaining it in the authority's central loan collection.

WALES

Sheep Annual Premium

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales what evidence he has of applications for sheep annual premium being lost or submitted late; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: For the 1986 marketing year 164 claim forms were received in Wales after the closing date of 10 April 1986. There were also three cases where forms were not received from farmers who claimed that they had posted them in time. The rules of the European Commission are very strict in the matter of claims not submitted by the closing date and we are not able to deal with such claims, except in the case of force majeure.

Lamb (Movement Ban)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state how many farmers in Wales have now received compensation payments arising from the radioactive lamb movement ban; and how much money, in total, has been paid out in respect of these cases.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: As at 21 November 1986, £680,355 had been paid out on 998 claims under the sheepmeat compensation schemes in Wales.

Transport (Expenditure)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a breakdown of the capital expenditure on transport in Wales for 1987-88, analysed between capital expenditure on (a) trunk roads, (b) other roads, (c) ports, (d) railways, (e) buses and (f) other items, comparing for each category, respectively, the capital expenditure in 1984-85, and 1985-86 actuals, and the 1986-87 expected turnout, with the 1987-88 capital allocation.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Capital expenditure on ports and railways and by the National Bus Company is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. No decisions on Transport expenditure in Wales for 1987-88 have been announced except those for local authority allocations. Decisions on provisions for remaining elements will be published in due course.

Provision for local authority transport expenditure in 1987-88 totals £70·2 million, about 13 per cent. higher than the forecast outturn for 1986-87. Expenditure in 1984-85 was £59 million, the provisional outturn for 1985-86 is £70 million and the forecast outturn for 1986-87 is £61 million.

Fire Escapes (Grants)

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total number of notices served by all local housing authorities in Wales under section 147 and Schedule 24 to the Housing Act 1980 (now sections 366 and 368 Housing Act 1985) in respect of means of escape from fire for each of the following years: 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985; and what was the total amount of special grants made by all local housing authorities in Wales towards the costs of means of escape from fire, including both mandatory and discretionary grants made, for each of the above years.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Information is not collected on the number of notices served under sections 366 and 368 of the Housing Act 1985. The total amount of special grants paid on completed grants towards the costs of means of escape from fire is only available for 1984 and 1985. The amounts are £122,000 and £194,000 respectively.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he is satisfied with the state of the fishing industry in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The common fisheries policy has since its introduction in 1983 brought about a period of greater security and stability for Welsh fishermen. Measures for conserving fish stocks and strengthening control arrangements throughout the European Community which have recently been improved under the United Kingdom presidency will further help the industry in Wales to face the future with more optimism. I welcome the recent announcement of an enlargement of the Milford fishing fleet.

Harbours

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales what applications from harbour authorities he is currently considering for the restoration and rebuilding of harbours in west Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: There are no applications before me at present.

Chernobyl Accident

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of farmers who have suffered financial losses following the Chernobyl disaster, but who are outside the Government's compensation scheme, have been brought to his attention by the farming unions and others; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I am aware of some cases where producers feel they are in this position. The Government's compensation schemes were welcomed by the farming unions, who were fully involved in consultations about them. I believe that the three elements of compensation which we have announced represent a fair and balanced package in response to the needs of sheep producers in north Wales affected by the movement and slaughter restrictions.

Primary Health Care

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many consultation meetings have been held in Wales on the Green Paper entitled "Primary Health Care — Agenda for Discussion"; at which locations these were held; and on what dates.

Mr. Mark Robinson: There have been no separate consultation meetings in Wales. However, our officials who have had regular and formal contact with all the health groups and professions either directly or indirectly affected by this document and have ensured that this matter has been an agenda item at joint meetings so that the views of these groups in Wales can be taken into account. The views of the public at large have been sought through the wide circulation of the document in Wales. Also, the Association of community health councils, which represents England and Wales, has frequently given evidence to the public meetings arranged in England at which officials of the Department have in most cases been present.

Hearing-impaired Children (Teachers)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to increase the funding available to enable local education authorities to second teachers for specialist training in the teaching of hearing-impaired children in 1987-88.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Under the new in-service teacher training arrangements to be introduced from April 1987 £202,000 has been earmarked for special needs training for school teachers in 1987-88. This money will be available for local education authorities to spend on special needs training, including training in the teaching of hearing-impaired children, which has been identified as a national priority. The Welsh Office will provide 70 per cent. of the £202,000 by means of specific grant and the local education authorities will fund the remaining 30 per cent. from their own resources. It will be open to authorities to apply further resources from their locally determined priority categories for this purpose. Expenditure on locally determined in-service teacher training priorities will attract specific grant of 50 per cent. from the Department.

SCOTLAND

Salmon Act

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the terms of reference of the advisory committee to be set up under the Salmon Act.

Mr. John MacKay: The Salmon Advisory Committee will have the following terms of reference:

"To examine and report on those matters relating to the conservation and development of salmon fisheries in Great Britain which are referred to it by Fisheries Ministers."

In the early stages, the committee will be asked to examine:

1. Particular aspects of the availability of information on the status of salmon stocks in Great Britain; and
2. The influences on the level of those stocks, including the effects of predators and of fishing at low water levels.

The Salmon Advisory Committee is a non-statutory body and is not established under the Salmon Act 1986.

Drinking and Driving

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the percentage of police time spent on (a) traffic regulation enforcement and (b) drink-driving regulation enforcement.

Mr. Lang: Table 4 of the 1985 "Report of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary for Scotland" (Cmnd. 9838) indicates that, on average, 8 per cent. of the regular police and 11 per cent. of the police civilian establishments, in addition to traffic wardens, were in that year deployed in the traffic departments of forces. These figures, however, should not be taken as representing the percentages of time spent on the specific activities mentioned by the hon. Member: the information required to make the estimates requested is not available centrally.

Buses

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will obtain details from the Central regional council of the savings which have been made and the additional routes established as a result of bus deregulation.

Mr. Ancram: Information about the financial effects of deregulation is being collected by the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities but is not yet complete. Details of additional routes established are not available centrally.

Drug Addicts (Needles and Syringes)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is yet in a position to make a statement on the implementation of the McCellan committee recommendation to issue needles and syringes to drug addicts in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: No.

Parole

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will authorise the disclosure to prisoners in certain cases of the criteria on which their parole applications have been rejected.

Mr. Rifkind [pursuant to his reply, 28 November 1986, c.410]: The practice of not giving reasons for refusal to grant early release on parole licence is long-standing. As the Parole Board for Scotland indicated in its annual report for 1983, this policy has operated since the parole scheme was introduced and the alternative of operating parole as a right to be claimed with refusal subject to legal challenge. Parole is a privilege, not an entitlement, and I do not propose to change the current practice.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crime Statistics

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offenders currently serving custodial sentences were convicted of offences not involving violence.

Mr. Mellor: The information held centrally about prisoners does not identify all prisoners serving sentences for violent offences as defined in schedule 1 to the Criminal Justice Act 1982. It is estimated that on 30 September 1986 about 23,500 prisoners were serving sentences for offences other than violence against the person, rape, buggery and gross indecency, aggravated burglary and robbery.

Firearms

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of serious offences in which firearms were used between 1965 to 1970, 1970 to 1980 and 1980 to 1985 in the United Kingdom as a whole and in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland, separately; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The available information for England and Wales relates to notifiable offences recorded by the police in which firearms were reported to have been used and is published by police force area in table S3.1(A) of "Criminal statistics, England and Wales, 1985, Supplementary tables Volume 3", and in similar tables in earlier volumes. Area information before 1977 is not available centrally. The available information for Scotland is for the period 1978 to 1983 and was published in Scottish Home and Health Department "Statistical Bulletin" issue 4/1985. Information on offences involving firearms in Northern Ireland is not available.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proposals are before the Council of Ministers about the mutual recognition of firearms licences within the European Economic Community; what position Her Majesty's Government take on such proposals; and if the proposals in question fall to be considered by unanimity or by majority vote;

(2) if the proposals by the Commission on the mutual recognition of firearms licensing would permit nationals of one member state to obtain firearms licences in other states.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are no such proposals at present before the Council of Ministers. I understand that in accordance with its White Paper entitled "Completing the Internal Market" the Commission of the European Communities expects to issue a proposal for a Council directive

"on the approximation of weapons legislation and the abolition of controls on weapons at internal Community Frontiers" by the end of this year.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the basic features of firearms licensing in the various European Economic Community nations, showing the main features which are different from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No such information is currently held.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer in the Official Report, 18 November, column 90, how many police national computer inquiries were made by the Metropolitan police over the last two months; and how many were made in each of the nine categories mentioned in his previous answer.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am informed by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the latest figures available are for August 1986, when the total number of accesses (inquiries plus update transactions) to the police national computer by his force was 3,980. More recent information is not readily available because a sample is taken periodically.

All the inquiries fall into the nine categories listed in my reply to the hon. Member of 18 November and individual accesses can be traced in the event of a subsequent query. No statistics are kept of the number of accesses in particular categories.

Drinking and Driving

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking during the current year to deter the drinking driver and to reduce his risk of involvement in alcohol-related road traffic accidents.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As this year's Christmas drinking and driving publicity campaign points out, people who drink and drive are a menace to society. The process of educating those who may be tempted to drink and drive about the dangers to which they expose themselves and others is a continuous one in which both the Government and society at large have parts to play. I am satisfied that the police have the necessary powers for the enforcement of the law in relation to drunken driving, and that they appreciate the importance of effective enforcement in this area.

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the percentage of police time spent on (a) traffic regulation enforcement and (b) drink-driving regulation enforcement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The allocation of manpower resources is a matter for individual chief officers of police. The information requested is not available centrally.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the approved staffing levels in W division of the Metropolitan police force; and what was the existing number of police officers on 1 November in this division.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested for the three divisions which comprised the former W district is set out in the table:

Division	Uniformed officers (sergeants and above) and all CID officers		Uniformed police constables only[1]
	Total establishment	Actual strength	Target strength	Actual strength
Tooting	71	65	197	191
Battersea	54	70	188	198
Wandsworth	44	55	173	184
Total	169	190	558	573

[1] The system of fixing establishments for uniformed constables on divisions is no longer used. Instead, the Metropolitan police have developed a manpower allocation formula which ensures that each area gets an equitable share of the total uniformed constable manpower available. Responsibility for allocating area manpower between divisions rests with each area deputy assistant commissioner, who determines a "target strength" for each division.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the total numbers of vehicles involved and the total cost of hiring of vehicles by the Metropolitan police in 1984, 1985 and 1986 to date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The following information has been provided by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

Hired vehicles

	Number of vehicles	Cost £ million
1984-85	[1]2,425	[2]1·7
1985-86	5,458	0·7
1986-87 (to date)	3,278	0·7

[1]Does not include vehicles hired in connection with the miners' dispute, and figures for April to June 1984 are not readily available for some categories of vehicles.

[2]Includes vehicles hired in connection with the miners' dispute a proportion of the cost being recovered from other forces.

Magistrates' Courts (Access)

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department has taken to provide access to magistrates' courts for the disabled or blind.

Mr. Mellor: Home Office guidance on the design of new magistrates' courts includes advice on access for disabled people. Local authorities, which in consultation with magistrates' courts committees are responsible for magistrates' courts accommodation, also have to comply with the appropriate building regulations; and it is a matter for them to decide to what extent they are able to make modifications to existing courthouses.

Police (Graduates)

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many graduates were recruited to the police service in England and Wales in each of the last five years; and what proportion of total police manpower they form.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The number of graduates recruited by police forces in England and Wales, including the Metropolitan police was:

		Percentage of total recruits in that year
1981	489	6·6
1982	626	9·5
1983	748	13·7
1984	563	12·1
1985	605	11·4

The number of graduates serving on 31 August 1986 was 5,482—4·5 per cent. of the total police strength.

Stop and Search

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the stop-and-search figures and subsequent arrests and charging for September 1983, September 1984, September 1985 and September 1986 for the Highway Vale, Holloway, Upper street, City road and King's Cross areas of Islington, north division of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I shall reply as soon as possible.

School Crossings

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the hours of overtime worked in each Metropolitan police district on school crossing patrol work.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the total number of school crossing patrols in the Metropolitan police for January 1983, January 1984, January 1985 and the latest figure available; and what is the comparative figure for the requests from schools for school crossing patrols.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The number of school crossing patrols on these dates was as follows:

	Number
31 January 1983	1,291
31 January 1984	1,254
31 January 1985	1,197
30 November 1986	1,128

Records of the requests made by schools for crossing patrols are not kept centrally.

I understand from the Commissioner that the decrease in the number of school crossing patrols is largely attributable to problems with recruitment and retention.

News International Plant, Wapping

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many properties have been used, and at what rent, for surveillance work for the police at the News International plant at Wapping during the currency of the present dispute.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commissioner informs me that no properties are currently being used by the police for this purpose. Earlier in the dispute cameras were used in two premises adjacent to the News International plant at Wapping to assist in policing demonstrations there. No rent was charged for the use of the premises.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost of helicopter surveillance of the picket line of the News International plant at Wapping.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that it is not possible to provide precise information on the cost of the specific task, as surveillance has been carried out only once in the course of a flight which included a number of different tasks.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the total additional cost of the police presence (i) outside Wapping works and (ii) on The Highway, E1, away from the News International plant;

(2) what additional hours of overtime have been worked by police officers at the Wapping plant of News International since the dispute started.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Mental Health Review Tribunals

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what practice he follows in commenting on cases of restricted patients, where a mental health review tribunal is imminent.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Other than in exceptional circumstances, it is my right hon. Friend's practice, following discussions with the Council on Tribunals, not to make any substantive comment during the four weeks preceding the hearing. This is to avoid any risk of prejudicing, or of appearing to prejudice, the hearing. We shall continue to keep this policy under review, in consultation with the council as appropriate.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Energy Conservation

Mr. Rathbone asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will report on his achievements in encouraging energy conservation in the Province.

Mr. Viggers: Northern Ireland is playing its full part in Energy Efficiency Year 1986 through intensive advertising campaigns, seminars, exhibitions, domestic competitions, presentations to school children and energy saving demonstrations for both the domestic and industrial consumer. Response to the campaign has been very encouraging. The Department of Economic Development has issued some 4,000 domestic, industrial and schools information packs. In the industrial sector, interest in the energy conservation scheme remains high with annual savings estimated at £3·6 million. Grant approvals under the homes insulation scheme indicate a 14 per cent. increase in the first three quarters of 1986 compared to the same period last year. Six voluntary insulation projects have insulated and/or draught proofed 27,000 houses. A special primary schools presentation has been seen by almost 20,000 children.

EMPLOYMENT

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

90. Mr. Baldry asked the Paymaster General when he expects all secondary schools to be able to offer technical and vocational education initiative courses.

Mr. Trippier: The phasing arrangements for the extension of TVEI offer a range of possibilities for the timing of entry of secondary schools into the initiative, but we expect all schools which enter the initiative to have done so by autumn 1992 at the latest.

Mr. O'Brien asked the Paymaster General if resources will be made available for all schools to carry out technical and vocational education initiative courses from September 1987.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 1 December 1986, c. 424]: No. Resources are available to allow for a phased entry of schools to the initiative over a period of up to five years from autumn 1987. Individual education authorities will be able to enter the extension only after they have had a minimum of three years' experience operating a TVEI pilot project.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Paymaster General (1) how many compliance cost assessments have been submitted by other Government Departments to his Department;

(2) if it is his intention to publish the compliance cost assessments submitted by other Government Departments by his Department; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will state the terms of reference and composition of the enterprise and deregulation unit of his Department.

Mr. Trippier: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Manpower Services Commission

Mr. Speller asked the Paymaster General if he will seek power to allow rural Manpower Services Commission agencies to receive a higher operating cost allowance than urban based agencies.

Mr. Lee: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Speller asked the Paymaster General if he will seek powers to allow the Manpower Services Commission wage structure to move automatically in line with the appropriate trade unions settlement.

Mr. Lee: No. On the assumption that my hon. Friend is concerned with the community programme, participants already receive the local agreed hourly rate for the job. The MSC reimburses sponsors and agents for wages up to an average of £67 per week per participant.

Mr. Speller asked the Paymaster General if he will seek power to allow Manpower Services Commission assets acquired for any particular project to be written off over the effective life of the asset rather than the life of the project.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is not necessary for me to seek the power suggested, as the Manpower Services Commission presently operates a policy of writing off assets it has acquired over their estimated effective life.

For assets purchased with MSC funds for use on a project, the Manpower Services Commission satisfies itself as to the propriety of the accounting policies adopted by the project organisers. Such policies can include writing off an asset over its effective life.

Mr. Speller asked the Paymaster General if he will seek powers to separate Manpower Services Commission funding between training costs and those of operating and wages.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is not necessary for me to seek the powers suggested as the Manpower Services Commission presently operates on this basis. Training programme costs are identified separately from the cost of their administration.

Restart Scheme

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General how many people have left the employment register through the restart programme in (a) Burnley, (b) Pendle and (c) Hyndburn travel-to-work areas.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: On the basis that the hon. Member is referring to the unemployment benefit count, it is impossible to estimate what proportion of those long-term unemployed people who have ceased to claim benefit in recent months have done so because of the restart programme. People are constantly ceasing to claim benefit because they have returned to work, started work, started training or for a variety of other reasons.

Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General how many long term unemployed people there were in the Huddersfield travel-to-work area before the introduction of the restart scheme; and how many have now been interviewed as part of the restart scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 1 December 1986, c. 421]: There were 4,107 long term unemployed people in the Huddersfield travel-to-work area in July 1986. Figures for those interviewed under the restart scheme for people who have been unemployed for 12 months or more since its introduction nationally in July 1986 are not available for that precise area. However, in the area covered by the Huddersfield restart team—which is similar to the travel-to-work area—619 such people have since been interviewed.

Huddersfield is also one of the pilot areas where we tested the restart scheme prior to its national introduction. Between 6 January 1986 and 11 July, 3,244 people in the area who had been unemployed for 12 months or more were interviewed and since then, as part of this continuing programme of experiments with this new approach to help long term unemployed people, a further 1,333 people who have been unemployed for six months or more have been interviewed.

Passive Smoking

Mr. Foulkes asked the Paymaster General whether the Health and Safety Executive has reviewed the existing data linking passive smoking with ischaemic heart disease and angina; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The independent scientific committee on smoking and health has examined a comprehensive review of the health effects of passive smoking and is due to report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services next year. While the Health and Safety Executive has received a certain amount of data, it does not propose to make a separate appraisal of the evidence.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Paymaster General (1) if the Health and Safety Executive proposes to issue a warning about the possible links between passive smoking and cancer other than lung cancer, in addition to the reference to lung cancer in its circular "The Health and Safety at Work Etc. Act 1974, Application to Passive Smoking at Work";

(2) on what date the Health and Safety Executive's circular "The Health and Safety at Work Etc. Act 1974, Application to Passive Smoking at Work" was last revised; and when it will next be reviewed.

Mr. Trippier: The Health and Safety Executive issued this circular to factory inspectors in June 1979. It will be reviewed in the light of the findings of the independent scientific committee on smoking and health which is due to report on passive smoking to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services.

Equity (YTS)

Sir John Farr asked the Paymaster General what co-operation his Department has received from the actors' trade union, Equity, in the operation of the YTS.

Mr. Trippier: No problems regarding co-operation as far as Equity is concerned have come to my attention. If my hon. Friend knows of any specific instances, I should be pleased to investigate.

Tooting

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Paymaster General what has been the number of long-term unemployed claimants living in the Tooting constituency who have been asked to take part in the new Manpower Services Commission's funded job training programme.

Mr. Trippier: The new job training scheme has been introduced on a pilot basis in the nine areas where the restart programme for the six-month unemployed is also being piloted. It is not currently available in Tooting.

Benefits (Work Test)

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General how many people have been refused benefit in the availability for work test pilot areas; how many have had their benefit restored by the independent adjudicators; and if he will give the figures for each of the pilot areas concerned.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: During the experiment a total of 549 claimants were disallowed benefit by the independent adjudication authorities on grounds of availability. A total of 27 subsequently had their claims allowed following appeal, with a further 20 appeals still under consideration. The figures for each experimental office are as follows:

Skillcentres

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General how many female instructors were engaged in skillcentres in each year from 1979 to 1986, inclusive (a) in the Greater London area and (b) in the Deptford skillcentre.

Mr. Trippier: There are presently eight female instructors employed in skillcentres in the Greater London area, and of these three are employed at Deptford skillcentre. Details for the years 1979 to 1985 are shown in the table.

	Greater London Total	Deptford Skillcentre

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General if he will provide a table in the Official Report showing the numbers of training places available in each skillcentre in the Greater London area and the number of trainees undergoing courses in each skillcentre for each year from 1979 to 1986.

Mr. Trippier: Statistics on skillcentre training volumes are kept in terms of training weeks provided rather than places available. Details for each skillcentre in the Greater London area, from 1984-85 to the latest available date are contained in the table. I regret that comparable figures are not available before that date.

[1] Estimate.

Methylene Chloride

Mr. Michie asked the Paymaster General (1) what action the Health and Safety Executive took following the February 1986 meeting of the Advisory Committee on Toxic Substances to obtain the necessary data for an Advisory Committee on Toxic Substances review of the present occupational exposure limit for methylene chloride;

(2) whether the Health and Safety Executive has obtained the necessary data for the Advisory Committee on Toxic Substances to carry out a full review of the present occupational exposure limit for methylene chloride;

(3) when the Advisory Committee on Toxic Substances review of the occupational exposure limit for methylene chloride will be completed.

Mr. Trippier: At the February 1986 meeting the Advisory Committee on Toxic Substances (ACTS) asked the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) to obtain the necessary data for a review of the occupational exposure limit (OEL) for methylene chloride. The HSE has obtained relevant data on its toxicity. These are data published since the initial review by ACTS in May 1985 when it recommended the present OEL. These new data are now being assessed and a report will be made to the next meeting of ACTS. It will be open to the committee to consider the OEL at that time.

In order to complete its full review ACTS also requires details and comprehensive information on the costs and practicability of control measures. The HSE has begun this assessment and plans to make it available to ACTS for its meeting next November.

Mrs. M. Curry

Mr. Steen asked the Paymaster General when he hopes to pay Mrs. M. Curry, the proprietor of Pot Pourri, 23 Fore street, Salcombe, Devon, the first 13-week contribution of £195 under the new workers scheme, due on 10 October for the teenager she has employed since 10 July; why it took nearly two months for her to receive notification that the teenager had been accepted on to the scheme; and if he will explain the delay in payment.

Mr. Lee: I am investigating this matter urgently and will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Work Test

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General (1) what is his estimate of the numbers who will be asked to complete form UB671 at York A and York B unemployment benefit offices;

(2) when he expects to introduce UB671 availability for work testing in York A and York B offices;

(3) what arrangements he proposes for independent advice for those filling in UB671; and if, without loss of benefit, claimants may fill in the form outside the unemployment benefit office.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The improved procedures for applying the long-established legal rules on entitlement to benefit were introduced in York A and B unemployment benefit offices on 24 November 1986. All new claimants will be required to complete form UB671, but I cannot forecast how many this will be in a given period.

It is not our normal practice to suggest to claimants that they seek independent advice about their entitlement to benefit, and I have no plans to change this policy. Claim forms are normally completed at the benefit office, but claimants may take form UB671 away with them. There is no loss of benefit provided the form is returned within three days and the answers to the questions demonstrate that the claimant is available for work.

The form is clear and straightforward, and I find it difficult to see why independent advice should be needed in the usual case to answer the simple questions. Any advice should stress that the answers should be truthful and give an accurate description of the claimant's circumstances. I disapprove of some published advice purporting to give standard answers to ensure the receipt of benefit. The social security system has always required people to demonstrate their entitlement to benefit and unemployed claimants must show that they are genuinely available for work.

Community Transport Schemes

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Paymaster General what problems his Department has found with using Manpower Services Commission placements in community transport schemes.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 27 November 1986, c. 325]: Several community transport schemes operate successfully under the community programme. Some local difficulties have occurred and Manpower Services Commission officials are ready to help sponsors to try and resolve these wherever this is possible within the programme rules.

Printing Industry, London

Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General what information he has about the extent of skill shortages in the London printing industry; and what steps are being taken to remedy them.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 1 December 1986, c. 42]: The Government are aware of the demand in the general printing industry in London for those with skills in keyboarding, litho machine printing and planner platemaking, and are helping to meet this demand through the Manpower Services Commission's support for relevant adult training courses in the London area. In addition, considerable support is being given under two-year YTS for schemes which include an element of printing skills. Total support for both adult and youth training in the London area for courses and schemes offering printing skill is over £500,000 in this financial year alone.

ENVIRONMENT

Football Matches (Visiting Supporters)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the banning of visiting supporters at home grounds where Football League matches are held.

Mr. Tracey: I am encouraging football authorities and clubs to work closely with the police in taking every reasonable step to deter trouble-makers from travelling to or entering football grounds. Membership schemes can play an important part in this process.

We have welcomed Luton Town football club's initiative as an interesting and carefully planned experiment tailored to the particular needs of that club from which other clubs may learn valuable lessons when addressing their own problems. I am discussing with the football authorities a range of measures, including effective membership schemes, which will retain and encourage genuine support by excluding troublemakers.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions have been held with NIREX on the alternative methods to shallow trench disposal of radioactive waste.

Mr. Waldegrave: During the study of best practicable environmental options for the management of low and intermediate level radioactive wastes, the report of which was published in March this year, the Government and NIREX discussed alternative methods to near-surface disposal for low level wastes. The study concluded inter alia that near-surface disposal was the best practicable environmental option for most low level wastes. It therefore remains the Government's policy that new near-surface facilities for such wastes should be developed as soon as possible. Other methods of radioactive waste management, which were considered in the study, are discussed with NIREX as necessary.

Housing (Compulsory Purchase)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many tenanted houses were compulsorily purchased during the last 12 months for which figures are available; and how many of these were purchased at site value being classified as unfit.

Mr. Tracey: Information about houses purchased is not available. However, there were 2,970 houses, of which 2,680 were unfit, in compulsory purchase orders confirmed in England from October 1985 to September 1986 under the provisions of Part IX of the 1985 Housing Act. The numbers of tenanted houses are not available. All unfit houses are purchased at site value, but there may be compensatory payments to the occupier whether owner or tenant.

Football Grounds (Safety)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will allocate resources for the improvement of facilities and safety at football grounds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: This issue was considered by the working group set up by my right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister, in May 1985, following the decision to extend designation under the Safety of Sports Grounds Act 1975 to Football League grounds in Division 3 and 4. The Group, which I later chaired, included representatives from the Football Association, the Football League, the Football Trust and the Football Grounds Improvement Trust.

At its last meeting on 18 February, the group concluded that the clubs, together with FGIT, would be able to fund the cost of the necessary safety work over a five-year period without assistance from public funds. The Football Trust has made funds available to help meet the cost of safety improvements at those non-League grounds that have since also been designated under the Act.

The Sports Council has allocated £480,000 to assist the Football Association meet its share of the cost of improvement work at Wembley stadium. The council's contribution is in recognition of Wembley's role as the national stadium for association football.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all research projects commissioned or completed during the last three years into the development of environmentally sound technologies, products and substitutes to prevent or reduce hazardous wastes and pollutants in waste water.

Mr. Waldegrave: Within the last three years the following research contracts have been commissioned by the land wastes division of my Department either to reduce the environmental hazards of difficult wastes or to reduce pollutants in waste water.

—Stablisation of organic wastes in clay/cement mixes using quarternary ammonium compounds.
—Microbiological systems for the treatment or removal of heavy metals and persistent organic materials.
—Treatment of landfill leachate bilogically with anaerobic pre-treatment.
—Treatment of leachate by spray irrigation onto woodland.
—Treatment of ammonia-rich landfill leachate.
— Treatment of low-strength leachate aerobically from landfills in areas of high rainfall.
—Determination of performance characteristics of various types of solidification processes for toxic wastes.

Of these, the last two have been completed.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the national grid references for all the chemical waste dump sites used on a regular or irregular basis around the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall write to the hon. Member for clarification of the information he has requested.

Leicester (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the recent visit to Leicester by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Surbiton (Mr. Tracey).

Mr. Tracey: I shall answer this question shortly.

Imported Building Materials

Mr. Rooker: asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by value the major 25 imported building materials in 1985, stating the import as a percentage of the United Kingdom market and show how this compares by value and import penetration with the position five years ago.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 25 November 1986, c. 234]: The products and groups of products given in the table include only those major building materials and components for which there is a reasonable correspondence between the classification of products used within the United Kingdom and that used for imports and exports.

TRANSPORT

Okehampton Bypass

Sir Peter Mills asked the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the environmental implication for the A30 of the southern route of the Okehampton bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A careful assessment was made by the Department's professional landscape architects of the impact of the southern route on the environment before it was chosen. This followed public consultation in which the southern route was favoured by the district and county councils, and by the public, in preference to a northern route, which would have caused serious environmental damage, including a 90 ft high viaduct at Knowle.

The independent landscape advisory committee made several visits to Okehampton to consider possible routes. Its unwavering advice was that in landscape terms the southern route was the best.

The Department made great efforts in the selection of the route and design of the road to ensure that it would fit well into the landscape. It follows the natural contours of the land, much of it running close to the existing railway. In contrast to proposed northern routes, the chosen southern route will not be visible from the heights of Dartmoor to the south of Okehampton. There can be no doubt that the chosen route is, in environmental terms, the best one available for this vital bypass.

The new A30 will bring considerable improvement to the environment of Okehampton by removing traffic from the town centre. It will also remove nearly four miles of trunk road from the national park to the east.

Pedestrian Crossings

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what are the criteria his Department uses when deciding where pedestrian crossings should be located;

(2) what consideration his Department gives when deciding where pedestrian crossings should be located to (a) the proximity of children's playgrounds or schools, and (b) the proximity of sheltered accommodation for elderly or handicapped people; and what consideration his Department gives when deciding how much time is made available for pedestrians to cross the road at light-controlled pedestrian crossings to the numbers of elderly or handicapped people likely to use a crossing.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's advice to highway authorities on the siting of pedestrian crossings is contained in Departmental Advice Note TA10/80 "Design Considerations for Pelican and Zebra Crossings", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. The advice is that justification for providing a crossing should normally be based on the number of pedestrians and vehicles at the site; where these numerical criteria are not met pedestrian crossings may still be provided where there is a special need, for example, near schools and homes for elderly people.

Current guidance on the time to be provided for pedestrians at "Pelican" light-controlled pedestrian crossings is given in Departmental Standard TD4/79 "Pelican Crossings: Pelican Crossing Operation", a copy of which is also available in the Library of the House. The recommended timings are related to road width and do not include specific reference to elderly or people with disabilities. Revised advice is now in preparation and it is intended that this will recommend provision of additional time in special circumstances, such as those the hon. Member has in mind.

Local highway authorities have discretion to vary this advice to suit local circumstances.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the chairman of London Regional Transport about the contracting out of London Regional Transport services and the implications for the numbers of staff employed by London Regional Transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend and I discuss various aspects of the performance of London Regional Transport with the chairman from time to time. London Regional Transport has a general duty under the London Regional Transport Act 1984 to invite competitive tenders for such activities as it may determine to be appropriate. The effect competitive tendering may have on the number of staff employed by LRT will depend upon the cost effectiveness and efficiency of its businesses and its ability to quote for work at competitive prices.

British Airways

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the European Commission concerning the purchase of shares in British Airways by European Economic Community nationals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have informed the Commission of my proposals, and will make a statement in due course.

Helicopter Rescue Service, Stornoway

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the outcome of the United Kingdom Search and Rescue Services Committee's discussions on 1 December concerning the possibility of locating a helicopter rescue service at Stornoway, Isle of Lewis.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend is in receipt of the report of the helicopter coverage working group which was endorsed by its parent body, the United Kingdom Search and Rescue Committee on 1 December, which he is considering urgently.

Greater Manchester PTA

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Minister of State's meeting with representatives of the Greater Manchester passenger transport authority.

Mr. David Mitchell: I met representatives of the Greater Manchester passenger transport authority on 24 November. They explained to me the reasons why they considered it necessary to redetermine the expenditure level for 1987-88, and answered a number of questions on their policies. I undertook to consider their representations and arguments, and to ensure they would be fully taken into account in my right hon. Friend's decision on the authority's application.

London Docklands Railway

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement concerning the capital funding of the works listed in the London Docklands Light Railway (Beckton) Bill.

Mr. David Mitchell: We have been given an assurance by the London Docklands Development Corporation that in its view the project could go ahead with no expectation of Government contribution to London Regional Transport's capital or running costs. We shall want to see, before the Bill proceeds to Second Reading, the specific arrangements which the LDDC can make to secure that there would be no significant risk that any of the costs would fall as a burden on LRT.

Level Crossing, Criccieth

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the Criccieth area of Gwynedd concerning the dangers arising from the automatic crossing installed on the railway line at Y Maes, Criccieth; what consultations he has had with British Rail on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received a number of letters and a petition from Criccieth town council about this automatic open crossing locally monitored, complaining that the equipment which warns of an approaching train is not reliable and asking for barriers to be provided. The AOCL meets the Department's published requirements and I have no power to require or influence British Rail to provide a different form of protection. I have therefore had no consultations with British Rail since the crossing was modernised, although it is aware of the representations which have been made. The crossing has been inspected by an inspecting officer of railways, who is satisfied that it conforms with the statutory order which authorised its conversion. In view of the complaints which have been made about unreliability, British Rail have fitted devices to monitor the performance of the equipment. no malfunction has been reported to date.

Seafarers (Statistics)

Sir Edward du Cann asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will publish in the Official Report the latest available figures for each of the main categories of British merchant seafarers as set out in table 1.4 of volume 2 of the "Statement on Defence Estimates 1986" (Cmnd. 9763-II).

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand that at 5 November last the figures for each of the main categories were:

	Number
Officers	11,637	(15,023)
Ratings	15,225	(18,595)
Miscellaneous and seasonal	719	(404)
Cadets	668	(1,016)

The figures in brackets are those shown for 1985 in defence Estimates 1986.

East London Road Assessment Study

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport when the east London road assessment study will be published; and what period there will be for consultation on its contents before ministerial decision.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I hope to publish the assessment studies soon. Local authorities and the public will have ample opportunity to comment.

Merchant Fleet (Defence Requirements)

Sir Edward du Cann asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to establish a Government-owned reserve fleet of merchant vessels for defence purposes along the lines of that maintained by the Government of the United States of America.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to establish a Government-owned reserve fleet of merchant vessels.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Beef

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about the amount of home-grown beef that is consumed by the fast food restaurant industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department does not collect information on the quantity of home grown beef consumed by the fast food restaurant industry and I am not aware of any precise information from trade sources. There is no doubt, however, that the fast food sector is growing and offers an important outlet for British beef.

Dame Jill Knight asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest cost of storing the beef surplus.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on Tuesday 25 November at column 182, to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart).

Hormone Growth Promoters

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the Government intend to proceed with their case in the European Court challenging European Communities directive 85/649 prohibiting the use in livestock farming of certain substances having a hormonal action.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Yes. The Government's application to the European Court of Justice to annul directive 85/649/EEC will continue to be pursued.

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations he had with the animal health industry between the adoption of European Communities directive 85/649 and his announcement on 18 August that he intended to lay regulations banning the use of animal growth-promoting hormones from 1 December.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Close contact with the product licence holders of products containing hormone growth promoters has been maintained over a long period on this contentious issue.

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria he uses in assessing scientific evidence on what constitutes a potential danger to consumers; how these criteria were operated in respect of the Medicines (Hormone Growth Promoters) (Prohibition of Use) Regulations 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The criteria to be used by Agriculture and Health Ministers in licensing medicinal products are laid down in the Medicines Act 1968. They require Agriculture and Health Ministers to be satisfied as to the safety, quality and efficacy of any product before it is licensed. We have repeatedly argued in Brussels that the information available on safety, including the safety of consumers, fully justified licensing products containing the five hormone growth promoters. As my hon. Friend knows, our views did not prevail. The regulations which have now been made to implement the ban on these substances have been made under the European Communities Act and not the Medicines Act.

Fishing Boats (Decommissioning Grants)

Mr. Steen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what checks are made by his Department to ensure that fishing boats which are the subject of a decommissioning grant paid by his Department remain decommissioned and are not subsequently used following the transfer of a licence from another vessel to the decommissioned vessel; if any changes to the procedures are being considered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Monetary Coefficients (Food Sales)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is the purpose of applying monetary coefficients to sales of food from European Economic Community stockpiles; and if he will make a statement explaining the manner in which these coefficients are calculated and applied;

(2) what are the current levels of monetary coefficients applied in respect of sales of beef under regulation 2670/86 and sales of butter under regulation 765/86, expressed in terms of pence per pound.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Intervention Stores

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish in the Official Report the current contents of each European Economic Community intervention foodstore in Britain; and if he will indicate the total annual cost to the taxpayer of the operation of such foodstores.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 27 November 1986, c. 340]: As at 30 September 1986 the stocks held at each location were:

Intervention butter stores as at 30 September 1986

NATIONAL FINANCE

Monetary Targets

Mr. Rogers asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the Government's most recent monetary targets.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Monetary targets for 1986-87 remain as set out in the 1986 medium term financial strategy.

Industry (Borrowing)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to seek to reduce the current cost of borrowing to industry.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Short-term interest rates will be held at whatever level is necessary to maintain monetary conditions that continue to place steady downward pressure on inflation, and no higher.

Investment Depreciation

Sir Edward du Cann asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the effect on revenue which would follow from replacing the present 25 per cent. reducing balance method of depreciating investment for tax purposes by a 25 per cent. straight line system.

Mr. Lawson: I shall let my right hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Budget Council

Mr. Rowe asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Budget Council.

Mr. Brooke: The Budget Council met in Brussels on 26-27 November to consider the European Parliament's amendments and draft modifications to the first reading budget for 1987 established by the Council in September. I chaired the meeting, and my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary represented the United Kingdom.

The Council established by unanimity a second reading budget within the budget discipline limits.

The Council's proposals provide for total expenditure of 37·4 billion ecu in commitment appropriations (£23·5 billion at the budget exchange rate of 1·5939 ecu to the £) and 36·2 billion ecu (£22·7 billion) in payment appropriations. The proposals leave 729 mecu (£457 million) of unused resources within the 1·4 per cent. VAT ceiling.

The Council's proposals continue to provide for keeping the growth of agricultural market support expenditure within the budget discipline limit, though the Commission has again warned that on present policies a substantial overrun is likely. In response to wide-ranging modifications proposed by the European Parliament, the Council opened a new budget line for measures resulting from the work now under way in the Community on surplus production and agricultural stocks.

The growth of non-obligatory expenditure between 1986 and 1987 implied by the Council's proposals is 757 mecu (£475 million or 8·09 per cent.) for commitment appropriations and 617 mecu (£387 million or 7·37 per cent.) for payment appropriations. These increases are within the maximum rate of increase for 1987, as laid down in the Treaty, of 8·1 per cent. Payment appropriations are 62 mecu (£39 million) below the maximum rate.

The Council's proposals continue to make provision of 1,633 mecu (some £1,024 million) for the United Kingdom's VAT abatement in respect of 1986.

The Council's proposals for the 1987 budget were influenced by the expectation that a substantial deficit would have to be carried forward from the current year: the Commission is projecting a shortfall of revenue this year, particularly customs duties, of some 1·3 billion ecu (£0·8 billion), which is likely to be offset only in part by shortfalls in expenditure. The Commission re-submitted to the Council its earlier proposal for a 1986 amending budget to budgetise 776 million ecu of the expected deficit.

There was, however, no qualified majority in the Council for this, and the Council noted instead that, in accordance with the Community's financial regulation, the Commission would propose a supplementary and amending budget next year, when firm figures are available, to take account of the 1986 deficit.

The European Parliament is due to consider the Council's second reading budget for 1987 in the week beginning 8 December.

Finance Act 1975

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer why the certification of policies known as senior plan and senior saver policies as qualifying policies for the purposes of schedule 2 Part 1 of the Finance Act 1975 has been withdrawn.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986, c. 180]: The certification of standard forms of the senior plan and senior saver policies as qualifying policies has not been withdrawn by the Inland Revenue. The Revenue takes the view that, in the terms of the contracts, the senior plan and senior saver policies actually issued neither conform to the standard form previously certified nor satisfy the statutory conditions for qualifying policies set out in the Taxes Act.

DEFENCE

Army Cadet Force (Northumbria)

Mr. Garrett asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the amount of grant given to the Northumbria Army cadet force for the years 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Freeman: The Northumbria Army cadet force is one of three army cadet forces administered by the North of England Territorial, Auxiliary and Volunteer Reserve Association, whose responsibility it is to allocate to them, on an individual basis, grants received from the Ministry of Defence. The grants are to cover certain administrative and travelling expenses and running costs relating to accommodation. The latest figures are for the financial years 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87, and are shown in the following table:

Grants made by the North of England territorial army and volunteer reserve association to the Northumbria army cadet force

	1984-85 £	1985-86 £	1986-87 £
Administration and Miscellaneous Expenses	7,276	7,410	7,924
Heating, Lighting, Cleaning and other charges	9,056	9,164	9,675
Travel	13,160	12,992	13,468
TOTALS	29,492	29,566	31,067

British Warships (South Korea)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the visit of HMS Beaver and HMS Fort Grange to Pusan, South Korea.

Mr. Stanley: HMS Beaver, accompanied by the Royal Fleet Auxiliaries Olmeda and Fort Grange, undertook a goodwill visit to Pusan between 10–14 July 1986. The ships were warmly received by the Government, the armed forces and people of the Republic of Korea.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many British warships have visited South Korea in each of the past five years.

Mr. Stanley: The number of British warships to have visited ports in the Republic of Korea during each of the past five years is:

1982 — 2
1983 — None
1984 — 1 and 2 Royal Fleet Auxiliaries
1985 — 2
1986 — 3 and 2 Royal Fleet Auxiliaries

War Casualties

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy in relation to informing (a) relatives and (b) the House of Commons about fatalities in times of war known by the Ministry of Defence to be the result of action by Her Majesty's forces.

Mr. Freeman: I shall reply shortly.

3rd Battalion Royal Green Jackets

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied with the standard of discipline in the 3rd Battalion Green Jackets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I have called for a report on the matter, and I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received any complaints from the people of Celle concerning the 3rd Battalion Royal Green Jackets.

Mr. Freeman: No. In fact the Oberstadtdirektor of Celle has recently spoken favourably of the Royal Green Jackets.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many private soldiers have been court-martialled for offences involving brutality in the 3rd Battalion Royal Green Jackets during the last five years.

Mr. Freeman: None has been convicted by court-martial for bullying, but 10 riflemen have been convicted by court-martial of assault involving other soldiers as follows:

	Number
1982	1
1983	Nil
1984	6
1985	1
1986	2

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many non-commissioned officers have been court-martialled for offences involving brutality in the 3rd Battalion Royal Green Jackets during the last five years.

Mr. Freeman: None has been convicted by court-martial for bullying or for assault.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many men serving with the 3rd Battalion Royal Green Jackets have gone absent without leave in the current year.

Mr. Freeman: In 1986, 28 soldiers have gone absent without leave, of whom nine are still absent. Of the 19 who have returned nine were absent for 24 hours or less. All others were absent for less than one month.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received any complaints of brutality in connection with the 3rd Battalion Royal Green Jackets.

Mr. Freeman: No. Any such complaints made through proper channels would be thoroughly investigated.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to prevent harsh initiation ceremonies in the 3rd Battalion Royal Green Jackets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: In February 1986 a case of an initiation ceremony came to light, which merited investigation. Following this, disciplinary action was taken against four soldiers of the battalion, and the unit was warned regarding the holding of such ceremonies.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many service men of 3rd Battalion Royal Green Jackets have received medical treatment following acts of brutality over the last five years.

Mr. Freeman: The treatment registers now available cover only the last four years. In total, 14 cases are recorded of treatment for injuries sustained in fights/assaults involving other service men. The assailants are not identified and they need not have been members of the battalion.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the extent to which the United Kingdom and its North Atlantic Treaty Organisation allies possess the ability to verify independently and adequately any future reduction by the Warsaw pact of (i) its European-based SS-20 missiles, (ii) short-range nuclear missiles and (iii) medium-range nuclear missiles.

Mr. Stanley: The INF negotiations on reductions of United States and Soviet intermediate-range nuclear missiles are between the United States and Soviet Union, who would therefore be responsible for monitoring compliance with provisions of any INF agreement. Verification will be a key issue since almost all the Soviet systems in question are highly mobile and their launchers are assumed to have a reload capability. Detailed verification provisions have already been tabled by the United States at Geneva.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is Her Majesty's Government's policy with regard to the October 1983 resolution 147 on short-range nuclear weapons in Europe made by the special committee on nuclear weapons in Europe;

(2) what is Her Majesty's Government's policy with regard to the November 1982 resolution 134 made by the special committee on nuclear weapons in Europe.

Mr. Renton: I have been asked to reply.

Our policy on INF arms control is clear. We welcomed the progress made at Reykjavik which was consistent with long-standing Alliance insistence on an agreement on a global basis. A zero-zero solution in Europe must include tight limits on SS20s in Soviet Asia, and on Soviet shorter range INF. As in other areas of arms control, effective verification will be essential.

Medical Students

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Defence what scheme is currently in operation whereby medical students can study for their degree courses whilst at the same time undertaking a short service commission; what is the cost to public funds of assisting a typical student; and what is the minimum period of service required of service men and women who take advantage of such schemes.

Mr. Freeman: All three services currently offer cadetships to medical students. The cadetship leads to a short service commission of six years on the active list and a further two years on the reserve. The total cost to public funds of assisting a typical student in his cadetship is in the region of £17,000 after repayment of various grants and external earnings in the pre-registration year.

As with all types of SSC, the individual also receives a gratuity paid at the end of his active service, based on the number of years of active service rendered.

Jaguar Aircraft

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Jaguar aircraft which crashed on 27 November was engaged in low flying manoeuvres at the time it crashed.

Mr. Freeman: The Jaguar which crashed on 27 November had been authorised to fly at low level. The cause of the accident is still under investigation and it would be inappropriate for me to comment further at this stage.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many Jaguar aircraft have been involved in crashes in the United Kingdom over the last five years.

Mr. Freeman: Since December 1981, nine RAF Jaguar aircraft have been involved in eight crashes in and around the United Kingdom.

Low Flying Procedures (Spadeadam)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will now undertake an immediate review of low flying procedures in and around Spadeadam.

Mr. Freeman: Safety regulations for military flying over all designated range areas and more generally are a matter to which I attach great importance and are kept under close and continual review.

Royal Fleet Auxiliary

Sir Edward du Cann asked the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the capital and annual operating costs of increasing the size of the Royal Fleet Auxiliary to the point where it would have the capacity to cope with a future conflict on the scale of the Falklands campaign without calling on the services of the Merchant Navy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: No such estimate has been made. The major role of the Royal Fleet Auxiliary is to provide operational support for Her Majesty's ships and its current size is tailored to meet the expected number and dispositions of the fleet. It is planned to use merchant ships in an emergency to provide a supply chain where necessary. In relation to other priorities for defence expenditure it is not considered that it would be justifiable at present to invest in RFA ships over and above those needed for normal peacetime operations particularly when merchant ships for our defence requirements are available in an emergency.

Merchant Fleet (Defence Requirement)

Sir Edward du Cann asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will publish in the Official Report the latest available figures for each of the categories of merchant vessels required for defence purposes as set out in Table 1.3 of Volume 2 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1986" (Cmnd. 9763-II).

Mr. Stanley: I shall write to my right hon. Friend.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Abortions

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, concerning each death notified in connection with legal abortion, performed in England and Wales in each of the years 1968 to 1985, inclusive, what was the woman's age and parity, gestation period, under nine, 9 to 12, 13 to 16, 17 to 19, and over 19 weeks, abortion premises (National Health Service or non-National Health Service) and procedure; whether sterilisation was performed concurrently; and whether the Registrar General attributed the death to the operation.

Mr. Newton: Information on deaths in connection with legal abortion from 1968 to 1981 is contained in the triennial reports of the confidential inquiry into maternal deaths in England and Wales. Deaths which were attributed by the central assessors to the operation are shown in the tables. Information for 1982 to 1985 is not yet available. Figures for the number of deaths attributed by the Registrar General to legal abortion and given in my reply to the hon. Member on 27 November at columns 347-8 are based on the cause of death written by the certifying doctor on the death certificate; that information may not correspond to the more detailed information available to the inquiry which looks at all deaths occurring up to 12 months after a delivery or abortion.

Hospital Building

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement giving details of new hospital building during the next five years.

Mr. Newton: Of the present 10-year hospital building programme in England, which contains some 380 projects whose individual cost exceed £1 million and is expected to cost nearly £3 billion in all, 154 such projects are due for completion by 1991 at a total cost of about £1·6 billion.

Paybeds

Mr. John Browne asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the basis of weighting applied to hospitals for the calculation of National Health Service paybed charges.

Mr. Newton: In-patient charges in each category of hospital reflect the sum of daily paybed costs for all authorised hospitals within that charging class. Weighting takes account of the actual patterns of use of paybeds in those same hospitals, measured by the sum of occupied paybeds per day.

Industrial Motivation Ltd.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many district health authorities are using the services of Industrial Motivation Ltd.; how many district health authorities have introduced a "Quid Every Day" scheme; when each district health authority introduced such a scheme; and how much they have saved to date.

Mr. Newton: This information is not available centrally.

AIDS

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department has any plans to establish an autonomous body to co-ordinate measures taken against acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Mr. Newton: My right hon. Friend announced in the debate in the House on 21 November at column 805 that the Health Education Council is to be reconstituted as a special health authority and will in the longer term have the major executive responsibility for public education about AIDS. Overall responsibility for co-ordinating measures to combat the spread of AIDS will remain with the Government.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when his Department will commence distribution of leaflets on acquired immune deficiency syndrome to every household, and associated advertising; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's speech to the House on 21 November at columns 801-10.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to in which parts of Yorkshire and Humberside those people who, to date, have been confirmed as having acquired immune deficiency syndrome live; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: This information is collected by the communicable disease surveillance centre of the Public Health Laboratory Service from confidential reports of cases from doctors. Because of the small numbers involved, breakdown of data into small area statistics would create the possibility of identifying individuals and thereby breaching this confidentiality.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many health visitors in the Bradford district are trained and qualified to give help, advice and information about acquired immune deficiency syndrome; what arrangements are being made (a) in Yorkshire and (b) elsewhere in the United Kingdom to increase the number of health visitors with such training and qualifications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The information on Bradford and Yorkshire is not available centrally and the hon. Member may wish to approach the relevant health authorities.

The following action has been taken in England to assist community nursing staff:

1. Guidelines for the community care of AIDS patients were sent to health authorities and professional organisations in July 1985.

2. Guidance on problems related to AIDS and children at school was sent to health authorities in July 1986 (Chief Nursing Officer letter CNO(86)12).

3. The second edition of the Royal College of Nursing guidelines: "Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome/HIV related diseases" is published today.

4. The national boards for England and Wales have approved an outline curriculum on care and management of persons with AIDS and courses are expected to begin in January 1987.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what discussions he has had with the British Medical Association and others on the provision by doctors of information to insurance companies, or other public or private organisations, as to whether any patient, National Health Service or private, has undergone tests for acquired immune deficiency syndrome, or of information about the outcome of such tests; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what discussions he is having with representatives of the insurance industry on the matter of individual companies approaching general practitioners asking for information as to whether patients have undergone tests for acquired immune deficiency syndrome; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: None. Disclosure of clinical information about patients to third parties is a matter for the responsible doctor, and can normally take place only with the consent of the patient.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what representations he has received from (a) British Telecom and (b) others about the technical difficulties arising from telephone inquiries following national publicity concerning acquired immune deficiency syndrome; and what action he is taking to ensure telephone inquiries are dispersed on a regional basis to alleviate pressures on voluntary agencies with limited telephone lines in London;

(2) if he will arrange for regional free telephone numbers to be made available so that people can obtain information and advice about acquired immune deficiency syndrome; if he will arrange for such telephone numbers to be publicised widely, including on leaflets he is proposing to circulate to all households; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what information he has as to how many organisations in Bradford provide help, advice and information on acquired immune deficiency syndrome; if he will list the name of each organisation and information available to him on (a) the times of the week when the public can obtain counselling and (b) the telephone number of each organisation; and what action he is taking to ensure that the public in Bradford have free and easy access to advice and information about acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Mr. Newton: We are aware that the telephone advisory services on AIDS operated by several voluntary bodies have become overloaded because of the increasing level of inquiries. We are in contact with them and with British Telecom to see what can be done quickly to increase the capacity of their telephone systems.

Urgent consideration is also being given to ways of providing additional telephone advisory services both nationally and regionally to meet any further demand generated by our publicity campaign.

I suggest the hon. Member writes to the district health authority chairman for specific information relating to AIDS information and advice services in Bradford.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to announce decisions on the free provision of needles and condoms to help prevent the spread of acquired immune deficiency syndrome; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: On the question of the provision of injecting equipment to drug misusers, I refer the hon. Member to the reply from my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health to my hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. McCrindle) on 28 November, at column 405.

Suggestions have been made that condoms should be provided free as part of the fight against AIDS. Careful consideration will be given to whether this is likely to be worthwhile, given that they are already widely available at low cost.

Embryonic Research

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the licensing regulations for embryonic research.

Mr. Newton: Guidelines for centres carrying out research involving human embryos have been published by the voluntary licensing authority which is sponsored by the Medical Research Council and the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists.

Mental Health Act

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what further consultation period he plans for the drafting of the Mental Health Act Commission code of practice.

Mrs. Currie: Officials are considering the extensive comments received in the consultation on the Mental Health Act Commission draft, which ended in June. There will be further consultation before my right hon. Friend presents a definitive code to Parliament for approval prior to publication. The period for this further consultation has not yet been settled.

Warnock Report

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the Government intend to introduce a Bill following the publication of the Warnock report on embryo research.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) on 25 November at columns 189-90 as amended on 26 November at column 298.

BBC Childline Project

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions his Department has had with the organisers of the BBC Childline project as to the help and advice to be given by his Department to the project.

Mr. Newton: My right hon. Friend and departmental officials had discussions with the organisers of Childline prior to announcing on 30 October that £55,000 was being made available to help launch the project. An official of the Department is an observer on the council set up by Childline to advise the project.

Child Abuse

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will state the policy of his Department on the help and advice to be given in the training of people to work with children who are suffering, or have suffered, from sexual abuse;

(2) what is the estimated number of child psychiatrists in the United Kingdom with special expertise in child sexual abuse; and if he will make a statement as to the policy of his Department towards the development of training in this field.

Mr. Newton: The Department recognises the importance of advice and training being available to professionals working with children who are or who have suffered from sexual abuse. On 30 October my right hon. Friend announced that £300,000 was being made available over three years to set up an advice and training facility at the National Children's Bureau and the Department of Psychological Medicine at Great Ormond street. The number of consultant child psychiatrists in England and Wales is 318·3 (whole-time equivalent). Their professional training enables them to assess and treat cases of child sexual abuse. The numbers of child psychiatrists with additional special expertise is not known.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance his Department has given to local benefit offices as to the financial help they can give to local groups working with children who have suffered, or are suffering from, child abuse.

Mr. Newton: The Department has not issued guidance to local benefit offices on this matter.

Children in Care

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing for the latest available date the number of children under 16 years of age in each region of England who are living permanently (a) in long-stay mental subnormality hospitals and (b) in other institutional care; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The figures available do not distinguish "institutional" from more homely care, nor do they distinguish "permanent" residents from those who are resident at that date for a short period.

National Health Service: Mental handicap hospitals and units are not categorised by the length of time people stay. Table 1 shows the number of children under 16 years of age resident in National Health Service mental handicap hospitals and units (of various sizes) at 31 December 1985, by regional health authority. The table also shows the number of children resident in small (fewer than 25 beds) National Health Service units providing community provision for mentally handicapped people. The figures include children admitted for short-term care —for example, for family respite—as well as permanent residents.

Local Authority: Table 2 shows the number of children under 16 years of age resident in homes and hostels for mentally handicapped people at 31 March 1985, by local authority region. Most of these children were in local authority "homes" (of various sizes) — just over a quarter were accommodated in voluntary or private "homes". Again, the figures include short-term as well as permanent residents.

My right hon. Friend has already indicated that he is asking the Health Service to ensure that by the end of 1988 no mentally handicapped child receiving long-term care should be required to live in a large mental handicap hospital.

Consultant Community Paediatricians

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the information that his Department holds on the number of consultant community paediatricians employed by health authorities in England.

Mr. Newton: A number of consultant paediatricians have recently been appointed with special interest in community child health, but responsibilities differ widely between appointments. I regret that information on the number of such appointments in England is not collected centrally.

Ethoheptazine-Citrate

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received on the inclusion of ethoheptazine-citrate on the limited list of drugs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I understand that there is at present no single ingredient preparation of ethoheptazine-citrate being marketed in the United Kingdom. We have received representations about the one proprietary combination product on the market which contains ethoheptazine-citrate amongst its ingredients. We accepted the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs that there was no clinical need for this combination product to be available for prescription under the National Health Service.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide up-to-date figures, for the Hamilton area, indicating (a) the number of persons living below the official poverty line, (b) the number of persons on supplementary benefit, (c) the number of unemployed people claiming supplementary benefit and (d) the number of people not claiming supplementary benefit who are entitled to do so.

Mr. Lyell: Information cannot be provided in the precise form requested. The table shows the number of supplementary benefit claimants at the Hamilton local social security office which covers Hamilton and outlying villages, including High Blantyre, Blantyre and Larkhall.

Supplementary Benefit Claimants on 13 August 1986(1)

	Numbers (thousands)
Unemployed claimants	6,769
Pensioners	4,260
Other case[2]	4,869
Total[3]	15,898

Notes:
[1] 100 per cent. count of cases in action.
[2] These are claimants under pension age who are not required to be available for work.
[3] A proportion of this total will be in receipt of benefits other than supplementary benefit.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, using the 1983 "Family Expenditure Survey", how many people fell below supplementary benefit level, were on supplementary benefit and were on incomes up to 140 per cent. of supplementary benefit level in 1983, broken down by family type and economic status; what proportion each group was of the population of Wales; and how this compares with 1979 and 1981.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) on 25 July at columns 711-12 and to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) on 6 November at column 584.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what further provisions are being made to reduce hospital waiting lists.

Mr. Newton: In addition to action already in hand by health authorities to reduce hospital waiting lists and times by better management of current and planned general National Health Service resources, my right hon. Friend has established a fund totalling £50 million over two years, within which health authorities will be able to bid for money for specific initiatives to reduce waiting lists and/or times. The money will go to health authorities which can demonstrate that they are managing existing resources effectively and that some specific addition would enable them to make faster progress.

Crewe Health Authority

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list his Department's funding of the Crewe health authority for the following years (a) 1979-80, (b) 1980-81, (c) 1981-82, (d) 1982-83, (e) 1983-84, (f) 1984-85 and (g) 1985-86; and how this funding compares with the resource allocation working party recommendations.

Mr. Newton: The net revenue expenditure for Crewe district health authority is as follows:

	£(000s)
1982-83	30,036
1983-84	31,855
1984-85	33,784
1985-86	35,520

This shows an overall increase of 18·3 per cent. and an increase of 2·4 per cent. in real terms.

Figures for revenue expenditure in the Crewe district health authority are not available centrally prior to 1982 because the district formed part of Cheshire area health authority before the National Health Service reorganisation in 1982.

Distribution of resources to individual health authorities is a matter for regional health authorities to decide. The Department expects the principles developed by the resource allocation working party to be applied in arriving at a fair distribution, taking into account the district's approved plans and local circumstances.

Canada (United Kingdom Pensions)

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether discussions are continuing between his Department and the Canadian Department of Health and Welfare about a bilateral social security convention regarding an uprating of United Kingdom pensions payable in Canada to pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lyell: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 22 October at columns 906-7.

There is regular informal contact between officials of the Department and the Canadian Department of Health and Welfare regarding social security matters, including discussion and exchange of information in connection with a new convention, but there are no formal discussions taking place at present about the detailed technical matters involved. Until such time as the necessary finance can be made available, it will not be possible to make significant progress towards a new social security convention with Canada.

Mortality

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action is being undertaken to ensure the future availability of more accurate statistics relating to social class mortality, in the light of the outcome of the 1979-80 and 1982-83 occupational mortality supplement.

Mrs. Currie: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys' longitudinal study provides statistics of social class mortality free of the bias in the Registrar General's decennial supplement on occupational mortality. Some statistics from the logitudinal study for the period 1981-83 have already been published in "Population Trends No. 45" and results for the period 1981-85 will be available in due course.

Benefits

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many staff in the Wandsworth offices of his Department at Irene house, Arndale house and Parkgate road, currently administer (a) supplementary benefit and (b) contributory benefit; and what were the comparable figures at 31 December 1984 and 31 December 1985.

Mr. Lyell: Information on numbers of staff in post is available only for the first day of each month. The number of staff administering (a) supplementary benefit and (b) contributory benefit at the Department's offices at Irene house, Arndale house and Parkgate road at 1 January 1985, 1 January 1986 and 1 November 1986 is as follows:

	1 January 1985		1 January 1986		1 November 1986
	Supplementary Benefit	Contributory Benefit	Supplementary Benefit	Contributory Benefit	Supplementary Benefit	Contributory Benefit

Parkgate Road	138·0	30	125·5	28·5	127·0	30·0

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many families with children were dependent on supplementary benefit in 1984 broken down by (a) economic status, (b) according to whether they were one-parent or two-parent families and (c) by duration of time on supplementary benefit;

(2) if he will publish a breakdown of the number of supplementary benefit claimants and dependants in 1984 broken down by social security region;

(3) if he will publish a table using his Department's low income families 1983 tables showing how many people fell below supplementary benefit level, were on supplementary benefit or 140 per cent. of supplementary benefit level, analysed according to both economic and family status together at the latest available date.

Mr. Lyell: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Irradiated Food

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to introduce regulations relating to irradiated food.

Mrs. Currie: We have no plans at present for further amendments to the Food (Control of Irradiation) Regulations 1967 which, in effect, prohibit the irradiation of food. I also refer the hon. Member to my reply to the right hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Freeson) on 23 October at columns 978-80.

Urgent Needs Payments

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state, for each office of his Department covering the constituency of Leyton, the number of urgent needs payments (i) requested, (ii) given-out and (iii) refused in the current year and the two previous years.

Mr. Lyell: Information is not available in precisely the form requested. Leyton is covered by two of the Department's offices. The tables show how they determined claims for urgent needs payments during years ending early in April.

Table A Leytonstone

	1984-85	[1]1985-86
Successful claims for living expenses	588	610
Unsuccessful claims for living expenses	34	62
[2]Claims for single payments for one-off needs	14	7
TOTAL CLAIMS	636	679

Table B Walthamstow

	1984-85	[1]1985-86
Successful claims for living expenses	283	1,307
Unsuccessful claims for living expenses	7	21
[2]Claims for single payments for one-off needs	128	115
TOTAL CLAIMS	418	1,443

[1] 1985-86 figures are provisional.
Information is not available for any period before April 1984.
[2] These figures include awards and refusals.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to review levels of pay for speech therapists.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 6 November at column 601.

Holywood Hall Hospital

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will indicate whether the sale of Holywood Hall hospital in County Durham was advertised publicly;

(2) whether any inquiries received by the Northern regional health authority to purchase the Holywood Hall hospital complex were received prior to its closure;

(3) whether the Northern regional health authority sought planning permission to enhance the value of the Holywood Hall hospital complex before it was offered for sale;

(4) whether the Northern regional health authority carried out any vetting procedures on the firms which bid for the Holywood Hall hospital site.

Mrs. Currie: The Northern regional health authority has been asked for a report on the sale of Holywood Hall hospital, and I will let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as it has been received and studied.

RAWP Formula

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions the resource allocation working party formula has been modified since its inception.

Mr. Newton: The national RAWP formula has been modified on three occasions:

(i) in accordance with the recommendations of the Advisory Group on Resource Allocation in 1980: the main changes were recalculation of the Thames regions' resource targets to take account of labour market cost differences between the Greater London area and the rest of England; and revision of the service increment for teaching;

(ii) an amendment to the capital RAWP formula, phasing out a stock equalisation element in the formula, is being introduced after consultation with regions, over seven years from 1985-86;

(iii) from 1985-86, after consultation with regions, population projections have been used in place of population estimates in the revenue RAWP formula; some other technical changes were introduced at the same time.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what progress has been made regarding greater equality of resources in the National Health Service according to the resource allocation working party formula since 1979;

(2) if he will list in rank order the health regions and the district health authorities according to the percentage by which their resources are above or below those given by the resource allocation working party formula.

Mr. Newton: The following table shows each region's distance from its RAWP target share of the available resources in 1979-80 and 1986-87. Regions are shown ranked according to their 1986-87 distance from target.

Regional Health Authority	Post-allocation distance from target (per cent.)
	1979-80	1986-87
North West Thames	+13·0	+7·6
North East Thames	+11·5	+5·9
South East Thames	+10·0	+3·9
South West Thames	+ 5·9	+1·9
Mersey	− 1·0	+0·1
North Western	− 8·8	−0·8
Wessex	− 3·7	−1·4
Northern	− 7·5	−1·9
Oxford	+ 0·6	−2·0
Yorkshire	− 3·7	−2·2
South Western	− 4·0	−2·4
Trent	− 7·3	−3·7
East Anglian	− 5·1	−3·8
West Midlands	− 5·8	−3·9

Comparable information cannot be supplied for district health authorities, as comprehensive information is not held centrally and regions use varying methodologies for calculating resource targets.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) which individuals, institutions and health authorities have urged changes in the resource allocation working party formula and its implications; and if he will categorise them according to whether they urged quicker or slower progress towards equality in resource distribution;

(2) if he will detail the way in which the resource allocation working party formula and process has been reviewed by the Health Service Management Board; from which people and institutions evidence was obtained; what measures of patient care were considered; and when he will announce the results of the review.

Mr. Newton: The National Health Service management board is being assisted in its review of the resource allocation working party formula by a steering group and a technical group, both with members drawn from health authorities and the DHSS. A list of respondents to the review's formal consultation is as follows. Ministers take decisions each year on the pace of movement towards each region's target share of the available resources; this is not determined by the formula and is therefore not within the remit of the review.

My right hon. Friend hopes to make an announcement shortly about progress with the review to date.

Nurses

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the cost to public funds of training (a) a state-enrolled nurse and (b) a state-registered nurse; and what was the total cost of training all such nurses for the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: The estimated cost, based on July 1986 figures, for England, is as follows:

(a) Two-year training of an enrolled nurse (general)—previously state enrolled nurse—£7,700.

(b) Three-year training of a registered general nurse—previously state registered nurse—£11,700.

The total cost of training all such nurses in England, for the financial year 1985-86 was £449 million. This is made up of £378 million in salaries, national insurance and superannuation costs for learners, paid by health authorities, and £71 million expenditure by the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting in training costs. These figures are subject to audit by the National Audit Office. There is additional, but not separately identified expenditure on informal teaching costs (teaching provided by qualified staff as learners during clinical placements) and on maintenance and conditions in lieu of rates in respect of schools of nursing.

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make an estimate of the number of agency nurses currently employed to provide temporary nursing cover in the National Health Service hospitals in the North-West Thames region.

Mr. Newton: As at 30 September 1985, there were 1,060 whole-time equivalent hospital nursing and midwifery agency staff employed in the North-West Thames region.

Doctor Agencies

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make an estimate of the number of (a) single and (b) multiple doctor agencies which are currently providing temporary medical cover to National Health Service hospitals in the North-West Thames region.

Mr. Newton: This information is not held centrally. My hon. Friend may like to contact the chairman of the North-West Thames regional health authority.

Doctors (Earnings)

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the average earnings of a general medical practitioner in each of the first five years in general practice; and what are the comparable figures for a doctor working in a National Health Service hospital.

Mr. Newton: A straight comparison is not possible. After graduation, all doctors spend a year in the hospital house officer grade. Future general practitioners spend a further two years as senior house officers and a year attached to a practice as a trainee. These are minimum requirements, and a doctor will not necessarily enter general practice immediately thereafter. The National Health Service incomes of individual general practitioners would depend on a variety of factors, such as list sizes, services provided and partnership agreements. From 1 July 1986 the average intended net income of all unrestricted principals in general practice has been set at £25,080 following the recommendation of the Doctors and Dentists Review Body. It is, however, unlikely that a doctor would achieve this average in the first few years of practice.

Future hospital consultants spend at least a year as senior house officers, two to three years as registrars, and three to four years as senior registrars. These periods may be longer, depending on the individual and the specialty. The average salaries for practitioners on the first two points of the registrar scale and the first three points of the senior registrar scale are as follows:

£16,206 £17,023 £17,622 £18,553 £19,484	exclusive of London weighting allowance £877 (Inner) or £677 (outer)

Community Resource Centres, Brent

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the three community resource centres planned by the Brent district health authority will qualify for special project grants within the extra funds announced in the "Autumn Statement"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: It will be for North West Thames regional health authority to decide on allocations to its districts when it receives its regional allocation for 1987-88.

Detailed guidance on the use of the special fund for regions receiving below average growth will be issued soon.

Slough (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the cost of the reception held for the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of Health and Social Security the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) at Slough hospital on 26 November;

(2) what was the purpose of the visit by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Health the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) on 26 November; and what was its cost.

Mrs. Currie: The purpose of my visit to Slough on 26 November was to attend the launch of a video "The Slough Health Habit" which forms part of the East Berkshire health authority's health promotion programme. I attended at the invitation of the district health authority. The question of the cost of the occasion is a matter for the health authority and the hon. Member might like to contact the district chairman.

Occupational Therapists

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many occupational therapists are employed by the National Health Service; what was the comparative annual figure for 1983, 1984 and 1985; and what is the current and comparative vacancy figure.

Mr. Newton: The figures are as follows:

Occupational therapists: England

Numbers (wte) as at 30 September		Estimated vacancies against funded posts after 3 months
		Per cent.
1983	3,380	Not available
1984	3,610	15
1985	3,990	19

Hospitals (Islington)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the bed availability of the Whittington hospital and Royal Northern hospital of Islington health authority; and what are the comparative figures for 1985 and 1984.

Mrs. Currie: The requested information is given in the table. Between 1984 and 1985 the number of in-patient cases treated increased from 21,814 to 22,044 at the Whittington hospital and increased from 5,467 to 6,042 at the Royal Northern hospital. The number of in-patient cases treated per available bed increased from 29·3 to 33·6 at the Whittington hospital and increased from 30·5 to 35·1 at the Royal Northern hospital.

Average daily number of available beds

Hospital	1984	1985
Whittington	744·0	655·3
Royal Northern	179·4	172·0

Leamington Park Hospital

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the sale of Leamington Park hospital was completed; what was the total sum realised; and what are the amounts to be given to Brent district health authority in the current year and in 1987-88 over and above the normal allocation.

Mrs. Currie: An offer for the former Leamington Park hospital conditional on the granting of planning permission has been accepted, and the parties concerned are in discussion with the London borough of Ealing. The sale price, and the amount accruing to the Brent health authority, will not be known until the planning situation is resolved.

Price Indices

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the rise in the pensioners' price index (less housing) and the rise in the retail price index (less housing) for the years between 1979 and the latest available date.

Mr. Major: The information requested is shown in the table. The pensioner price indices are published quarterly, and for comparison purposes quarterly figures for the retail prices index minus housing have also been used. The figures show annual percentage increases at the fourth quarter of each year except 1986, where the latest available second quarter figures have been used.

Percentage increase since previous year (Fourth quarter)

Primary Health Care

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the towns and cities in which consultation meetings were held on the Green Paper, "Primary Health Care — Agenda for Discussion," indicating the date of each such meeting.

Mr. Newton: Meetings were held in Norwich on 12 September; in Newcastle on 23 September; in Birmingham on 29 September; in Exeter on 31 October; in Manchester on 5 November; and in Leeds on 10 November. Meetings were also held in London on 14 and 22 July, 28 October, and 27 November. The final meeting will take place in London on 10 December.

Occupational Therapy

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the total number of occupational therapy teaching places available in appropriate institutions; and what were the comparative figures for 1985 and 1984.

Mr. Newton: The total number of teaching places available in 1986 in England and Wales is 1968. A similar number were available in 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total number of occupational therapists employed by social service authorities in the current year, and the relative figures for 1985, 1984 and 1983; and what is the current and comparative vacancy figure.

Mr. Newton: The numbers of occupational therapists employed by social services authorities in England are given in the table — 1985 is the latest year for which figures are available. Information on numbers of vacancies for occupational therapists is not collected centrally, but a survey in 1984 carried out by the Association of Social Services Directors estimated that 13 per cent. of funded posts in England were vacant.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 3 December 1986

NORTHERN IRELAND

Prisons (Sport)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether there has been any discussion within the Anglo-Irish ministerial conference about (a) facilities for playing Gaelic football at Northern Ireland prisons and (b) facilities for playing cricket at Republic of Ireland prisons.

Mr. Scott: There has been no such discussion, but at the request of the Irish Government we recently provided information on the facilities for playing Gaelic football in Northern Ireland prisons.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Speech Therapists

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether he will make a statement on the number of student places available for speech therapists;

(2) how many speech therapists graduated in 1979 and for the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Walden: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Wrexham (Dr. Marek) on 7 July 1986, at column 53. For the reasons that I gave then, I am not in a position to provide information in the form requested. I understand, however, that in 1985 the College of Speech Therapists awarded a licence to practise to 286 graduates from approved courses of relevant study. Comparable information for 1979 is not available.

Motor Neurone Disease

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to increase funding for research into motor neurone disease.

Mr. Walden: The research councils, which receive grants-in-aid from the Department's science budget, are the main Government agencies for the support of scientific research. They determine their own scientific priorities. Both the Medical Research Council and the Science and Engineering Research Council are funding research into motor neurone disease. I understand that the councils are always willing to consider soundly based research proposals for support through their grants scheme in competition with other applications.

Statistics

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, in respect of the statistics kept and published by his Department, he will publish in the Official Report any changes since 1979 in (a) the statistical series which are published, including those which have been introduced and those which have been dropped, (b) the basis on which any elements in the statistics are estimated, calculated or presented, (c) the periods over which, and the dates on which the series are collected or published and (d) any other respects in the ways in which the statistics are collected, recorded, presented, evaluated or published; and if he will explain the reasons for any such changes.

Mrs. Rumbold: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Secondary Schools

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will state, for each year since 1964, for the whole of the United Kingdom (a) the percentage of secondary schools accounted for by grammar schools, (b) the average pupil-teacher ratio in secondary schools, (c) the level of per capita expenditure in secondary schools at constant 1986 prices and (d) the number of pupils achieving five or more higher grade passes at O level or certificate of secondary education; and if he will give his assessment of the impact on these figures of the raising of the school leaving age.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply as soon as possible.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Sickness and Invalidity Benefits

Mrs. Beckett asked the Attorney-General what are the latest figures for the number of appeals to the commissioner for (a) sickness benefit and (b) invalidity benefit; and what were the results of the appeals and references in each category.

The Attorney-General: To the end of November 1986, the relevant figures for this year for England and Wales are as shown in the table. I understand from my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland that the relevant figures for Scotland are also as shown in the table. It is assumed that by "references" are meant appeals remitted to the lower tribunal. The results of those cases before the tribunal are not immediately available and further information will accordingly be provided to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Treasury Solicitor

Mr. Adley asked the Attorney-General what is the practice of Her Majesty's Government in seeking the advice of the Treasury Solicitor in civil cases in which Her Majesty's Government are involved; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The advice of the Treasury Solicitor in relation to civil cases is sought as required.

"One Woman's War"

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General whether he will prosecute under section 2 of the Official Secrets Act the New Statesman for publishing information in the form of excerpts from the book, "One Woman's War" by Joan Miller.

The Attorney-General: No.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Overseas Civil Service

90. Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he now plans to allow retired members of the Overseas Civil Service to count war service towards their pension entitlement on the same terms as apply to retired members of the Home Civil Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: So far, we have not been able to accommodate this extra commitment; but we are keeping the matter under careful review.

Statistics

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in respect of the statistics kept and published by his Department, he will publish in the Official Report any changes since 1979 in (a) the statistical series which are published, including those which have been introduced and those which have been dropped, (b) the basis on which any elements in the statistics are estimated, calculated or presented, (c) the periods over which, and the dates on which the series are collected or published and (d) any other respects in the ways in which the statistics are collected, recorded, presented, evaluated or published; and if he will explain the reasons for any such changes.

Mr. Chris Patten: The only regular series of statistics kept and published by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office relate to British overseas aid. Details of commitments and disbursements of aid by type, purpose and geographical distribution are contained in the annual publication "British Aid Statistics", normally published in July or August, and in which most tables provide a series for five years.

The layout of the publication was thoroughly reviewed for the 1983 edition in order to simplify the presentation and increase the amount of detailed information available. The only series dropped as a result of the review related to the receipt of interest due on official loans, other than those from the Commonwealth Development Corporation.

Minor changes in the basis of compilation, presentation and publication of the statistical series are made from time to time in response to the Government's requirements for statistical information, to conform with changes in internationally agreed definitions and classifications of aid, to comply with international reporting requirements, changes in the administrative systems on which some series are based, the development of new statistical techniques and technological developments affecting the compilation and dissemination of statistical data.

When such changes are made they are fully explained in the introduction to "British Aid Statistics".

HOME DEPARTMENT

Warning and Monitoring Organisation

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the dates of the United Kingdom Warning and Monitoring Organisation's exercises in 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The exercise programme for the United Kingdom Warning and Monitoring Organisation (UKWMO) in 1987 has not yet been finalised.

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the United Kingdom Warning and Monitoring Organisation and the Royal Observer Corps will be participaing in the WINTEX 1987 exercises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Full-time staff at HQ United Kingdom Warning and Monitoring Organisation (UKWMO) and HQ Royal Observer Corps (ROC) will be participating in WINTEX/CIMEX 87.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Peter Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were held on remand on 1 November in (a) Preston prison and (b) Manchester, Strangeways prison.

Mr. Mellor: The available information is given in the table.

Remand population of Manchester and Preston prisons on 31 October 1986 by type of prisoner

	Untried	Convicted unsentenced
Manchester remand centre	510	5
Manchester prison		190

Firearms

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) firearms and (b) shotguns were registered between 1960 to 1970, 1970 to 1980 and 1980 to 1985 in the United Kingdom as a whole and in (i) England, (ii) Wales, (iii) Scotland and (iv) Northern Ireland separately; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The available information is as follows:

(i) England and Wales

	Number of firearm certificates on issue under section 1 of the Firearms Act 1968	Number of shotgun certificates on issue under section 2 of the Firearms Act 1968
1968	216,281	n/a

Notes:

1. The information relates to the number of certificates on issue on 31 December.
2. More than one weapon may be held on a certificate. Information about the total number of weapons covered by certificate is not held centrally.
3. Statistics are not available except in respect of the years given. Shotguns were not subject to certification before 1968, and statistics about the number of firearms certificates on issue were not collected before that year.
4. Statistics are not available in respect of England alone, or Wales alone.
5. The figures for 1985 incorporate a correction, and therefore vary slightly from those published previously.

2. More than one weapon may be held on a certificate. Information about the total number of weapons covered by certificates is not held centrally.
3. Shotguns were not subject to certification before 1968, and statistics about the number of firearm certificates on issue were not collected before that year.

Notes:

1. The figures given are of the certificates on issue, and of the weapons held under a certificate, on 31 December.
2. Information about the weapons covered by certificates before 1974, and about the number of certificates on issue before 1970, is not readily available and could only be obtained, if at all, at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of prisoners serving life sentences for murder with firearms involving (a) rape with homicide, (b) robbery, (c) terrorism and (d) murder of police officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information is that in prison department establishments on 31 December 1985 one person was serving a life sentence for murder by shooting involving a sexual motive, 38 for murder by shooting during the course of theft, five for murder by shooting whilst engaged in terrorist activity and 10 for murder by shooting a policeman in the course of his duty.

Police (Graduates)

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total expenditure for the recruitment of graduate entrants to the police service in England and Wales in each of the last five years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not possible to estimate the total expenditure on the recruitment of graduates to the police service in England and Wales, since this includes the time spent by members of police forces in interviewing and assessing candidates, which cannot be quantified. Expenditure by the Home Office, which is responsible for graduate recruitment advertising and literature and for the administration of the graduate entry scheme for the police service, amounted to a little under £300,000 in 1985-86. I regret that comparable figures for earlier years are not readily available.

Radio Interference

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will investigate the reason why residents in the Colton area of Staffordshire experience radio interference from the Pye Green repeater station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Preliminary tests have shown that the transmitting equipment at Pye Green is operating in accordance with the licence issued under the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949, but further investigations are being carried out and I shall write to my hon. Friend when these have been completed.

NATO (Civil Defence Committee)

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the formal lines of communication between his Department and the civil defence committee of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's senior civil emergency planning committee.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Head of F6 (Emergency Planning) Division is the United Kingdom delegate to the civil defence committee.

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what specific deliberations of the civil defence committee of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's senior civil emergency planning committee have affected the formulation of current civil planning in the United Kingdom;

(2) when the civil defence committee of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's senior civil emergency planning committee last met; and if he will place the minutes of the committee's deliberations in the Library;

(3) what are the terms of reference for the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's civil defence committee.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The civil defence committee provides the forum for consultation on national plans for all aspects of the protection of the public in an emergency. Discussions inform the development of planning in the United Kingdom, but do not determine its direction.

The committee last met on 2 and 3 October 1986. It would not be appropriate to place records of the committee's meetings in the Library.

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the terms of reference for the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's senior civil emergency planning committee.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The senior civil emergency planning committee co-ordinates and gives guidance for the activities of eight planning boards and committees, each of which covers a specific field in civil emergency planning.

Murders

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set up a committee to review the re-introduction of capital punishment as a penalty for child murder.

Mr. Mellor: No.

AIDS

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy in Her Majesty's Government's campaign against acquired immune deficiency syndrome to license and legalise brothels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Government have no plans to introduce legislation to legalise brothels.

Prison Population

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he plans any changes to penal policy in the light of the Howard League's proposals for reducing the prison population and easing the prison crisis published in the booklet, "Go Directly to Gaol", on 24 November, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Mellor: No. Our policies were summarised in the revised edition of the working paper "Criminal Justice" published on 27 November.

Forensic Science Laboratory, Chorley

Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department for each year since 1978, how many persons were convicted of offences whose investigation was assisted by the forensic science laboratory at Chorley; and what were the offences.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state for each year since 1978 the number of crimes whose investigation was assisted by the forensic science laboratory at Chorley.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The forensic science service maintains records of the numbers of cases submitted for examination but not the number of crimes to which they relate. The number of cases received at the forensic science laboratory, Chorley, since 1978 are as follows:

	Number
1978	9,995
1979	8,654
1980	8,595
1981	8,282
1982	7,924
1983	6,873
1984	6,493
1985	5,564

The numbers have declined since 1978 as a result of decisions to concentrate efforts on the more serious and generally time-consuming cases.

Statistics

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in respect of the statistics kept and published by his Department, he will publish in the Official Report any changes since 1979 in (a) the statistical series which are published, including those which have been introduced and those which have been dropped, (b) the basis on which any elements in the statistics are estimated, calculated or presented, (c) the periods over which, and the dates on which the series are collected or published and (d) any other respects in the ways in which the statistics are colleced, recorded, presented, evaluated or published; and if he will explain the reason for any such changes.

Mr. Hurd: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Crossbows

Miss Fookes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he plans to seek to restrict the sale of crossbows; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: In consultation with the police and other interested parties I have been considering whether any steps can usefully be taken to prevent the misuse of crossbows. The law relating to cases of actual misuse is already extensive and I have concluded that there are no significant gaps.

Crossbows are, however, dangerous weapons in the wrong hands, and I do not consider that they are suitable to be in the possession of unsupervised young people. Accordingly, my Department proposes to issue a guidance notice to traders urging them not to sell crossbows to persons under 17. The Government approve, in principle, of a statutory prohibition on the sale of crossbows to persons under 17, and on their purchase or possession, without supervision, by young people. In the absence of an early opportunity for Government legislation on this matter, the Government would look favourably on an initiative by a Private Member if a suitable Bill were to be introduced.

In consultation with the responsible crossbow sports organisations, we also propose to prepare and issue a code of safe practice for crossbow users.

Greiss Test

Mr. Richard Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) to whom the forensic laboratory at Chorley provided details of the method used by Dr. Skuse in his application of the Greiss test on 22 November 1974;

(2) what information he has as to whether Granada Television was provided with details of Dr. Skuse's method for the Greiss test used on 22 November 1974 whilst Dr. Skuse was still in service, in connection with the "World in Action" programme on the Birmingham pub bombing.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his replies, 1 December 1986, c. 486]: Information was given in response to a request from Mr. Baldock, an independent forensic scientist, who was engaged by Granada in the preparations for a "World in Action" programme. No such information was given direct to Granada Television. For further detail I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 20 November 1986, at column 287.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Business Prospects (Midlands)

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the factors most likely to improve business prospects in the midlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The best prospects for business lie in the Government's economic and industrial policies which are creating conditions for sustainable growth in jobs and output. A large part of the midlands was designated as an assisted area two years ago. Companies there are already benefitting from financial assistance from my Department although it is too early to carry out a full assessment of the impact of these measures.

Consumer Protection

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he intends to introduce legislation to strengthen the consumer protection offered to people taking package holidays, with regard to the overbooking of chartered holiday flights; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he intends to introduce legislation to strengthen the consumer protection offered to people taking package holidays with regard to the overbooking of holiday accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The Government have no plans to legislate in these areas at present. Tour operators are already bound by legislation such as the Trade Descriptions Act 1968 and the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982. In addition, holiday makers who travel with tour operators belonging to the Association of British Travel Agents, which represents the great majority of the United Kingdom travel industry, receive further protection by virtue of the association's code of conduct for tour operators. This contains provisions on the overbooking of holiday accommodation. It also contains provisions on other holiday alterations, which embrace changes to charter flights, and which have been strengthened with effect from the 1986-87 winter season. The Government favour self-regulation by the industry provided that the code and associated conciliation facilities operate effectively.

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to seek to extend existing consumer protection legislation to the sales techniques used by companies to sell time-share properties, with particular regard to national time-share competitions organised by British companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I have no plans at present to introduce such new legislation. I recognise the concern that arises from the selling methods used by some of those engaged in marketing time-share and my Department will shortly be issuing a checklist to which consumers may refer when they are approached about time-share purchases.

Statistics

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, in respect of the statistics kept and published by his Department, he will publish in the Official Report any changes since 1979 in (a) the statistical series which are published, including those which have been introduced and those which have been dropped, (b) the basis on which any elements in the statistics are estimated, calculated or presented, (c) the periods over which, and the dates on which the series are collected or published and (d) any other respects in the ways in which statistics are collected, recorded, presented, evaluated or published; and if he will explain the reasons for any such changes.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Takeovers

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy towards takeovers of public limited companies by management groups from outside such companies.

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his reply, 1 December 1986, c. 432]: The Fair Trading Act 1973 enables certain transactions to be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for further investigation. These are mergers of two or more enterprises when either the assets test of the market share test in the act is satisfied. Our policy is that references to the MMC will be made primarily on competition grounds.

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Director General of Fair Trading has provided him with information about the management buy-in of Simon Engineering plc by means of an offer by a new management and institutional consortium through Valuedale plc; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his reply, 1 December 1986, c. 432]: The proposed management buy-in of Simon Engineering plc through Valuedale plc is being considered by the Office of Fair Trading (OFT). A qualifying merger for the purposes of the Fair Trading Act 1973, must involve two or more enterprises ceasing to be distinct. I understand that, on the information currently available, the OFT considers that the proposal does not qualify for further investigation because Valuedale does not constitute an enterprise under the terms of the Act.

Unit Labour Costs

Mr. Malins asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish a table showing information available to him in index form of (i) output, (ii) output per hour, and (iii) unit labour costs in Japan, the United States of America and the European Community as a whole for the years 1970, 1975, 1980, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. MacGregor: I have been asked to reply.

Information on output per man hour and unit labour costs in the whole economy are not readily available for countries outside the United Kingdom. The following table shows figures for manufacturing industry:

Output, productivity and costs in manufacturing (1980 = 100)

	1970	1975	1980	1985	1986H1

TRANSPORT

M11 (Link Road)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria were used (a) in rejecting any developments on the proposed tunnel lid on the M11 link road at Leyton and Leytonstone and (b) in approving development on the tunnel lid on the A1 at Hatfield; if he will now reconsider his decision in relation to the M11 project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No local authority or developer has come forward with plans for the commercial exploitation of tunnel lids over the A12 Hackney Wick to M11 link road. At Hatfield the local authorities took the initiative at the outset in promoting the redevelopment of a wide area which included the tunnel lid. I see no reason to reconsider the decisions that have been announced on the link road.

Shipping Wastes (Reception Facilities)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to require all large ports in the United Kingdom to provide reception facilities for residues and mixtures of oily and noxious wastes from vessels visiting the United Kingdom's shores; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Legislation was introduced in July 1984 which required port authorities and terminal operators to provide reception facilities for oily waste and, from 6 April 1987, such facilities for residues and mixtures of noxious liquid substances.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list ports where in accordance with the United Kingdom's obligations under annex II of the Marpol convention 73/78 reception facilities are available to accept residues containing noxious liquid substances from vessels visiting British shores.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The United Kingdom has no obligations under annex II of Marpol 73/78 with respect to reception facilities for residues containing noxious liquid substances until 6 April 1987. A list of ports where these are provided will be available after that date.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information Her Majesty's Government provides to mariners of a detailed and periodically updated nature on the location of and possibilities for utilising reception facilities in United Kingdom ports which receive oily residues and mixtures of noxious materials from vessels visiting United Kingdom shores.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The United Kingdom advises the International Maritime Organisation annually on the availability and use of reception facilities for oily residues in United Kingdom ports. The Department is in the process of advising port authorities that shipping agents and ship operators using ports should be provided with certain detailed information so that mariners are fully informed of the provisions for oily residues. It is envisaged that similar arrangements will be made with respect to reception facilities for residues containing noxious liquid substances when annex II of Marpol is implemented.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport if there is a standard charge for the use of reception facilities in United Kingdom ports which receive oily residues and mixtures of noxious materials from vessels visiting United Kingdom shores; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Whilst a United Kingdom port may make reasonable charges for the use of reception facilities in accordance with current legislation, a standard charge does not exist.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number, locations and types of reception facilities available in the United Kingdom to accept oily residues and mixtures of noxious materials from vessels visiting United Kingdom shores.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Department of Transport records show that approximately 80 reception facilities are available for oily wastes throughout United Kingdom ports and terminals.

There is at present no legal requirement for United Kingdom ports to provide reception facilities for noxious liquid wastes arising from ships, therefore no information is available as to established facilities. Such facilities will, however, be required in certain ports for wastes from a limited number of noxious liquid substances carried in bulk by ships after implementation of Marpol, annex II, on 6 April 1987.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps Her Majesty's Government has taken to ensure that the best available technology is employed in reception facilities in United Kingdom ports which receive oily residues and mixtures of noxious materials from vessels visiting United Kingdom shores.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply.

The transfer of ship residues from vessels to reception facilities is covered by the Prevention of Pollution (Reception Facilities) Order 1984. The handling, transfer and storage of the residues in the harbour area will be subject to the Dangerous Substances in Harbour Areas Regulations 1986 and elsewhere to the provisions of the Control of Pollution Act 1974. Advice on the best practicable means of dealing with waste is available from the regulatory authorities. The actual technology employed is a matter for the owner or operator of the reception facilities provided these comply with the relevant regulations.

Statistics

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Transport if in respect of the statistics kept and published by his Department, he will publish in the Official Report any changes since 1979 in (a) the statistical series which are published, including those which have been introduced and those which have been dropped, (b) the basis on which any elements in the statistics are estimated, calculated or presented, (c) the periods over which, and the dates on which the series are collected or published and (d) any other respects in the ways in which the statistics are collected, recorded, presented, evaluated, or published; and if he will explain the reasons for any such changes.

Mr. John Moore: Changes in the basis of compilation, presentation, and publication of statistical series are made from time to time in response to the Government's requirements for statistical information, changes in the administrative sytems on which some series are based, the development of new statistical techniques, and technological developments affecting the compilation and dissemination of statistical data. When such changes are made they are documented in the Department's annual statistical publication "Transport Statistics Great Britain", copies of which are in the Library.

The principal changes since 1979 have been:

Bus and coach industry: the Transport Act 1980 and the Public Passenger Vehicles Act 1981 resulted in the redefinition of certain categories within the published statistics. The introduction of new returns for 1985-86 in anticipation of the provisions of the Transport Act 1985 has also involved some change in the published statistics.

Domestic waterborne freight: new estimates of the volume of domestic waterborne freight traffic (that is freight traffic by coastal shipping and on rivers and other inland waterways) introduced in 1984.

Heavy goods vehicles: development of the computer sytems at the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre allowed information on heavy goods vehicles derived from the vehicle licensing system to be used to compile statistics on HGVs and on road goods transport, in place of information from a register of vehicles on operators' licences. This change, which was made in the interests of economy and efficiency, produced some discontinuity in the statistical series and adjustments have had to be made to produce consistent series.

Port Statistics: a "mode of appearance" classification was introduced in 1982 in place of the previous commodity classification which had become less relevant with the unitisation of cargo.

Road traffic: series revised in 1984 due to the introduction of more sophisticated statistical techniques.

Vehicle taxation: categories changed on 1 October 1982 which affected series for new vehicle registrations and vehicles currently licensed.

M25 (Defects)

Mr. George Gardiner asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether W. S. Atkins and Partners, consulting engineers on the Reigate-Leatherhead section of the M25, have yet received a submission from the contractors Birse Farr; whether W. S. Atkins and Partners have yet determined where responsibility for defects in the construction of this section lies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The consulting engineers have recently received a detailed statement of claim from the contractor concerning the defects in the concrete pavement of the Reigate-Leatherhead section of the M25. The consultants are considering this. It may take them some time to reach a decision.

Helicopters

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) on how many occasions in each year from 1981 to 1985, and in respect of the current year to 15 November, civil helicopter pilots on flights over the North sea contacted air traffic control at (i) Aberdeen, (ii) Sumburgh, (iii) Baltasound and (iv) Shetland radar at Royal Air Force Saxa Vord to report suspected, indicated or actual technical malfunctions of their aircraft;

(2) on how many occasions emergency services were alerted at (i) Aberdeen, (ii) Sumburgh and (iii) Baltasound airports in connection with civil helicopter landings in each year between 1981 and 1985 and in the current year to 15 November.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Civil Aviation Authority, which is responsible through the national air traffic services for air traffic control, has informed me that the information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mandatory Occurrence Reporting Scheme

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many mandatory occurrence reports were filed by civil helicopter pilots on flights over the North sea in each of the following years: (a) 1981, (b) 1982, (c) 1983, (d) 1984, (e) 1985 and (f) 1986 to 15 November;

(2) what steps have been taken in the last five years to ensure enforcement of the regulations on mandatory occurrence reports in respect of civil fixed-wing and rotary wing aircraft, operating in the north of Scotland and in North sea operations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Civil Aviation Authority, which is statutorily responsible for all aspects of aviation safety, has informed me that legislation on the mandatory occurrence reporting scheme is contained in article 85 of the Air Navigation Order 1985. Information and guidance on the scheme is set out in the CAA's "Civil Aviation Publication Number 382," which was last amended in 1984 and is currently subject to review. The authority subjects all holders of an air operator's certificate for the conduct of public transport flights to periodic detailed inspection. An operator's system for the handling and forwarding of mandatory occurrence reports to the authority is one of the aspects to which particular attention is paid. Any shortcomings found, that is failure to report a reportable occurrence, are drawn to the operator's attention. Serious weakness in MOR practices could be one of the factors in suspension or revocation of an air operator's certificate. In the last five years, all the North sea major helicopter operators have been subject to the CAA inspection. During that period the number of MOR reports filed by civil helicopter pilots on flights over the North sea were as follows:

1981	157
1982	202
1983	178
1984	220
1985	193
[1]1986	127

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa

13. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has had against sanctions from non-governmental South African sources; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We have received representations in this sense from a number of non-governmental South African sources, including the Inkatha movement, the Progressive Federal party, and the South African business community. We agree with them that general economic sanctions would not be effective as a means to end apartheid.

Terrorism

14. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress on European Economic Community co-operation on measures to combat terrorism.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The measures agreed by the Twelve on 10 November and the statement issued on 29 November sent a clear signal to Syria that the involvement of its officials in acts of terrorism was totally unacceptable. These latest actions demonstrate the determination of the Twelve to co-operate closely in adopting practical counter-terrorist measures.

54. Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further steps he will take to seek to combat terrorism from all sources in the middle east.

Mr. Eggar: We shall continue to do everything we can to combat terrorism, from whatever quarter it may come, working closely with other like-minded countries in the process.

61. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is satisfied with the adequacy of security measures taken following the expulsion of the Syrian ambassador from London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Yes. Security measures are reviewed on a regular basis according to the level of threat.

70. Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise the issue of state sponsored terrorism at the next meeting of European Economic Community Foreign Ministers.

Mr. Eggar: The issue of terrorism will be discussed at the European Council on 5 and 6 December in London.

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the Republic of Ireland to pass the legislation providing for extradition, arising from the European convention for the suppression of terrorism; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: A Bill which makes provision for Irish ratification of the European convention on the suppression of terrorism was published by the Government of the Republic of Ireland on 25 November. Its passage is a matter for the Government and Parliament of the Republic of Ireland.

Middle East

15. Mr. Hicks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to visit the occupied territories and east Jerusalem.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend has at present no plans to do so.

21. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's relations with middle east countries.

Mr. Renton: We enjoy excellent relations with most countries in the middle east: these are founded on mutual interest and respect.

38. Mr. Walters asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress in the peace process in the middle east.

Mr. Renton: We shall continue to look for realistic ways forward towards the negotiation of a just and lasting settlement.

China

16. Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's relations with China.

88. Mr. Bright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of Anglo-Chinese relations.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Our relations with the People's Republic of China are excellent, as I saw for myself during the state visit to China in October. Exchanges in many fields, including trade, continue to expand fruitfully in both directions.

Anti-ballistic Missile Treaty

17. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications of the modernisation of Fylingdales for the anti-ballistic missile treaty.

Mr. Renton: As my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces told the House on 22 May, we are satisfied that the modernisation of RAF Fylingdales will be in full conformity with US obligations under the ABM treaty.

41. Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions Her Majesty's Government have had with the United States Administration on the interpretation of the anti-ballistic missile treaty.

59. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place between Her Majesty's Government and the United States Administration on the interpretation of the anti-ballistic missile treaty.

74. Mr. James Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the United States Secretary of State, since the Reykjavik talks, on the applicability of the anti-ballistic missile treaty to strategic defence initiative developments.

Mr. Renton: We regularly hold discussions with the US Administration on a range of political military issues, for example, when my right hon. and learned Friend met Mr. Shultz in Vienna. The ABM treaty, to which the UK is not a party, is raised in the course of these discussions as appropriate.

Argentina

18. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement about the proposal of President Alfonsin on 18 November to end the state of hostilities in the south Atlantic.

Mr. Eggar: The specific points in the Argentine declaration of 17 November are all conditional on negotiations on sovereignty. As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister stated on 18 November, we are not prepared to negotiate sovereignty.

44. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about Anglo-Argentine relations with special reference to the south Atlantic.

57. Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on non-negotiability of the sovereignty and self-determination of the Falkland Islanders in the light of the recent offer made by the Government of Argentina.

Mr. Eggar: We shall continue to seek more normal relations with Argentina, while honouring our commitments to defend the Falkland Islanders' right to self-determination. We are disappointed that Argentina continues to refuse to co-operate on matters of practical importance to us both. In addition, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Berwick-Upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) earlier today.

Syria

19. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's current relations with Syria.

Mr. Renton: Following the break in diplomatic relations with Syria on 24 October, a small British interests section remains in Damascus as part of the embassy of Australia, which has agreed to protect British interests in Syria.

68. Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to discuss relations with Syria with the Government of France.

Mr. Renton: The French Foreign Minister and my right hon. and learned Friend discussed Syria at the Anglo French summit on 21 November. We are in regular contact and will continue to exchange views on Syria as necessary.

80. Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of EEC measures against Syria.

Mr. Renton: The measures agreed on 10 November reaffirmed the resolve of the Twelve to curb terrorism in all its forms and to send a clear message to Syria that its involvement in the Hindawi affair was absolutely unacceptable.

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the reaction of the Soviet authorities to evidence from Her Majesty's Government that the Syrian Government are involved in terrorism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The Soviet authorities have questioned the weight of our conclusive evidence of Syrian official involvement in the Hindawi affairs which my right hon. and learned Friend discussed with Mr. Shevardnadze on 4 November. We have provided a detailed account of this to the Soviet authorities and hope that on reflection they will accept the force of our case.

Mr. Coleman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assurances Her Majesty's Government have received from their Common Market counterparts regarding their policy towards putting pressure on Syria to obtain the release of hostages in the Lebanon.

Mr. Renton: We have not sought the assurances described by the hon. Member. We are in close touch with our partners in the Twelve, especially those whose nationals are among those missing in Lebanon, and continue to do all we can to obtain news of the hostages.

Nuclear Weapons

20. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government have any evidence that the Soviet Union has contravened the moratorium on nuclear weapons testing which it initiated in August 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No.

79. Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards the elimination of all nuclear weapons by 1996.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and President Reagan agreed at their meeting at Camp David on 15 November that NATO's strategy of forward defence and flexible response would continue to require effective nuclear deterrence based on a mix of systems.

Falklands Fisheries

22. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the implications of the extent to which the exclusive fishing zone around the Falkland Islands overlaps the 200-mile territorial limit claimed by Argentina for the possibilities of increased tension in the area.

Mr. Eggar: The boundaries of the Falkland Islands interim conservation and management zone fully respect the rules of international law governing the delimitation of maritime jurisdiction between neighbours. We therefore see no reason why the choice of the zone's boundaries should increase tension in the area.

Soviet Union

23. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has had discussions with the Soviet authorities in recent weeks concerning human rights.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend raised human rights with the Soviet Foreign Minister, Mr. Shevardnadze, at his meeting with him in Vienna on 4 November. We shall continue to take every suitable opportunity to raise with the Soviet authorities our concerns on this score.

26. Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will indicate the number of occasions since June 1983 that he has raised the issue of human rights with the Soviet Government.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend has raised the issue of human rights with Soviet leaders on 10 occasions since June 1983, and most recently on 4 November with Mr. Shevardnadze in Vienna. We will continue to take every suitable opportunity to represent to the Soviet authorities the extent of public and parliamentary concern about their performance on this most important issue.

77. Mr. Gourlay asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his recent meeting with Mr. Shevardnadze, the Soviet Foreign Minister.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Terlezki) on 18 November, at column 143.

87. Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what pressure is being brought on the Soviet Government concerning their breaches of human rights under the Helsinki agreement.

Mr. Renton: We and our Western partners raise human rights abuses regularly with the Soviet authorities at the CSCE follow up meeting in Vienna. We also do so in bilateral contacts.

Iran

24. Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the United States Secretary of State on the supply of arms to Iran.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend has not discussed arms supplies to Iran at any of his recent meetings with the United States Secretary of State.

28. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's relationship with Iran.

56. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom relations with Iran.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) on 18 November, at column 145.

72. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to make any further representations to the United States Government concerning arms deals with Iran.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to do so.

SALT 2

25. Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made on behalf of Her Majesty's Government to the United States Government regarding the SALT 2 treaty.

32. Mr. James Lamond asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made on behalf of Her Majesty's Government to the United States Government regarding the SALT 2 treaty.

69. Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the United States Government's compliance with the SALT 2 treaty.

Mr. Renton: We have repeatedly made it clear that the SALT agreements should continue to be observed by both sides. We have recognised the United States concerns about Soviet non-compliance and have urged the Soviet authorities on many occasions to take action to allay these concerns. We regret the lack of substantive Soviet response. We look forward to further consultations with the United States Administration on these and related issues.

Drug Liaison Officers (India)

27. Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest position in relation to the proposal to station two drug liaison officers in India; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: As I told my right hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point (Sir B. Braine) on 21 November, the Indian Government have agreed to the postings of the drug liaison officers, who will take up their posts as soon as their personal arrangements have been completed.

78. Mr. Rathbone asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had recently with the Indian Government regarding their refusal to allow two British drug officers to be posted in Delhi and Bombay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: As I told my right hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point (Sir Bernard Braine) on 21 November, the Indian Government have informed us that the postings of drug liaison officers to Delhi and Bombay can now take place; and they will do so as soon as the officers concerned have completed their personal arrangements. We welcome this development.

Disarmament

29. Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the latest negotiations on arms control.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's statement of 15 November, agreed with President Reagan, set out the priorities for arms control after Reykjavik. A copy of the statement has been placed in the Library of the House.

34. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of the mutual and balanced force reduction talks in Vienna.

55. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about recent progress at those disarmament and security conferences at which the United Kingdom is represented.

Mr. Renton: During the 40th round of the mutual and balanced force reduction talks in Vienna, which opened on 25 September, Britain and her allies have continued to press for a serious response from the Warsaw Pact to the Western initiative of December 1985. Although the Warsaw pact agreed the principle of on-site inspection at the Stockholm conference on disarmament in Europe, it has shown little flexibility on this at MBFR. Nor has it shown willingness to exchange detailed information on force levels, which is the other principle issue under discussion at Vienna.

In the chemical weapons negotiations we are pressing for further progress on verification issues. Although the next session of the conference on disarmament only formally reconvenes on 4 February 1987, we will continue to seek agreement to the United Kingdom initiative on challenge inspection during intersessional work.

75. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what responses there have been to the United Kingdom's compromise proposal on verification of a chemical weapons ban at the conference on disarmament in Geneva.

Mr. Renton: The reaction of other delegations to the conference on disarmament has been generally encouraging. We have particularly welcomed a number of public expressions of support. The United Kingdom proposals are currently the subject of detailed discussion among delegations in Geneva.

East-West Relations

30. Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current East-West relations.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave the right hon. Member for Glasgow, Rutherglen (Mr. MacKenzie) on 29 October, at column 171. We are pressing the Soviet Union at the Vienna Meeting for progress on human rights and contacts.

Egypt

31. Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to visit Egypt.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend last visited Egypt in January 1984. He hopes to visit Egypt again, but has no plans to do so at present. I visited Egypt in September this year.

Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe

33. Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response Her Majesty's Government have made to the memorandum giving new life to the Helsinki accords signed by opposition and human rights representatives from eastern Europe and submitted to the conference on security and co-operation in Europe in Vienna.

Mr. Renton: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to an appeal signed by individuals in four eastern European countries published at the time of the 30th anniversary of the 1956 Hungarian uprising. In a statement on 24 October, my right hon. and learned Friend welcomed the appeal as a courageous statement of belief in traditional European values, and noted that the Vienna CSCE meeting provided an opportunity for participating states to give further effect to those values. A copy of his statement has been placed in the Library of the House.

50. Dr. Blackburn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters have been raised by the United Kingdom delegation at the Helsinki review conference in Vienna; and whether any progress has been made in the area of human rights.

Mr. Renton: Our delegation has raised a wide range of issues, including those relevant to Soviet and east European human rights performance. It is too early to say whether our efforts will result in real advances in the area of human rights.

91. Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the subject of immigration and freedom of movement has been discussed at the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe in Vienna; and whether any progress has been made in the discussion.

Mr. Renton: Yes, by our Delegation and by others. The head of the Soviet CSCE delegation in Vienna has referred to newly published Soviet legislation relating to travel, which we shall study carefully, but which at first sight does not appear to introduce relaxations.

Palestinian People

35. Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to the answer of the Prime Minister on 18 November, Official Report, column 445, he will define proper representatives of the Palestinian people.

Mr. Renton: It is for the Palestinians to choose their representatives: such representation should permit the authentic voice of the Palestinians to be heard in peace talks.

Immigration

36. Mr. Brandon-Bravo asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of immigration controls overseas.

Mr. Eggar: The exercise of United Kingdom immigration controls at our posts overseas is performed firmly and fairly in accordance with the immigration rules.

89. Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many new entry clearance officers have been allocated to take up posts in Bombay; if they are already working; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Seven additional entry clearance officers have been allocated, of whom six are already in post.

Iraq

37. Dr. M. S. Miller asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government has made to the Government of Iraq about abuses of human rights in that country.

Mr. Renton: We take every opportunity to make our views known to the Iraqis. My right hon. and learned Friend raised the question of abuses of human rights with the Iraqi Foreign Minister when he saw him in New York in September, but received no satisfactory reply.

Law of the Sea Conference

39. Mr. James Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards the enforcement of the Final Act of the United Nations law of the sea conference.

Mr. Eggar: The Final Act of the United Nations law of the sea conference records the proceedings of the conference; the law of the sea convention and a number of resolutions are annexed to it.

As my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind) the then Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, told the House on 6 December 1984, we regard much of the convention as valuable, but we have objections to the proposed deep seabed mining regime. Even for states which have ratified or acceded to it, the convention comes into force only one year after deposit of 60 instruments of ratification or accession; only 32 such instruments have been deposited. But many states follow some of the practices laid down in the convention.

Soviet Jews

40. Mr. Burt asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the British delegation to the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe review meeting will raise during discussions in Vienna the subject of religious contacts and the difficulties experienced by Soviet Jews in obtaining prayer books and other religious literature; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Our delegation has already done so. Religious freedoms will remain high among our concerns at the Vienna CSCE follow-up meeting.

Mr. Vanunu

42. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further discussions the Government have had with the Israeli Government concerning the departure from the United Kingdom of Mr. Vanunu.

Mr. Renton: There have been no such discussions since 13 November.

67. Mr. Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to make any further representations to the Israeli Government concerning Mr. Mordechai Vanunu.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend has at present no plans to do so.

British Hostages (Lebanon)

43. Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest information about the fate of British citizens held as hostages in the Lebanon.

Mr. Renton: Regrettably, we still have no hard information on the whereabouts of the British hostages in Lebanon. We are doing everything possible to obtain news that might help to resolve these cases.

64. Mr. Campbell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what help the Government of Saudi Arabia has given Her Majesty's Government relating to the release of British hostages in Lebanon.

Mr. Renton: The Government of Saudi Arabia have no direct involvement in the problems of British hostages kidnapped in Beirut. Saudi Arabia is aware, as are other Governments in the area, of our concern over British hostages in Lebanon.

53. Mr. Leadbitter asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has assessed the degree of influence of Iran over Lebanese groups holding hostages; and what steps are being taken to secure the release of these hostages.

Mr. Renton: We keep under continuous review all developments that might affect British hostages in Lebanon and continue to do all we can to obtain information on their whereabouts and the identity of their kidnappers.

Central America

45. Mr. Jim Spicer asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government have any evidence of Soviet intervention in Central America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The presence of Soviet military personnel and massive arms supplies are evidence of Soviet intervention in Nicaragua. Military supplies include substantial numbers of Mil-24 helicopter gunships, tanks, armoured veicles, artillery and SA-7 surface-to-air missiles. This extensive military support for Nicaragua, from a country whose record hardly suggests it is interested in the development of genuine democracy, is of legitimate concern to her neighbours.

Falkland Islands

46. Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to discuss matters relating to the Falkland Islands with the Government of the United States of America.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no specific plans at present to discuss the Falklands with members of the United States Government.

Nicaragua

47. Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Nicaraguan Government about British citizens claiming to have entered Nicaraguan territory with the Contra forces.

Mr. Eggar: None.

65. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to meet members of the Nicaraguan Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The next occasion for a meeting with Central American Foreign Ministers, including the Nicaraguan Foreign Minister, will be at the EC/Central America/Contadora Foreign Ministers' meeting due to be held at Guatemala City in February 1987.

Council of Foreign Ministers

48. Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the main matters to be discussed at the next meeting of the European Economic Community Council of Foreign Ministers.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) on 28 November at column 381, which sets out the agenda for meetings of the Council of Ministers in December.

Philippines

49. Mr. Ray Powell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current United Kingdom-Philippines relations.

Mr. Renton: United Kingdom-Philippines relations are very good. We have followed closely recent developments in the Philippines, and with our European partners have made clear our strong political support for President Aquino and the restoration of democracy there. The Foreign Affairs Committee paid a useful visit to Manila in April. We have doubled our bilateral aid to the Philippines since Mrs. Aquino became President and assistance from the European Community has also significantly increased. President Aquino has accepted, in principle, the Prime Minister's invitation to visit the United Kingdom.

Iran-Iraq (Arms Supplies)

51. Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to review Her Majesty's Government's policy on arms supplies to Iran and Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No. British policy remains as set out in the reply that my right hon. and learned Friend gave the right hon. Member for Tweedale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) on 29 October 1985, at column 454.

Kenya

52. Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to seek to pay an official visit to Kenya.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at the moment to pay an official visit to Kenya.

India

58. Mr. Bidwell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of Anglo-Indian relations.

Mr. Eggar: Relations are close across a broad spectrum of activities.

Afghan Refugees

60. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of Pakistan about the Afghan refugee problem; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: During his visit to Pakistan in April my right hon. and learned Friend listened to representations from Afghan refugees and discussed the matter with the Pakistan Government. We remain in contact.

The continuing flow of refugees into Pakistan poses real problems and my hon. Friend the Minister for overseas Development announced in Pakistan last week a further grant of £3·5 million to the UN High Commissioner for Refugees for refugee programmes in Pakistan.

Departmental Staff (Languages)

62. Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of his Department's overseas staff in (a) Japan speak fluent Japanese, (b) China speak fluent Chinese, (c) Iran speak fluent Farsi and (d) Iraq speak fluent Arabic.

Mr. Eggar: (a), 17; (b), 10; (c), 5; (d), 5.

President Museveni

63. Mr. Barnett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the recent state visit of President Museveni of Uganda.

Mrs. Chalker: President Museveni of Uganda visited the United Kingdom officially between 15 and 18 November. His programme included an audience of Her Majesty the Queen, and meetings with my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary, my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces, my hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development and myself. The visit underlines the importance which we attach to the return of stability and prosperity to Uganda.

Reykjavik Summit

66. Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations took place between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the United States of America immediately prior to the Reykjavik summit.

Mr. Renton: As part of the continuous process of alliance consultation, senior United States officials briefed the North Atlantic Council shortly before the Reykjavik meeting between President Reagan and Mr. Gorbachev.

Saudi Arabia

71. Mr. White asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's current relations with Saudi Arabia.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Relations with Saudi Arabia are excellent. There have been a number of ministerial visits to Saudi Arabia during the year. Further visits are expected early in the new year. The hon. Member will also be aware that Their Royal Highnesses The Prince and Princess of Wales recently paid a highly successful visit to Saudi Arabia. In addition, King Fahd of Saudi Arabia will be making a state visit to Britain in 1987 at the invitation of Her Majesty The Queen.

Afghanistan

73. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations Her Majesty's Government has made to the Soviet Government about human rights in Afghanistan.

Mr. Eggar: When my right hon. and learned Friend met Mr. Sheyardnadze on 15 July he drew his attention to the suffering he had witnessed during his visit to Afghan refugee camps and hospitals in Pakistan in April. We have recently drawn the attention of the Soviet embassy in London to our deep concern over the serious violations of human rights in Afghanistan, which have again been documented by the United Nations special rapporteur in his recent report to the General Assembly.

82. Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the implications of the recent withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan.

Mr. Eggar: The claimed withdrawal in October of six regiments of Soviet forces in Afghanistan was stage-managed, had minimal military significance and, we believe, was in part fabricated. Despite the "withdrawal" of two motor rifle regiments, for example, we do not believe there has been a reduction in the number of such regiments in Afghanistan. Over 110,000 Soviet troops continue to prosecute a bitter war of occupation. The key to peace is their complete and early withdrawal.

Hong Kong

76. Mr. Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foeign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will make a statememt of progress on drafting a constitution for Hong Kong.

Mr. Renton: Hong Kong's current constitutional arrangements are contained in the Hong Kong Letters Patent 1917 to 1986 and the Hong Kong Royal Instructions 1917 to 1986. These arrangements will end when British sovereignty and jurisdiction over Hong Kong ends on 1 July 1997. From that date, Hong Kong will be a special administrative region of the People's Republic of China. A Basic Law of the SAR is now being drafted by a Committee of the National People's Congress of the PRC, in close consultation with Hong Kong people.

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many men were imprisoned in Hong Kong in each of the years 1984 and 1985 for consensual homosexual acts with (a) males between the ages of 16 and 21 years and (b) males over the age of 21 years; and for each category, and each year, what were the maximum, minimum and average sentences served by such men.

Mr. Renton: The information requested by the hon. Member is not readily available. However, in 1984 one male between the age of 16 and 20 was sentenced to imprisonment of three to six months for homosexual offences. Two males ages 21 or over were sentenced to imprisonment, one for six to 12 months, the other for 12 to 18 months. In 1985 no males under 21 were sentenced to imprisonment for homosexual offences. Two males over 21 were sentenced to imprisonment, one for six to 12 months, the other for 12 to 18 months.

NATO (Secretary General)

81. Mr. Sackville asaked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to meet the secretary general of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation in the near future.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend will be meeting Lord Carrington at the ministerial meeting of the North Atlantic Council which will take place at Brussels from 11-12 December.

Bonn

83. Mr. Carttiss asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects next to visit Bonn.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no immediate plans to do so.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

84. Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the current state of proceedings under the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Steady progress is being made in implementing the Anglo-Irish Agreement. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland regularly places in the Library of the House copies of the statements issued after meetings of the Intergovernmental Conference.

Brunei

85. Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current United Kingdom relations with the Sultanate of Brunei.

Mr. Renton: We continue to enjoy warm and friendly relations with the Sultanate of Brunei.

Poland

86. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of relations with Poland.

Mr. Renton: Since the visit of my right hon. and learned Friend to Warsaw in April 1985 we have maintained an active dialogue with the Polish authorities in which our concern for human rights and the need for national reconciliation within Poland have played a major part. Together with our partners in the Twelve we welcomed the release of Polish political detainees in September as a step in this direction. A copy of that statement has been placed in the Library of the House. My right hon. and learned Friend had bilateral talks with the Polish Foreign Minister in September during the United Nations General Assembly and we hope to have further contacts with the Polish Government at ministerial level in the new year. I am glad to note that a group of right hon. and hon. Members are visiting Poland this week under the auspices of the Inter-Parliamentary Union.

Eastern Europe

92. Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to bring the nations of eastern Europe into closer formal relationships with the European Economic Community.

Mrs. Chalker: The Commission is in contact with the individual European members of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance. The Foreign Affairs Council of 27 October confirmed the importance of mutually beneficial commercial and economic links with eastern European countries. The Council reviewed progress on a number of bilateral discussions in train between the Community and individual states concerned, as well as considering its reaction to the CMEA's expressed wish to enter into official relations with the Community. On 24 November, the Council approved a negotiating mandate for an EC-Czechoslovakia trade agreement.

Cambodia

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn of 24 November, Official Report, columns 267-68, if he will set out the items and amounts of each which constitute the £200,000 in 1986-87 pledged to Cambodia in humanitarian assistance.

Mr. Renton: I regret that there was an error in the answer I gave to my hon. Friend on 26 November and that the figure I gave for humanitarian assistance should have read £100,000 not £200,000 as given. This has been pledged not to Cambodia but to the non-Communist resistance. No final decision has yet been taken on the items to be provided in 1986-87, but we anticipate that, as for last year, medicines will be the major item.

European Single Act

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, which European Community countries have not ratified the European Single Act.

Mrs. Chalker: The United Kingdom, Denmark and Belgium have already ratified the Single European Act. The other nine Community Countries expect to ratify by the end of the year.

Iran-Iraq War

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about damage done to British ships in the Iran-Iraq war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Since the beginning of the conflict two British-registered vessels have been damaged in air attacks in the Gulf.

On 10 July 1984 an Iranian helicopter attack on the MV British Renown slightly damaged the starboard tank. Fortunately there were no casualties.

On 23 September 1986 the MV Pawnee was attacked by an Iranian helicopter. An unexploded missile lodged in the engine room causing slight damage. Again, there were no casualties.

We condemn all unprovoked attacks on innocent, unarmed merchant vessels, and we have repeatedly called on both sides to refrain from further attacks.

Nezar Hindawi

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of the Hindawi case, he intends to propose any changes in the convention on diplomatic immunity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: No. We agree with the conclusion reached in December 1984 by the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House of Commons that it would be wrong to regard amendment of the Vienna convention as the solution to the problem of abuse of diplomatic immunities, given the difficulties of achieving any restrictive amendment to the convention and the doubtful net benefit to the United Kingdom of so doing. A fuller statement of our position is given in the White Paper on Diplomatic Privileges and Immunities" (Cmnd. 9497).

State Security

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is represented at the court proceedings in Sydney on the Wright book.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: No. The Government are represented by Australian counsel, instructed by the Treasury Solicitor. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is fully involved in consultations in London about the case.

Denis Charles Lehane

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning the treatment in the United States of America during 1984 of Denis Charles Lehane, a United Kingdom citizen; and what representations he has made to the authorities in the United States of America concerning allegations made by and on behalf of Denis Charles Lehane about his treatment in the United States during 1984.

Mr. Eggar: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has received seven approaches from or on behalf of Mr. Lehane. No representations have been made to the authorities in the United States of America. Mr. Lehane has recourse to the courts of the United States if he so wishes.

SCOTLAND

Rents

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the average level of (a) local authority rents and (b) fair rents registered for unfurnished lettings in Scotland in each of the years from 1979 to 1986, indicating the percentage increase in each on an annual and a cumulative basis; and how these increases compare with the movement of the retail price index over the same period.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is given in the table below. Comparisons of average rents registered between one year and the next can be misleading because of the large variation in property types registered at different points in time. Similar considerations can invalidate comparisons between the movements in averages for registrations and local authority rents.

Statistics

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if, in respect of the statistics kept and published by his Department, he will publish in the Official Report any changes since 1979 in (a) the statistical series which are published, including those which have been introduced and those which have been dropped, (b) the basis on which any elements in the statistics are estimated, calculated or presented, (c) the periods over which, and the dates on which the series are collected or published and (d) any other respects in the ways in which the statistics are collected, recorded, presented, evaluated, or published; and if he will explain the reasons for any such changes.

Mr. Rifkind: The changes in the statistics kept and published by the Scottish Office since 1979 affect the series listed in the following table:

Statistics	Changes
School Leavers	Coverage extended in 1981, 1983 and 1984 to reflect changes in the education system.
Further Education Statistics	Coverage extended in 1980 and 1982.
School Leavers Statistics	Coverage extended in 1986.
Placing Requests	Statistical return introduced in 1982; coverage extended in 1984.
Community Education Statistics	Coverage restricted in 1980 (following Rayner Review).
Joint Manpower Watch	Seasonally adjusted quarterly figures introduced in 1981.
"Rates and Rateable Values in Scotland"	Last published in 1982. (Information available in CIPFA's "Rating Review").
"Criminal Statistics Scotland" (Annual volume)	Last published 1982. Replaced by series of statistical bulletins (from 1983 onwards).
Police Detention Statistics	Introduced 1981 to monitor section 2 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980.
Fine Defaulters Statistics	More detail introduced 1983 on defaulters received into penal establishments.

Statistics	Changes
Statistics of initial breath tests	Not collected centrally after: 1981—previous findings of guilt for persons proceeded against 1982—results of applications for removal of disqualification from driving; and 1984—initial breath tests administered by police.
Statistics of previous convictions of those received into penal establishments	Not published after 1983 due to unreliability.
"Scottish Transport Statistics"	Statistics extended in each of 1985 and 1986 publications.
Radioactivity Statistics	Annual statistics introduced in statistical bulletins in 1984 for both emissions and environmental levels.
"Scottish Housing Statistics"	Quarterly volume ceased 1982. Replaced by annual volume and series of quarterly and occasional statistical bulletins.
Household Projections	Biennial frequency adopted instead of annual in 1983 (following Rayner Report).
Homelessness Statistics	Reduction in range of statistics collected and published, 1982 (following Rayner Report).
Review of Housing Statistics	1985, across the board review, resulting in more relevant information with some forms dropped and some extended.
Index of Industrial Production	Revised and rebased (1980 base) in 1984. More detailed indices published 1985.
Gross Domestic Product (Output based)	Estimates for Scotland first published 1986.
December Agricultural Census	Sample census introduced in 1983 instead of full census.
Costs and Earnings of Scottish Fishing Fleet	Annual survey results first published 1981.
Scottish Salmon and Sea Trout Catches	Detailed results for 1952-81 published 1983-84. Subsequent annual figures in statistical bulletins.

Changes in the basis of compilation, presentation and publication of statistical series are made from time to time in response to the Government's requirements for statistical information, changes in the administrative systems on which some series are based, the development of new statistical techniques and technological development affecting the compilation and dissemination of statistical data. When such changes are made they are fully documented in the relevant statistical publications.

Forestry

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest available figure for total receipts from the Forestry Commission's disposal programme relating to plantations and planting land.

Mr. John MacKay: Receipts from the sale of Forestry Commission plantations and plantable land from the passing of the Forestry Act in July 1981 to 21 October 1986 amount to £54·2 million.

WALES

Beef Variable Premium

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy towards the retention of the beef variable premium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: As part of this year's price fixing decisions, the Council of Ministers agreed that the European Commission's proposals for reforming the beef regime should be studied further with a view to decisions being taken by 31 December 1986. The regulations governing the beef variable premium scheme were accordingly extended to that date.

The Commission's proposals for changes to the beef regime include a Community-wide premium scheme which is intended to replace the variable premium. The Commission has, however, undertaken to propose a continuation of the variable premium scheme, taking account of the budgetary situation, if changes to the regime are not agreed in time to be brought into effect by the end of the year. Discussions on the proposals are continuing and we are pressing the merits of a slaughter premium scheme in that context.

Rents

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing the average level of (a) local authority rents and (b) fair rents registered for unfurnished lettings in Wales in each of the years from 1979 to 1986, indicating the percentage increase in each case on an annual and cumulative basis; and how these increases compare with the movement of the retail price index over the same period.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information requested is shown in the following table:

[1] Based on registrations during the first 6 months of each year except for 1979 and 1980 which are annual averages.

[2] Data on registered fair rents are analysed by the Department of the Environment. The range and types of property presented for registration vary from year to year. More accurate measurement of increases in these registered rents is obtained by comparing rents for properties which have been registered previously and for which there have been no material changes in either the terms of the tenancy or in the dwelling's condition. The percentage increases for 1982 represent the increase over the previous 3 years since 1979, while those for 1984 and 1986 cover increases of their respective preceding 2 years. The implied annual rates of increase are set out in the following table:

Estimated percentage annual increase in registered rents

Statistics

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Wales if, in respect of the statistics kept and published by his Department, he will publish in the Official Report any changes since 1979 in (a) the statistical series which are published, including those which have been introduced and those which have been dropped, (b) the basis on which any elements in the statistics are estimated, calculated or presented, (c) the periods over which, and the dates on which the series are collected or published and (d) any other respects in the ways in which the statistics are collected, recorded, presented, evaluated, or published; and if he will explain the reasons for any such changes.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and will place a copy of the letter in the Library of the House.

Perinatal Mortality

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to publish the Welsh Office report, "The Perinatal Mortality Initiative"; when the report was completed; what extra funds he will make available to tackle the problem in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: "The Perinatal Mortality Initiative" report will be published very soon and I shall make a statement at that time.

Local Authorities (Capital Allocations)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales when he will announce the capital allocations for individual local authorities.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: On 26 November I announced that the total capital allocations for 1987-88 in Wales would be £369 million. On the same day, authorities were informed of the allocations that I have made for housing (£154 million). A package of special urban programme schemes totalling £2·4 million was announced on 27 November.

The major remaining component of local authority capital allocations is distributed on a formula basis. These allocations, together with those for major road schemes and projects of regional or national importance and special projects, will be notified to local authorities today. In total they amount to almost £188 million. Authorities will then have the information that they need to plan their detailed capital programmes for the coming year. Allocations for remaining schemes under the urban programme, totalling almost £24 million, will be announced early in the new year.

Details of allocations for individual authorities have been placed in the Library.

DEFENCE

Beam Technology

93. Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the information available to his Department on current progress in eastern Europe with the development of beam technology.

Mr. Stanley: The Soviet Union maintains extensive and vigorous research and development programmes in the high fields of high energy laser, particle beam, and radio frequency beam technologies. Other eastern European work is less advanced and is confined to low energy laser applications. The Soviet Union is advancing only slowly in application of bean technologies to civil industrial processes. My Department believes higher priority has been given to military applications. In particular, I would refer my hon. Friend to my Department's paper "The Soviet Ballistic Missile Defence Programme" which was placed in the Library of the House on 26 November 1985.

Airborne Early Warning System

Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent his Department is lending its support to the promotion of the Nimrod system to France and other interested nations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have assisted GEC Avionics Ltd. in its promotion of the Nimrod mission system avionics to overseas countries, for example through the loan of aircraft for demonstrations, and will continue to do so to the maximum extent possible.

Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the offset work offered by Boeing in its airborne early warning bid is new work to British industry rather than work already placed in the United Kingdom, or work which would be open to tender of British industry regardless of the purchase of airborne warning and control system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the event of a decision to buy the Boeing airborne warning and control system we shall monitor the Boeing company's proposals for meeting its offset commitment very carefully, with due regard to these factors.

Royal Navy Vessels

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether private shiprepair companies are currently able to tender for contracts for Royal Naval vessels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes. Apart from HMS Manchester—at present in an Australian yard—HMS Otter, HMS Wilton, HMS Wotton and HMS Carron are in British private shiprepair yards. Tenders have been invited for work on HMS Caroline, HMS Dovey and HMS Hunter, and a tender will be issued in the next few weeks for work on HMS Smiter. In addition there are 18 Royal Fleet Auxiliary, Royal Maritime Auxiliary Service, Army and Royal Air Force vessels in private sector yards, and another 14 invitations to tender. Seventeen more invitations to tender should be issued in the next four weeks or so.

Oberon

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average time taken and final price for the last three refits of Oberon class submarines in Rosyth dockyard.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Only two 'O' class refits have so far been completed at Rosyth dockyard. That for HMS Odin cost £26·5 million and took 180 weeks. This included 36 weeks when all resources were transferred to more urgent work arising from the Falklands crisis. HMS Onyx cost £23·895 million and took 127 weeks.

King Hussein

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement about his meeting on 23 November with King Hussein of Jordan; and what discussion took place regarding the war between Iran and Iraq.

Mr. Younger: During the course of a most valuable visit to Jordan from 22 to 24 November, I had useful and friendly discussions with a number of senior figures and, on 23 November, with King Hussein. In my meeting with the King, views were exchanged on regional issues and on Anglo-Jordanian relations on defence matters. We both expressed satisfaction at the excellent state of our relations, which are founded on a firm basis of friendship and trust. The details of my talks in Jordan remain confidential.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the value and amount and type of Government equipment sold recently in the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I shall answer shortly.

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the television service for the Falkland Islands garrison to be available.

Mr. Stanley: I am glad to say that the new taped television service will open on 4 December and will be run by the Services Sound and Vision Corporation (SSVC) from its new broadcasting complex at Mount Pleasant in the Falklands. SSVC will be transmitting for four hours each day a blend of taped current BBC and ITV programmes.

The new service will be a welcome addition to the existing radio broadcasting services that we already provide for members of the Armed Forces serving in the Falkland Islands, especially as it will be in time for Christmas.

Military Hospitals

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether the existing and planned United States contingency military hospitals will admit injured service peope of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries other than Britain in time of war;

(2) whether the existing and planned United States contingency military hospitals will admit injured British service people in time of war.

Mr. Freeman: Although United States contingency hospitals are primarily designed for use by United States military personnel, all casualties, from any NATO country, both military and civilian, would be admitted in an emergency. The use of United States contingency hospitals would be based on the joint plans prepared in consultation with the United Kingdom emergency services.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether Her Majesty's Government have plans to build military hospitals solely for the use of injured British service people.

Mr. Freeman: No.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether Her Majesty's Government is required to meet any of the costs involved in the use of Royal Air Force, Upwood as a hospital which would be activated in an emergency by the United States of America.

Mr. Freeman: All costs, except the use of the site for RAF Upwood, which is provided rent free under the terms of the United States/United Kingdom LOC arrangement, are borne by the United States.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Alternative Crops

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to encourage farmers to use alternative crops for land to cereals currently in over supply within the European Economic Community.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Meat and Livestock Commission

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about the performance of the meat promotional activities of the Meat and Livestock Commission.

Mr. Gummer: Since the Meat and Livestock Commission completed the reorganisation of its work on meat promotion, I have received one representation on this matter which was forwarded by my hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, North (Mr. Baker) on behalf of a constituent.

Statistics

Mr. Gould asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, in respect of the statistics kept and published by his Department, he will publish in the Official Report any changes since 1979 in (a) the statistical series which are published, including those which have been introduced and those which have been dropped, (b) the basis on which any elements in the statistics are estimated, calculated or presented, (c) the periods over which, and the dates on which the series are collected or published and (d) any other respects in the ways in which the statistics are collected, recorded, presented, evaluated or published; and if he will explain the reasons for any such changes.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Changes in the basis of compilation, presentation and publication of statistical series are made from time to time in response to the Government's requirements for statistical information, changes in the administrative systems on which the series are based, the development of new statistical techniques and technological developments affecting the compilation and dissemination of statistical material.

My Department, for example, introduced in February 1984 two new series measuring farming income. Details were published in the "Annual Review of Agriculture 1984" (Cmnd. 9137). Many other changes, mainly minor ones, have been introduced and documented over the years, but to bring all this information together in one source would involve disproportionate cost.

Battery Hens

Sir Peter Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in implementing the European Community directive laying down minimum welfare standards for battery hens.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We propose to implement this directive by regulations made under section 2(3) of the Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1968. Statutory consultation procedures have today been set in train by circulating our detailed proposals to interested organisations. Following consideration of comments received, draft regulations will be laid before both Houses of Parliament for approval in good time for these welfare measures to apply from 1 January 1988.

Monetary Coefficients

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the current levels of monetary coefficients applied in respect of sales of beef under regulation 2670/86 and sales of butter under regulation 765/86, expressed in terms of pence per pound.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 2 December 1986]: The monetary coefficients applied to export refunds on sales from the United Kingdom to European third countries of frozen beef forequarters under regulation 2670/86, and of butter of a fat content of 82 per cent. under regulation 765/86, currently increase these refunds by 4·62p per pound and 12·61p per pound, respectively.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the purpose of applying monetary coefficients to sales of food from European Economic Community stockpiles; and if he will make a statement explaining the manner in which these coefficients are calculated and applied.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 2 December 1986]: Monetary coefficients are applied to export refunds, which are set in ecus, in order to ensure that the refunds are of approximately equal value in the national currencies of all member states. The monetary coefficient is calculated using the following formula:

$$\text{monetary coefficient} = \frac{100\text{-MCA\%}}{100}$$

Decommissioned Vessels

Mr. Steen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what checks are made by his Department to ensure that fishing boats which are the subject of a decommissioning grant paid by his Department remain decommissioned and are not subsequently used following the transfer of a licence from another vessel to the decommissioned vessel; if any changes to the procedures are being considered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 2 December 1986]: Payment of decommissioning grant is not made until the vessel has been permanently withdrawn from fishing in Community waters and any licences issued in respect of that vessel cancelled.

The subsequent activities of decommissioned vessels are closely monitored by the sea fish inspectorate and all applications for licence transfer are carefully checked against lists of such vessels. I am satisfied that the existing procedures are sufficient to ensure that no decommissioned vessel would receive a licence.

Fishing Industry (Aid)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy towards grant aids being given towards the building of new pursers or new fishing vessels with a pursing capability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 1 December 1986, c. 471]: It has been the policy of successive Governments, since 1974, not to grant aid the construction of purse seiners or fishing vessels with a pursing capability. This policy is kept under review in the light of changing circumstances within the fisheries sector.

Intervention Stores

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the quantity of butter in European Economic Community intervention which is two years old or more; what is the estimated value of such butter expressed in pence per pound; and what is the estimated cost of storing it for the average period in which such stocks have been in intervention.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 1 December 1986, c. 473]: As at 25 November 1986, 280,363 tonnes of butter in intervention in the European Community were two years old or more. The average book value of these stocks, representing the balance of the original purchase price not yet recovered by member states, is approximately 50p per lb. But the price likely to be realised at the time of disposal will be considerably lower in the present state of the market. It is estimated that the cost of storing this butter for the average period it has been in intervention is about £148 million.

EMPLOYMENT

North-West Region

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General what have been the major causes of the loss of jobs in the north-west area in the last seven years.

Mr. Lee: The principal reason for the loss of jobs in the north-west area has been the decline in labour-intensive, traditional industries and the lower manning levels required by more efficient manufacturing processes. Lack of competitiveness due to overmanning and high labour costs contributed to this loss of jobs. Unemployment also reflects an increase in the number of people seeking work.

Benefit Offices (Ramp Access)

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Paymaster General how many unemployment benefit offices do not have ramp access for disabled people; and if there are any plans to increase the number of unemployment benefit offices with wheel chair access.

Mr. Lee: Information is not available in the form requested. Many unemployment benefit offices already provide wheelchair access, but where this is not available, and access is a problem, special alternative arrangements are made for disabled persons. The unemployment benefit service has plans for replacing or improving unsatisfactory offices, and these afford opportunities for improving access.

Restart

Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General whether he will make it his policy to recruit more restart counsellors to cope with the numbers of the long-term unemployed being interviewed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. The Manpower Services Commission, which is responsible for the restart programme, has not asked for any increase in the recruitment of restart counsellors and I see no need for such an increase.

Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General in what areas the long-term unemployed are being given counselling interviews lasting one hour or more.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There is no policy of giving longer interviews in some areas than in others. The length of interview depends on people's needs. Some people need and get interviews lasting over an hour. Others are shorter, the average being around 30 minutes.

Departmental Initiatives

Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General if he will list the new steps, measures, initiatives and policy developments of his Department over the past two years in chronological order.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Over the past two years my Department has continued to develop and implement programmes designed to help unemployed people, improve the workings of the labour market and encourage business growth and employment creation.

The main innovations since November 1984 are as follows:

Date	Development	Purpose
November 1984	Adult Training Strategy	To improve the quantity and quality of training and increase the supply of skills needed in modern industry.
	First Jobclubs pilot	To help unemployed people compete more effectively for jobs.
	Publication of Code of Good Practice on Employment of Disabled People	To advance the employment interests of disabled people and promote good practice.
March 1985	Publication of White Paper "Employment—The Challenge for the Nation"	To set the employment problem of the country in context and explain the Government's employment strategy.

	White Paper: "Education and Training for Young People"	Developments in YTS.
June 1985	Employment Protection Act provisions amended	Qualifying period for unfair dismissal extended to two years and industrial tribunals procedures changed — to achieve a better balance between employers' needs and workers' rights.
July 1985	Publication of White Paper "Lifting the Burden"	To identify areas where the removal of administrative burdens could help business and encourage job creation.
October 1985	Implementation of final sections of the Trade Union Act 1984	To make trade unions more democratic and responsive to members' views.
January 1986	Restart pilots set up	To test intensive programme of assistance for long-term unemployed people.
January 1986	Jobstart Allowance Scheme introduced	To help long-term unemployed start work and enabling them to take lower-paid jobs.
February 1986	Inner City Initiative set up inner city task forces	To achieve a more targeted impact on inner city areas and mobilise community and other resources in tackling employment environmental and social problems.
March 1986	New Workers Scheme introduced	To improve the employment prospects of young adults and those graduating from YTS.
April 1986	Action for Jobs initiative	To publicise facilities available to help employment and business and schemes to assist unemployed people.
	Loan Guarantee Scheme premium halved to 2½ per cent.	To improve small firms' access to finance.
	Two-year YTS	To improve the quality of training for young people and provide opportunities to work towards a recognised vocational qualification.
	Local Enterprise Agency Grant Scheme launched	To promote development of a network of viable local enterprise agencies.
May 1986	White Paper "Building Businesses. . .Not Barriers"	Reviewed progress made in relieving business of unnecessary administrative barriers and identified further areas where progress should be made.
	"Payment on Time" booklet launched	To encourage a more enlightened approach to bill payment practice.
June 1986	Document "Employment Growth into the 1990s: a strategy for the Labour Market" tabled jointly with Irish and Italian Governments	Proposals to combat unemployment in the European Community; in November 1986 resolution based on paper tabled for December Council.
	Greater private sector involvement in Community Programme	Currently developing with CBI greater private sector involvement.
July 1986	Publication of "Action for Jobs in Tourism"	Reviewed the steps taken to help strengthen tourism's contribution to employment.

Date	Development	Purpose
July 1986	Restart: nationwide extension
	White Paper "Working Together, Education and Training" included extension of Technical and Vocational Education Initiative pilot to national scheme from Autumn 1987	To give young people aged 14 to 18 access to wider and richer curriculum more relevant to the world of work.
	Announcement of "Headstart"	Joint initiative by Industrial Society, MSC and Inner Cities Initiative to provide enterprise and training and advice for 18 to 25-year-olds in inner city areas.
	Open College	To extend use of open learning through Broadcasting media.
August 1986	Implementation of the Wages Act	To repeal outdated Truck Acts; reform wages councils and abolish redundancy payment rebates for all but smallest firms so that resources can be used to encourage business and generate jobs.
	Enterprise Allowance Scheme rules changed	To make the scheme more accessible for those leaving other schemes and training courses.
September 1986	Improved availability test for unemployed benefit claimants	Introduced in reply to criticism from National Audit Office and Public Accounts Committee.
October 1986	National Council for Vocational Qualifications established	To create a new framework of national vocational qualifications in England, Wales and Northern Ireland.
	Better deal for ethnic minority young people in YTS	Guidelines to be set for desired improvements in ethnic minority participation in employer-led schemes from spring 1987.
	Prince of Wales Trust	Government will provide £6 million 1987-90 to help young entrepreneurs through advice, counselling and small amount of finance.
	Extension of Restart to six-month unemployed	Being tested in original pilot areas.
	Expansion of Jobclubs to 1,000 by April 1987, 2,000 by September 1987 if need continues	To develop Jobclub network to help those unemployed for more than six months.
November 1986	Sex Discrimination Act 1986 implemented	To improve sex discrimination and equal pay legislation.
	Pilot Job Training Scheme introduced	To test training provision geared to needs of long-term unemployed people.
	Publication of leaflet AIDS and Employment	Gives factual information about AIDS and guidance on industrial relations problems.
	Broughton Road project	Major experimental scheme to employ local people to refurbish a run-down street of Victorian buildings in Handsworth area of Birmingham. Joint project of DE/DoE/City Council/Tarmac Ltd.

There have been other smaller developments within existing programmes such as the £1 million given to the Newcastle city action team to aid employment in the area, and the United Kingdom 2000 project, under the community programme, launched in July 1986.

YTS

Mr. Knox asked the Paymaster General, whether the Government have agreed the levels of funding for YTS schemes in 1987.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Employment received last week the Manpower Services Commission's recommendations on the funding arrangements to apply in YTS in 1987-88, and he today approved all the commission's recommendations.

There will be no change in the management fee of £110 per place per year or in the basic grant of £160 per filled place per month. Special grants payable in addition to the basic grant will increase as follows (all the rates are per filled place per month):

	1986-87 £	1987-88 £
Premium grant	110	116·75
Information Technology Centres grant	110	116·75
Permanent additional funding for disabled young people	75	76·90

Ex-Mode B1 schemes which provide training for disadvantaged young people and information technology centres receive transitional funding to help cope with the move to two year YTS funding, and this will continue for a second year. The transitional funding arrangements in 1987-88 will be on the basis of detailed recommendations made by the commission, and take account of experience in two-year YTS so far.

The first-year allowance for trainees will increase from £27·30 a week to £28·50 per week; the second year allowance will remain unchanged at £35 per week; and trainees who spend more than £3 a week on travel will continue to have the excess reimbursed by the commission.

Since 1983, YTS has provided over a million young people with work-related training, and has opened up new prospects for jobs and qualifications. About 360,000 young people are expected to enter YTS next year and the MSC will be making available over 500,000 places in all. This latest settlement will bring the cost of YTS next year to around £1·1 billion—a major investment in training our future work force. I believe the funding arrangements for 1987-88 represent a realistic balance, which should encourage further the growth and development of a highly successful scheme.

Community Programme

Dr. McDonald asked the Paymaster General what was the number of married women in the community programme for each year since it started; and if he will also give the total number of participants.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 1 December 1986, c. 424]: The following table shows, for each year of operation of the community programme, the total number of entrants, the number of entrants who were women and, based upon a sample survey undertaken each year, the percentage of women on the programme who were married.

	Entrants	Women entrants	Percentage of women on the programme who are married
12 months to
September 1983	79,987	17,277	45
September 1984	147,221	33,861	50
September 1985	189,679	39,833	33
September 1986	294,111	67,646	[1]

ENERGY

Marine Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to ensure that within the last three years all existing platforms or technical equipment used to explore and exploit petroleum and natural gas in the North sea within the United Kingdom's jurisdiction operate using only the best available technology.

Mr. Alick Buchanan-Smith: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 28 November, at column 385, on the technical equipment aspects. Existing installations are under continuous review so that, where reasonably practicable, they may be modified to meet changing standards.

Sellafield

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy what reply has been sent to the Irish Government's call for the closure of Sellafield; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy has received no such call from the Irish Government.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the maximum distance at which radioactive contamination has been found from Sellafield in the past five years.

Mr. Goodlad: Because artificial radionuclides can be measured at extremely low concentrations, radioactivity arising from liquid discharges from Sellafield can be detected over considerable distances in water. The levels of activity which can be detected are of no significance and represent only a small fraction of the natural variations found in the levels of radioactivity in seawater.

Statistics

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, in respect of the statistics kept and published by his Department, he will publish in the Offical Report any changes since 1979 in (a) the statistical series which are published, including those which have been introduced and those which have been dropped, (b) the basis on which any elements in the statistics are estimated, calculated or presented, (c) the periods over which, and the dates on which the series are collected or published and (d) any other respects in the ways in which the statistics are collected, recorded, presented, evaluated or published; and if he will explain the reasons for any such changes.

Mr. Peter Walker: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Power Stations

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will describe the latest detailed six-year forecast of capital requirements supplied to his Department by the Central Electricity Generating Board; what are the approximate figures in respect of (a) building new power stations, (b) refurbishing or improving existing power stations and (c) improving the distribution and transmission system for each year of the period; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether the latest detailed six-year forecast of capital requirements supplied to his Department by the Central Electricity Generating Board contains specific provision for at least one new coal-fired power station to begin construction in that period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Electricity demand forecasts and ways in which these might be met by new generation capacity and —or plant refurbishment are under continuing consideration by the CEGB. My right hon. Friend has received no applications for consent to new power stations other than Sizewell B. Any necessary development of the transmission system will depend on decisions about generation. Improvements to the distribution system are for the area electricity boards.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will name the power stations for which investment approval has been given since 1979, stating the date of approval in each case; whether for each such power station his Department received a detailed analysis of alternative siting costs; whether his Department received other information on alternative siting options; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The only major station for which the CEGB has been given approval since 1979 is Heysham II in September 1981. A wide range of relevant information is received by the Department when considering applications for investment approval on new power stations.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 25 November, Official Report, column 154, whether the costs of alternative siting options are a material factor in giving investment approval for a new power station on a specified site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The importance of alternative siting options is likely to vary with the case in question.

Nuclear Reactor (Safety)

Mr. Michael Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will detail what specific organisational and technical appraisals have been made of the methodology of determining the risks of an accident at a nuclear installation in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply, 19 November 1986, c. 233]: Operators of nuclear installations in the United Kingdom and overseas have for a number of years been developing and using the technique known as probabilistic risk (or safety) assessment (PRA). This technique has been widely adopted internationally as a valuable aid for assessing the risks of accidents at nuclear installations. Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate now requires PRA assessments to form part of the safety case which must be prepared before a nuclear power station is licensed, and has also asked operators to make similar assessments as part of the long-term reviews now being carried out on the older power stations.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish a table showing, for each licensed nuclear power station that started operating before 1970 (a) the date each reactor started operating, (b) the date each reactor attained, or is expected to attain 20-years operating life, (c) the date the nuclear installations inspectorate started, or expects to start, work on the 20-year safety review, (d) the date the nuclear installations inspectorate expects to finish work on the 20-year safety review and (e) the date the nuclear installations inspectorate expects to publish a summary of the 20-year safety review.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply, 17 November 1986, c. 18, and further to the replies 24 June 1985, at c. 296 and 17 November 1986, c. 18]: Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate's work on the CEGB's long-term reviews of Bradwell and Berkley commenced in August 1981. As I told the right hon. Member for Salford, East on 16 June 1986, at column 387, the NII completed work in March 1983 on its assessment of BNFL's long-term reviews of Calder Hall and Chapelcross with the exception of a few issues which require further assessment and discussion. The CEGB has begun its reviews of Hinkley Point A, Trawsfynydd, Sizewell and Dungeness A. The NII will publish its conclusions on all this work in due course.

PRIME MINISTER

Legislation

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Prime Minister how many pages of (a) primary and (b) secondary legislation were added to the statute book in 1956, 1960, 1970 and in each year since 1979 to date.

The Prime Minister: The following table give the figures for primary and secondary legislation[1] (excluding unprinted local legislation).

	Primary				Secondary
	Public General Acts and Measures				Statutory Instruments		Statutory Rules of Northern Ireland

Westland plc

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister whether the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, the right hon. Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Brittan) was aware of the likely contents of the letter from the Solicitor-General to the then Secretary of State for Defence before extracts from the letter were read to him over the telephone on 6 January; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer which I gave him on 17 November at column 49-50.

State Security

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister at what stage she first was aware of the intention to give undertakings to Messrs Sidgewick and Jackson not to bring action to prevent distribution of the book, "Their Trade is Treachery."

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply which I gave him on 28 November at column 388.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister whether she will prosecute Mr. Chapman Pincher under section 7 of the Official Secrets Act 1920 for inducing Mr. Peter Wright to break his duty of confidentiality on security matters to the Crown by being party to the offer of payments by Summerpage of moneys in respect of information to be included in his book, "Their Trade is Treachery."

The Prime Minister: Prosecutions are a matter for my Right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has signed any certificate under section 27 of the Data Protection Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tebbit: No, Sir.

ENVIRONMENT

Houses (Multiple Occupation)

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local housing authorities in England which have registration schemes for houses in multiple occupation in their areas as confirmed by him under sections 346 to 351 Housing Act 1985.

Mr. Tracey: Registration schemes confirmed under the 1985 Act and earlier legislation are in force in England in the following local authority areas:

Informatory schemes

Bassetlaw district council
Bournemouth borough council
Crawley borough city council
Croydon London borough council
Kingston upon Hull city council
Leeds city council
Liverpool city council
Middlesbrough borough council
Mole Valley borough council
Reigate and Banstead borough council
Trafford borough council

Regulatory schemes

Exeter city council

Combined schemes

Barnsley borough council
Bradford city council
Brent London borough council
Bristol city council
Cambridge city council
Camden London borough council
Doncaster borough council
East Staffordshire district council
Enfield London borough council
Greenwich London borough council
Hackney London borough council
Hereford city council
Ipswich borough council
Islington London borough council
Kirklees district council
Lambeth London borough council
Lancaster city council
Leicester city council
Lewisham London borough council
Manchester city council
Milton Keynes borough council
Newcastle under Lyme borough council
Newcastle upon Tyne city council
Newham London borough council
Norwich city council
Oldham borough council
Portsmouth city council
Redbridge London borough council
Rotherham borough council
Salford city council
Sandwell borough council
Scunthorpe borough council
Sheffield city council
South Tyneside borough council
Southwark London borough council
Stoke on Trent city council
Tower Hamlets London borough council
Walsall borough council
West Devon borough council
Woodspring district council
Wycombe district council
Wycombe district council
Wyre borough council

Schemes have also been confirmed in respect of two other authorities (Coventry city and Eastbourne borough councils), but these are not yet in force.

Radiation Protection

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what effect the study by Don Popplewell of the National Radiological Protection Board on plutonium levels in Sellafield workers and Cumbrians has had, or will have, on his policy towards protection from radiation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The levels of plutonium in Cumbrians that have been reported so far in the NRPB study are substantially below those which would cause concern or suggest the need for a change in policy. The Government will, however, continue to encourage monitoring of doses of radiation actually received by members of the public in west Cumbria, and in other relevant areas, as recommended by Sir Douglas Black, and to study the results with care.

Dog Wardens

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the present number of dog warden schemes operating in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: This information is not collected by my Department, but I understand that the Joint Advisory Committee on Pets in Society estimates that some 200 local authorities in Great Britain currently operate dog warden services. In Northern Ireland it is mandatory under the Dogs (Northern Ireland) Order 1983 for each of the 26 district councils to appoint such number of dog control officers as the council considers necessary.

Dolphins and Porpoises

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what research Her Majesty's Government have commissioned or completed in the last three years to determine why coastal dolphins and porpoises are disappearing from the southern part of the North sea.

Mr. Waldegrave: No such research has been commissioned. There is no clear evidence of these populations declining, but the Sea Mammals Research Unit is collating relevant available material in readiness for next year's London conference on the North sea.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek powers to require the nuclear industry to take account of the best available technology in order to reduce radioactive discharges into the aqueous environment from all their installations, including reprocessing plants.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United Kingdom already complies with the 1985 recommendation of the Paris Commission on the prevention of marine pollution from land-based sources that:

"The contracting parties to the Paris Commission on the prevention of marine pollution from land-based sources declare their firm intention to respect the applicable recommendations of the competent international organisations and to this end to take account of the best available technology in order to reduce radioactive discharges coming from all nuclear industries including reprocessing plants into the marine environment".

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to ensure that officers and crews of vessels visiting United Kingdom shores are regularly and comprehensively informed of the extant regulations concerning discharge from vessels into the sea.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have been asked to reply.

During the drafting of legislation the Department of Transport consults widely with seafaring unions and shipping organisations, and issues explanatory merchant shipping notices when considered necessary. The shipping industry, both national and international, is generally aware of the regulations covering discharges from ships into the sea, and ships, in any event, are required to be surveyed and issued with oil pollution prevention certificates under the terms of the Marpol convention.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what evaluation he has made of the effects of the Marpol convention 73/78 on the quality of the North sea; and if he will make a statement on its effectiveness.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have been asked to reply.

Responsibility for the control of shipping in accordance with the Marpol convention 73/78 rests with the Department of Transport.

The Department is currently evaluating the quantity of oil that is being discharged into the North sea following the entry into force of annex I of Marpol 73/78. First indications are that the quality of oil entering the North sea from ships has been drastically reduced.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how frequently airborne surveillance systems fly over the North sea to detect oil and noxious liquid spills;

(2) if Her Majesty's Government employ airborne surveillance systems, functioning independently of visibility, in detecting oil and noxious liquid spills in the North sea.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 26 November 1986, at column 283. Outside major shipping casualty spills, the use of airborne surveillance systems as all-weather, day-night, detectors of oil and other noxious liquid spills from ships is still being evaluated. This will involve 400-450 hours of research flying over the North sea and other United Kingdom coastal waters during the next nine months.

Mobile Homes Act 1983

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received concerning the workings of the Mobile Homes Act 1983; what proposed changes to the law his Department is considering; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: We have received various representations about the working of the Act. We are satisfied that the Act is in general working well and we have no plans to amend it. However, problems have arisen for some residents over its operation. Officials are discussing with representatives of residents and site owners ways in which the Act can be made to work better, and I believe that some positive proposals are emerging from these discussions. In addition, the local authority associations are being consulted about the effectiveness of local authority powers in respect of mobile homes sites.

Rents

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the average level (a) of local authority rents and (b) of fair rents registered for unfurnished lettings in England in each of the years from 1979 to 1986, indicating the percentage increase in each on an annual and cumulative basis; and how these increases compare with the movement of the retail price index over that same period.

Mr. Tracey: The figures on local authority rents, the average rents registered by rent officers and the movements in the retail prices index, are as follows:

	Average weekly rents[1] England				Retail prices index United Kingdom April
	LA (unrebated) April			Fair rents Unfurnished tenancies[2] 1st half year
	£	per cent. increase over year	since 1979	£	per cent. increase over year	since 1979
1979	6·41			[3]9·00
1980	7·70	20	20	[3]10·40	22	22
1981	11·42	48	78	11·80	12	36
1982	13·48	18	110	13·85	9	49
1983	13·97	4	118	14·15	4	55
1984	14·66	5	129	16·65	5	63
1985	15·54	6	142	16·85	7	75
1986	16·36	5	155	19·75	3	80

[1] service charges, if any, are included in fair rents, but not in local authority rents
[2] registered rents for private regulated tenancies only
[3] England and Wales

The mix of properties for which rents are registered varies from year to year for a number of reasons: for example, extension of decontrol in 1981; the reduction from three to two years in the minimum period for re-registration which led to re-registrations in 1983 of rents previously registered in 1980 and 1981. Therefore, comparisons of averages for consecutive years do not properly reflect rent movements. Better estimates of rent movements are derived from previous and new registered rents for tenancies where there has been no material change in terms or in the physical condition. For properties with rents fixed in the first halves of 1979, 1982, 1984 and 1986, the estimated increases are:

	per cent. increase in period	annualised per cent. increase
1979-82	50	14
1982-84	21	10
1984-86	17	8

Statistics

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in respect of the statistics kept and published by his Department, he will publish in the Official Report any changes since 1979 in (a) the statistical series which are published, including those which have been introduced and those which have been dropped, (b) the basis on which any elements in the statistics are estimated, calculated or presented, (c) the periods over which, and the dates on which the series are collected or published and (d) any other respects in the ways in which the statistics are collected, recorded presented, evaluated or published; and if he will explain the reasons for any such changes.

Mr. Ridley: The following are the major statistical series and surveys which have been introduced or dropped by my Department since 1979.

Series introduced since 1979
Enterprise Zone annual monitoring statistics
Land Use change statistics
Renovation grants, applications and approvals statistics
Expansion of council house sales statistics to cover 'right to buy' purchases
Planning appeals statistics

Series dropped since 1979
Commercial and Industrial Floorspace Statistics
Private enterprise housing enquiry
Local authority salary and wage statistics
Local authority expenditure budget estimates (at November prices)
Local authority design work statistics
Subcontracted construction output statistics
EC state of trade enquiry (for construction)

Changes in the basis of compilation, presentation and publication of statistical series are made from time to time in response to the Government's requirements for statistical information, changes in the administrative systems on which some series are based, the development of new statistical techniques and technological developments affecting the compilation and dissemination of statistical data. When such changes are made they are fully documented in the relevant statistical publications.

Home Improvements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to promote home improvements and repairs in Leicester; and how much money is estimated to be spent during 1987-88 on these purposes.

Mr. Tracey: The Department promotes rehabilitation in Leicester by contributions to improvement grants and enveloping schemes, by housing association grant and through the expertise of the estate action unit. My right hon. Friend also hopes to contribute to the cost of a care and repair agency. It is largely for the city to determine how much will be spent, once it has received its housing investment programme allocation.

Home Security

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to promote improvements to home security; and how much money is estimated to be spent during 1987-88 on these purposes.

Mr. John Patten: I shall answer this question shortly.

Portsdown Park

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, when officers of his Department telephoned offices of Portsmouth city council on 4 March concerning Portsdown park, they made it clear that information contained within that call should not be disclosed until after receipt of the subsequent letter.

Mr. John Patten: There was no such restriction on disclosure of the content of the telephone call.

Basildon (Exhibition)

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has considered an exhibition relating to Basildon to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition on "Basildon — A Town of Opportunity" to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 8 December to Friday 12 December.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about his proposals for the rate support settlement for 1987-88.

Mr. Ridley: I have received a substantial number of representations about the consultation paper which I issued on 3 October.

As is usual at this time of year, more up-to-date information has also become available for some of the items which are used in the calculation of grant. It includes information about expenditure in 1986-87, about capital allocations for 1987-88, and about rateable values. It has the effect of reducing still further the grant entitlements of some of the authorities who were already losing most under my earlier proposals.

I have given full consideration to the representations. The situation is also changed by the new data. I have therefore decided to revise my earlier proposals. I now propose to give greater protection to those authorities which lose grant, by providing a tighter safety net of 7p at ratepayer level. I also propose to introduce a new cap on grant gains larger than 12p at ratepayer level. The full details are set out in a further consultation paper issued today.

The aggregate Exchequer grant to local authorities is unchanged from my previous proposals at £12·8 billion, so some authorities will still get less grant than in 1986-87, but my new proposals will particularly benefit those authorities which lost most grant in the previous distribution, notably Surrey, Hampshire, Hertfordshire, Bedfordshire and Oxfordshire. Most other shire counties, shire districts and outer London boroughs also benefit. The limit on grant gains affects 22 authorities: however, all these authorities are still expected to receive substantially more grant in 1987-88 than in 1986-87.

Copies of the consultation paper have been sent to all local authorities and to the local authority assocations: their responses have been requested by 19 December. Copies of the paper have been placed in the Libary and in the Vote Office.

World Heritage

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether any of the seven sites nominated by the Government for inclusion on the world heritage list have been accepted; and whether any further nominations are to be submitted to the World Heritage Committee.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am delighted to announce that the World Heritage Committee at its meeting in Paris last week decided that all seven of the sites nominated by the Government last year will be placed on the world heritage list from 1 January 1987. The sites are:

Durham Cathedral and Castle, Durham
Studley Royal and Fountains Abbey, North Yorkshire
The Castles and town walls of King Edward I in Gwynedd
Ironbridge Gorge, Shropshire
Stonehenge and Avebury, Wiltshire
St. Kilda, Scotland
Giant's Causeway, Northern Ireland

I am delighted by this decision, which gives proper recognition to the extraordinarily rich and diverse inheritance we have in the United Kingdom, covering 3,000 years and more.

Under the world heritage convention, each participating state is entitled to nominate sites annually and we shall be putting forward a further nine sites for consideration by the World Heritage Committee in 1987 for inclusion in the 1988 list. These sites are:

St. David's Close and Bishop's Palace, Dyfed
Blenheim Palace, Oxon
The Palace of Westminster, London
Ecclesiastical Sites of Lough Erne, Northern Ireland
Bath, Avon
New Lanark, Strathclyde
Hadrian's Wall
The Lake District
St. Helena: Diana's Peak and High Peak, South Atlantic Ocean

I look forward to these sites being given similar recognition by the World Heritage Committee during next year and added to the list in 1988.

Landscape Conservation Orders

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government proposes to issue its consultation document on landscape conservation orders.

Mr. Ridley: The consultation document was issued today. It proposes that national park authorities and the Broads Authority (if Parliament approves the Norfolk and Broads Bill) should be able to make orders to prohibit certain harmful agricultural operations in the most vulnerable parts of their areas. Orders should be applied only where the authorities are convinced that operations are likely to be carried out in the immediate future. Those on whom orders were served would have a right of appeal; be eligible for compensation; and would be offered a management agreement if one had not already been refused. If such an agreement were accepted the order would be revoked. We expect these powers to be employed in only a few cases each year. They will underpin, not replace, the voluntary approach to conservation. Comments are invited by 6 March next year. A copy of the document has been placed in the Library of the House.

Local Ombudsman

Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has proposals for legislation in the current session in relation to the powers of the local ombudsman.

Mr. Chope: Yes. Provisions relating to the Commissions for Local Administration in England and Wales (the "Local Ombudsmen") will be included in the Local Government Bill. In most cases these will give effect to proposals for change made over a period of time by the commissioners themselves. These proposals were in some instances first agreed by the previous Government. A major provision will be to extend the local ombudsman's jurisdiction to certain functions of new town bodies and urban development corporations. The Government's undertaking to make this change was contained in their response to recommendations by the Select Committee on the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration (Cmnd. 9563, July 1985).

The provisions will amend part III of the Local Government Act 1974, which relates to the local ombudsmen in England and Wales, as follows:

1. The Commissions for Local Administration (CLASs) are required annually to review the powers governing their operations. An amendment will make this requirement a triennial one (section 23(12)).

2. The CLAs are required to produce a general annual report of their activities, to be published by the representative body (of local and water authorities). An amendment will require the commissions to publish their annual reports themselves (section 24(6)).

3. An amendment will extend the local ombudsman's jurisdiction to the housing functions of the Commission for new Towns and of new town development corporations; and to the town and country planning functions of urban development corporations (section 25(1)).

4. Complaints to the local ombudsman are time-limited. They must in the first instance have been made to a member of the authority complained against within a year of the alleged injustice. The local ombudsman may override this restriction if he considers there are special circumstances. An amendment will provide the ombudsman with wider discretion to accept compliants made "out of time". (section 26(4)).

5. When the local ombudsman produces a report of an investigation into an alleged injustice he must submit a copy to the authority complained against. The authority is required to make the report available for public inspection; and permit copies to be taken. An amendment will require authorities to supply copies of reports at reasonable cost to any person requesting them (section 30(4)).

6. When local authorities receive a report of an investigation as described above, they must advertise its availability for inspection within a week. This often presents practical difficulties. An amendment will extend the period for advertising to two weeks (section 30(5)).

7. Reports by the local ombudsman which find injustice as a result of maladministration must be considered by the authority concerned. If it fails to provide the remedy proposed, the ombudsman may make a further report; but the authority is not required to consider any such further report. An amendment will require that authorities should consider all reports by the local ombudsman (section 31(2)).

8. For the purposes of the law of defamation, communications between a member of an authority and the local ombudsman are absolutely privileged. An amendment will extend such privilege to officers of the authority (section 32(1)).

9. The local ombudsman may delegate to his staff any function other than that of making a report. An amendment will give the ombudsman the discretion to delegate report making. (Schedule 4, paragraph 4(5)).

Proposals for more fundamental changes in the local ombudsman's powers than those described above were included in the recent report of the Widdicombe committee on the conduct of local government business. It is, however, premature to consider legislation in relation to any of those more radical proposals. The Government have invited comments on the Widdicombe report by the end of the year, and will then consider the recommendations as a whole, consulting further as necessary. In the meantime, the items listed above, which were not subject to proposals by Widdicombe, will be implemented as recommended by the commissioners and accepted by the Government.

Home Improvement

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to make a statement on the responses received to the Green Paper "Home Improvement—A New Approach", published in May 1985, before 31 December.

Mr. Tracey [pursuant to his reply, 1 December 1986]: No. We are continuing to consider possible changes to the home improvement grant system in the light of the Green Paper and responses to it.

Leicester (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the recent visit to Leicester by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Surbiton (Mr. Tracey).

Mr. Tracey [pursuant to his reply, 2 December 1986]: As part of my continuing programme of meetings with all the regional councils for sport and recreation, I visited Leicester on 1 December for a meeting of the East Midlands Regional Council for Sport and Recreation. In addition to discussions with members of the council and addressing their meeting, I visited impressive sport and recreational facilities in the city—Granby Halls, Moat community college and the Avril Lennox gymnasium.

Stocken Hall

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Chope) has received a copy of the document sent to him by Mr. John Nickols entitled "Stocken Hall RIP", regarding the condition of a grade 2 listed building recently sold by the Property Services Agency to Endersby Developments Ltd; and whether he will order an immediate inquiry into the allegations contained in that document.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to the reply, 28 November 1986, c. 375]: I have seen a copy of the document written by Mr. Nickols about Stocken Hall. I understand that Endersby Developments Ltd. is in discussion with both the local planning authority and the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission about the repair and restoration of this property.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will explain the reasons whereby the Property Services Agency did not require as a condition of the contract of sale of Stocken Hall to Endersby Developments Ltd. the renovation of the building, in accordance with the original specification contained in the offer for sale document published by Messrs. Cluttons, on behalf of the Home Office; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [pursuant to his reply, 28 November 1986, c. 375]: In order to make clear to prospective purchasers that Stocken Hall should be preserved and not demolished, the contract for sale contained a condition that the building should be renovated. That condition is, however, unenforceable.

CIVIL SERVICE

Statistics

Mr. Gould asked the Minister for the Civil Service if, in respect of the statistics kept and published by his Department, he will publish in the Official Report any changes since 1979 in (a) the statistical series which are published, including those which have been introduced and those which have been dropped, (b) the basis on which any elements in the statistics are estimated, calculated or presented, (c) the periods over which, and the dates on which the series are collected or published and (d) any other respects in the ways in which the statistics are collected, recorded, presented, evaluated or published; and if he will explain the reasons for any such changes.

Mr. Luce: This is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister. However, I understand that changes in the basis of compilation, presentation and publication of statistical series produced by the Central Statistical Office are made from time to time in response to the requirements of Government, businesses and international organisations for statistical information. Other changes reflect changes in administrative systems on which some series are based, the development of new statistical techniques and technological developments affecting the compilation and dissemination of statistical data.

When such changes are made they are fully documented in the relevant statistical publications. Several thousand series are involved in this process, the principal groupings among them being as follows:

National Income

(i) Introduction of a revised Standard Industrial Classification in 1983;

(ii) Rebasing of constant price series to a new base year (1980) in 1983;

(iii) Introduction of a new "classification of the functions of government" (COFOG) which has been applied to the national account analyses of government expenditure from the 1985 Blue Book; and

(iv) Reclassification of consumers' expenditure in the 1983 Blue Book.

The bases of the above series are set out in the publication "The United Kingdom National Accounts Sources and Methods"; this was thoroughly revised, re-edited and republished in 1985 to take account of the changes which had occurred since the previous edition in 1968. Subsequent changes are notified in the CSO's annual national accounts "Blue Book".

Balance of Payments

(i) Additional series now incorporated in the balance of payments accounts include:

UK residents' deposits with banks abroad;

Gross interest payments and receipts in respect of foreign currency borrowing and lending;lending;

Services provided by contractors.

(ii) Less information is now available on trade credit following the discontinuation of the inquiry previously sent to companies about sources and uses of funds.

(iii) Following the abolition of exchange control in 1979, several series previously dependent on information from exchange control records now use information from internaioal banking organisations and new surveys.surveys.

Exact details of the changes in the contents of the balance of payments accounts, both in presentation and in the availability of particular series, are described in each issue of the annual publication "United Kingdom Balance of Payments" (The CSO "Pink Book").

Financial and Public Sector Statistics

Changes since 1979 include:

(i) The introduction of statistics of personal sector committed and discretionary saving.

(ii) The introduction of monthly estimates of the PSBR;

(iii) The first official estimates of annual balance sheets, covering financial items and also physical assets for the main economic sectors and for the country as a whole.

(iv) A number of new or rearranged tables have appeared in "Financial Statistics", in particular relating to public expenditure, showing separate financial accounts for central government, local authorities and public corporations, and analysing public corporations capital and financial accounts.

(v) Some Tables have been dropped—eg relating to Trustee Savings Bank when it became part of the monetary sector in 1981.

Notes on changes generally appear in the CSO monthly publication "Financial Statistics".

Index of Production

(i) Extension of stock adjustment from quarterly to monthly series.

(ii) Bias adjustment introduced (to early estimates only) for monthly manufacturing series in January 1986.

(iii) Construction reverted from monthly to quarterly series.

(iv) Separate identification of North Sea Oil Index of Production discontinued.

Notes on these changes appear in Economic Trends, except for (ii) above, which has been described in press notices and for which a detailed note is available on request.

Gross Domestic Product (Output Measure)

(i) Separate identification of North Sea Oil and non-oil production no longer published, although available on request.

(ii) A series for "total service industries" was introduced in 1986.

Productivity

Output per hour for manufacturing industry added in 1982.

Unit Wage Costs

The output measure of GDP replaced the income measure in the calculation of whole economy unit wage costs and, in addition, an adjustment was incorporated to cover the earnings of the self-employed. This change was described in the Employment Gazette May 1986, and in a footnote reference in Monthly Digest table 7.4.

Distribution of Income

The estimates of the distribution of income based jointly on the survey of personal incomes and the family expenditure survey have been reduced in frequency from annual to triennial following a recommendation of the Rayner review of the GSS.

THE ARTS

Provincial Art Galleries

Mr. Latham asked the Minister for the Arts whether he will seek to sponsor a national competition by which provincial art galleries could seek to improve their premises in order to place on display some of the paintings currently stored in the cellars of the national galleries in London; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I am anxious to encourage all museums and galleries to improve their attractiveness to the visiting public, and to encourage the national institutions to lend items from their collections for exhibition in other museums and galleries. I am discussing with the Museums and Galleries Commission the scope for introducing a scheme to support touring exhibitions including those which involve the loan of items from national collections.

The Government's indemnity scheme already exists to facilitate the loan of items between the national and provincial museums and galleries. In addition to this, the Museums and Galleries Commission and the area museum councils operate schemes which assist non-national museums and galleries to improve their displays and premises.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxation (Personal Allowances)

Mr. Fallon asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the revenue cost in 1987-88 and in a full year of raising all the main personal allowances by 5 per cent., 10 per cent., 15 per cent. and 20 per cent. more than indexation; and how many single, married and aged tax units would be taken out of tax by these increases.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The estimates in the table show the cost of the proposals, and the effect on the numbers of taxpayers, in 1987-88 compared with indexation of 1986-87 allowances by the illustrative increase of 3·25 per cent. in the 1986 autumn statement.

thousands

			under 65		over 65		Total

20	3,400	4,300	620	280	250	280	1,430

Taxation Revenue

Mr. Wheeler asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has of the revenue accruing in the current financial year as a result of the 60 per cent. top rate of income tax; and what estimate he has made of the comparable yield from a 50 per cent. top rate.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The tax liability in 1986-87 accruing from the top rate of income tax of 60 per cent. is about £1·6 billion. If this rate and the 55 per cent. rate were reduced to 50 per cent., the ex ante direct revenue cost in a full year at 1986-87 income levels would be about £350 million. This estimate makes no allowance for any behavioural effects.

P11D Notification

Mr. Speller asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will raise the level of P11D notification relating to benefits in kind to £12,000 per annum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: We have no plans to raise the P11D threshold.

Privatisation

Mr. Jackson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the companies in which the Government retained, at the time of first privatisation, a golden share with special voting rights, indicating in each case the period of applicability of such special rights and whether such rights have subsequently been varied; and if he will place in the Library particulars of the terms and conditions of issue of each such golden share, details of the special rights and of any subsequent changes.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Government retained, at the time of privatisation, special shares with special voting rights in Amersham International, Britoil and Enterprise Oil. The voting rights have not been subsequently amended. Unless they are amended, the voting rights will continue unless and until the special shares themselves are redeemed. Particulars of the terms of the special shares can be found in the Library, where they were placed following the question tabled by the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair), on 26 July 1985, c. 843-44.

Mr. Jackson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the companies into which the Government at the time of first privatisation, introduced provisions restricting the proportion of the capital that may be acquired by a single shareholder, or category of shareholders indicating in each case the form that such restrictions took; what information he has as to whether such restrictions have been invoked or applied in practice; and if he will place in the Library details of the provisions setting out the restrictions in each case and for invoking or applying them.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The companies into which these restrictions were introduced by the Government at privatisation are Amersham International, Britoil, Enterprise Oil, Jaguar, British Telecom, VSEL and British Gas. To my knowledge, none of the restrictions has been invoked or applied in practice. Details are contained in the article of association for each of the companies concerned. Relevant extracts from the articles of the first five of these companies have already been placed in the Library, in response to the question tabled by the hon. Member for Sedgfield (Mr. Blair) on 26 July 1985, at columns 842-43. I am arranging for copies of the relevant sections of the articles of association for VSEL and British Gas to be placed in the Library as soon as possible.

Taxation

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the credit intervals tolerated by the collecting departments of the Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My hon. Friend has recently written to me on behalf of a constituent, and I hope to let him have a reply shortly.

EC Budget

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about Britain's contributions in 1986-87 to the European Economic Community budget.

Mr. Brooke: Our net contribution to the Community budget is the main element in our net payments to Community institutions, which are now estimated to be £1,090 million in 1986-87. This is £440 million above the figure published in the last public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9702). The reasons for this were set out in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) on 18 November, at column 178.

Unemployment

Mr. Boyes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost to his Department of the present level of unemployment in the northern region.

Mr. MacGregor: No figures are kept dividing benefit expenditure on the unemployed by regions. For the overall cost to the Exchequer of unemployment and supplementary benefit paid to the unemployed, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) on 6 November, at columns 516-17.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he intends to announce any change in the scope and application of value added tax in respect of works of art purchased or imported from abroad; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I can assure my hon. Friend that no change is imminent.

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the annual value of zero rated transactions in the United Kingdom on those goods and services which are the subject of infraction proceedings before the European Court on the issue of whether or not they should be subjected to value added tax.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 1 December 1986, c. 467]: I assume that the hon. Member is interested in expenditure giving rise to payment of VAT by a person or business unable to deduct it as input tax. On this basis annual expenditure on the goods and services in question is estimated to be of the order of £7 billion.

Statistics

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, in respect of the statistics kept and published by his Deparment, he will publish in the Official Report any changes since 1979 in (a) the statistical series which are published, including those which have been introduced and those which have been dropped, (b) the basis on which any elements in the statistics are estimated, calculated or presented, (c) the periods over which, and the dates on which the series are collected or published and (d) any other respects in the ways in which the statistics are collected, recorded, presented, evaluated, or published; and if he will explain the reasons for any such changes.

Mr. MacGregor: There are two major blocks of statistics which the Treasury publishes, public expenditure statistics and Civil Service manpower statistics.

The key document containing and describing the public expenditure statistics is the annual public expenditure White Paper, though figures are also given in the Autumn Statement, the summary and guide to the Supply Estimates, the Estimates booklets, the Appropriation Accounts and the Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Civil Service manpower statistics are published annually by Her Majesty's Stationery Office in "Civil Service Statistics".

Changes in the basis of compilation, presentation and publication of statistical series are made from time to time in response to requests from the Treasury and Civil Service Committee, the Government's requirements for statistical information, changes in the administrative systems on which some series are based, the development of new statistical techniques and technological developments affecting the compilation and dissemination of statistical data.

When such changes are made they are fully documented in the relevant statistical publications or in special articles such as those in Economic Trends in November 1983 and August 1985.

Family Incomes

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many families with children had incomes below the tax threshold; and how many of these were in working families at the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 17 November 1986, c. 82]: Information on weekly income in the 1984 family expenditure survey suggests that about 1¼ million families with children in the United Kingdom had incomes after personal allowances and mortgage interest relief below the tax threshold. One or both parents were in full time work or self-employed in about a quarter of a million of these families.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Community Care

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the care in the community of former psychiatric and mentally handicapped patients.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. McCrindle) on 27 November at columns 360-62.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, based on the current average levels of rents and rates in Great Britain, what are the current income levels at which housing benefit would cease to be payable for (a) single pensioners, (b) pensioner couples, (c) one-child family with one earner and (d) two-child family with one earner; and what are the current average earnings in each case.

Mr. Lyell: The information requested is shown in the table.

	Gross income level at which housing benefit no longer payable at November 1986 £	Average Earnings (1984) £
Single Pensioner	77·45	—
Pensioner Couple	100·20	—
Couple with one child and with one earner	134·66	177
Couple with two children and with one earner	151·85	201

Notes:

1. The following average rent and rate figures have been used

	Rent £	Rates £
Household without children	14·60	6·05
Household with one child	16·25	6·75
Household with two children	17·50	7·25

2. The minimum payment rule of 50p is taken into account.
3. Pensioners are assumed not to be in employment.
4. Average earnings are gross earnings and include employed and self-employed people. They relate to 1984, the latest date for which figures are available broken down by family group and are derived from the Family Expenditure Survey.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will estimate the number of pensioners in Scotland who will lose housing benefit as a result of changes announced in October, indicating how many will be (a) up to £1 a week worse off, (b) between £2-3 per week worse off and (c) more than £4 per week worse off;

(2) if he will estimate the average loss to pensioners in Scotland as a result of the changes announced in housing benefit in October;

(3) if he will estimate how many pensioners in Scotland will lose housing benefit completely as a result of the changes announced in October;

(4) if he will estimate how many pensioners in Scotland will lose as a result of changes announced in October (a) some housing benefit and (b) all housing benefit; and of these how many of them in each case are (i) local authority tenants and (ii) private tenants.

Mr. Lyell: I regret that breakdowns of the estimates of the effects of increases in the housing benefit needs allowances, and the proposed increases in the housing benefit rent taper above the needs allowance, are not available separately for Scottish households.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish a table showing the total number and percentage of home owners in Great Britain receiving rate rebates, including former supplementary benefit payments towards rates, in each of the years from 1979 to 1986, the total cost of such payments and the average payment per recipient;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the total number and percentage of all (a) local authority tenants and (b) private tenants in Great Britain receiving means tested housing assistance, including housing benefit, rent rebates, rent allowance and supplementary benefit, in each of the years from 1979 to 1986, the total cost of such payments and the average payment per recipient.

Mr. Lyell: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Environmental Health Officers

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the cost of meeting the demands of environmental health officers following the removal of Crown immunity from hospital buildings, with regard to catering and health and safety; and what extra funds over what period he will provide to health authorities to meet this cost.

Mr. Newton: Central guidance has, for a number of years, indicated that health authorities are expected to establish working practices as if they were not immune from legal penalty. Complying with the requirements of sections 1 and 2 of the National Health Service (Amendment) Act 1986 should not therefore impose any new burdens on health authorities and we have no plans to allocate additional resources for these purposes.

Claims

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state, for each office of his Department covering the constituency of Leyton, the number of outstanding claims, broken-down into (a) single payment claims and (b) other claims, and the current average time for settlement of these, and the time involved in the current longest dozen outstanding claims for each office.

Mr. Lyell: Two of the Department's local offices serve the Leyton constituency, Leytonstone and Walthamstow, but their boundaries are not co-terminous. Some of the information requested is not available; the table sets out the figures which are:

	Leytonstone	Walthamstow
Single payments outstanding on 25 November	84	979
Other supplementary benefit claims outstanding on 25 November	94	334
Average clearance times for supplementary benefit claims, other than single payments, during the 4 weeks up to 18 November	3 days	10 days

Local offices do not routinely keep records of clearance times for single payments. Nor do they normally maintain records of the receipt of claims in date order.

However, in the case of these offices there is information available about claims which have been outstanding longest. These were as follows on the dates given:

Leytonstone

Other claims	Single payments
17 October 1986	2 June 1986
22 October 1986	9 September 1986
27 October 1986	29 October 1986

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will update to 1986 table 34.89 of the social security statistics for 1985.

Mr. Lyell: I refer the hon. Member to table 12.23 in the 1984 "Supplementary Benefit Annual Statistical Enquiry Tables" a copy of which is in the Library.

Amrinone

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will hold an immediate inquiry into the pharmaceutical firm Sterling-Winthrop in respect of its activities relating to the medical drug Amrinone;

(2) if he will publish the evidence received in the course of his inquiries into the activities of the pharmaceutical company Sterling-Winthrop regarding its activities with the medical drug Amrinone; and if he will make a statement;

(3) on how many occasions Dr. Wilmshurst requested his Department to investigate the pharmaceutical company Sterling-Winthrop under the Medicines Act 1968, for its actions on Amrinone; what replies he sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tony Newton: Dr. Wilmshurst requested an investigation of Sterling-Winthrop for its actions on Amrinone on three occasions, January 1983, October 1984 and February 1985, and communicated with the Department on detailed points at various other times. The Department mounted two full investigations one in 1983 and one in 1985 to determine whether Sterling-Winthrop Group Ltd was in breach of the Medicines Act 1968 and its subordinate legislation, or of any other provisions of the criminal law.

The Department took legal advice on the reports of these investigations but was advised that there was insufficient evidence to undertake a criminal prosecution. It was however clear that there had been confusion and misunderstanding between the company and the doctors at St. Thomas' about the basis of the clinical trials at the hospital. The company was given strict instructions regarding the improvements of these procedures in such trials, including the need for adequate communication with medical investigators, involved in a clinical trial, to ensure that they understand fully the situation. The company has undertaken to comply fully in future with all legal requirements.

Dr. Wilmshurst was advised in general terms of the outcome of both investigations, in October 1984 and in August 1985 respectively. Dr. Wilmshurst wrote again to my right hon. Friend on 30 August 1985 seeking a further investigation into his allegations. The text of the reply dated 4 November 1985 is as follows. A further letter from Dr. Wilmshurst dated 4 November 1986 has been received and is being studied.

It is not correct to suggest, as some have done, that the Department is unable to act against any pharmaceutical company which threatened doctors or acted fraudulently.

Where the evidence justifies it, we would not hesitate to use all available powers either under the Medicines Act or the general criminal law.

Dear Dr. Wilmshurst,

Norman Fowler has passed me your letter to him of 30 August and asked me to look into the matters you raised. You wrote about the activities of Sterling Winthrop Group Ltd. in relation to clinical trials, with specific reference to clinical trials of oral amrinone, and asked that the earlier investigations into Sterling Winthrop's behaviour be reopened.

In the light of your letter, Ministers initiated a thorough review of the whole matter. On the basis of that review I must advise you now at the outset, that I am satisfied that there is no basis for me to take the matter further.

I am advised that following your earlier complaints in January 1983 and the subsequent ones in October 1984 and February 1985, the Department mounted two full investigations to determine whether Sterling Winthrop Group Ltd, were in breach of the Medicines Act 1968 and its subordinate legislation, or of any other provisions of the criminal law. Medical researchers at all centres involved in the clinical trials of amrinone were seen by an experienced investigating officer who was accompanied, when necessary, by a doctor from the Department. A different investigating officer was used for each investigation and, among others, they saw both you and Dr. Webb-Peploe — who was the person who had dealt most directly with Sterling Winthrop — about the matter you raised.

The reports of these investigations were carefully studied by the Department. These reports, like those of prosecuting authorities in general, must remain confidential. But the clear conclusion reached was that the evidence available was not such as to enable the Department to undertake a criminal prosecution. The Department was, however, concerned about the lack of understanding by all participants in these cases about the responsibilities of those involved with clinical trials. The Department's Medicines Division has recently brought to the attention of all licence holders the need to ensure that all relevant evidence is submitted, and is considering whether any further action is needed.

I can assure you that the Department always conducts vigorous investigations into matters of this nature and is concerned to improve the understanding and effectiveness of the Medicines Act whenever there appears a need to do so.

Sincerely,

Ray Whitney

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what adverse reactions from the medical drug

Amrinone were reported to his Department; and if he will investigate the interpretation of the data provided by Sterling-Winthrop;

(2) what requests his Department received about a clinical trials certificate with oral Amrinone; what reply was sent; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what trials have been conducted in National Health Service hospitals with the medical drug Amrinone; how many patients suffered serious side effects; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what requests were made to his Department about licensing the medical drug Amrinone: what replies he sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Separate applications for product licences for Amrinone capsules and Amrinone injection from Sterling Winthrop were withdrawn by the company in, respectively, January 1984 and September 1985 before final decisions on them by the licensing authority. An application for an exemption from a clinical trail certificate for a clinical study of Amrinone capsules by one named doctor was approved by the licensing authority in November 1981; approval for further studies using the original protocol was given for two more named doctors in, respectively, December 1981 and January 1982. Two further applications for studies of Amrinone capsules by named doctors using new protocols were approved in, respectively, November 1981 and July 1982.

All the above clinical trial exemptions were terminated in August 1982 when other similar applications from the Company, received in July 1982, were also refused. In September 1982, Sterling Winthrop applied for clinical trials certificates for studies of Amrinone capsules by various doctors, but the company withdrew these applications in January 1984 before the licensing authority had reached final decisions on them.

A clinical trials certificate for studies of Amrinone injection at St. Thomas' hospital was issued in January 1980 but no application for a certificate or exemption to cover studies of Amrinone capsules at St. Thomas' was received by the licensing authority. Clinical trials of Amrinone injection were conducted at St. Thomas' and some patients received Amrinone capsules.

Clinical trials of Amrinone for which certificates or exemption were granted by the licensing authority were also conducted at Kings College hospital (capsules) and Freeman road hospital Newcastle-upon-Tyne (capsules and injection). Clinical trials involving Amrinone were also conducted by doctors on a named-patient basis at Hillingdon hospital (capsules and injection) and Leeds general infirmary (injection). Both the doctors at St. Thomas' hospital and Sterling Winthrop made procedural errors and there was a breakdown of trust between the two parties. However it is clear that the procedural irregularities did not expose these severely ill patients to additional risks.

A further examination of the interpretation of the data provided by Sterling Winthrop is not appropriate at present as a thorough examination was carried out of all the adverse reaction data when the product licence application was assessed in the Department and by the Committee on Safety of Medicines. A product licence has never been issued for Amrinone; nor is an application for such a licence currently with the Department. Under these circumstances, I do not consider any further investigation is warranted.

Sterling Winthrop has waived its right in this regard to commercial confidentiality of relevant information held by the Department on clinical investigations of Amrinone sponsored by the company.

Embryo Experiments

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his reply of 25 November, Official Report, columns 189-90, about legislation to deal with the issues raised by the Warnock report he will, in the interim, implement a moratorium on experiments upon the human embryo.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so. I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess) on 2 December.

Statistics

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in respect of the statistics kept and published by his Department, he will publish in the Official Report any changes since 1979 in (a) the statistical series which are published, including those which have been introduced and those which have been dropped, (b) the basis on which any elements in the statistics are estimated, calculated or presented, (c) the periods over which, and the dates on which the series are collected or published and (d) any other respects in the ways in which the statistics are collected, recorded, presented. evaluated, or published; and if he will explain the reasons for any such changes.

Mrs. Currie: The Department keeps the content of statistical returns under continuous review and always seeks to end the collection of statistics no longer necessary. I shall let the hon. Member have a fuller reply as soon as possible.

Regional Medical Services

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what are the latest available figures for the number of references of claims for invalidity benefit and sickness benefit to the regional medical services; how many of these cases resulted in examinations; and what were the outcomes (i) where examinations took place and (ii) where they did not;

(2) what are the latest available figures for the number of references of claims for severe disablement allowance to the regional medical services; and how many of these cases resulted in examinations and what were the outcomes (a) where examinations took place and (b) where they did not.

Mr. Lyell: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. The latest available information relates to all claims referred to the regional medical services, including claims for invalidity benefit, sickness benefit and severe disablement allowance in the year to 31 December 1985, and is set out in the following table:

	England and Wales	Scotland	Great Britain
(i) Number of cases examined	248,382	40,413	288,795
Made up as follows:
Found not incapable of work	36,696	7,365	44,061
Found incapable of work	179,677	28,701	208,378

	England and Wales	Scotland	Great Britain
Found incapable of normal occupation but capable of alternative work	32,009	4,347	36,656
(ii) Deemed incapable without examination	284,457	71,047	355,504
(iii) Did not attend	62,769	8,958	71,727
Total[1]	595,608	120,418	716,026

[1] ie all cases referred.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what arrangements are made for female claimants for invalidity or sickness benefit who wish to be examined by a female doctor.

Mr. Lyell: When women claimants to sickness benefit who are referred to the regional medical service express a wish to be examined by a female doctor then arrangements are made to meet their wishes. Because there are relatively few women doctors available to do this work there may be occasions when the claimant has to travel a greater distance than would normally be the case in order to achieve this. There may exceptionally have been instances where it has not been possible to meet the claimants' requests.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest figures for the number of regional medical officers employed by the regional medical services; and what is the age and sex breakdown of these officers.

Mr. Lyell: The Department's regional medical service employs thirty three full-time and one part-time regional medical officers. Only the part-time officer is female. Their ages range from 41 to 64 years (mean average 55·27 years).

In addition, medical examinations of claimants are conducted by part-time medical referees who are offered this work on a sessional basis. The regional medical service currently has available 248 part-time medical referees, 18 of whom are female. Their ages range from 37 to 75 years (mean average 62·88 years).

Invalidity Benefit (Medical Reports)

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average length of time taken for an examination of an invalidity benefit claimant by a regional medical officer in cases where the claimant is found (a) incapable of work, (b) incapable of normal occupation but capable of suitable alternative work and (c) not capable of work; what is the average length of time in each of these categories for completion of the medical examination; and what is the average length of time in each of these categories for completing the medical report.

Mr. Lyell: The last full year for which figures are available show that the Department's regional medical service held 33,335 sessions at which claimants to invalidity benefit were medically examined. A total of 206,824 claimants were examined at these sessions—an average of 6·2 claimants per session. A period of two and a half hours is allowed for each session but arrangements are flexible and this time is exceeded if necessary. This means that in the year in question, approximately 24 minutes were available to examine and report on each case. Figures for the amount of time spent on examination and completing reports are not kept separately. The time spent on individual cases will vary depending on their complexity. The time spent on cases classified by their outcome is not available.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims for invalid care allowance have been made by (a) men, (b) single women and (c) married or cohabiting women in each month of 1986; for each group, how many decisions have been taken, and how many claimants have been successful; and what is the breakdown of the reasons for disallowance in the unsuccessful cases.

Mr. Major: The information to 21 November, the latest date for which information is available, is given in the following tables. I regret that it is not possible to provide separate figures for men and single women.

Table 1: Claims

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) married or (b) co-habiting women have been awarded backdated invalid care allowance since the Government's decision to extend invalid care allowance to this group of people; and how much has been paid to each group.

Mr. Major: Up to 28 November, the latest date for which information is available, 13,500 married and co-habiting women had been awarded and paid invalid care allowance. No distinction is made in records between married and co-habiting women. Up to 28 November, the total amount of invalid care allowance paid to all beneficiaries since awards to married women began was £27·5 million. This sum includes arrears and current payments made to both men and women as a result of awards made in this period. I regret that it is not possible to distinguish payments of arrears to married and co-habiting women from the total figure.

Resettlement Units

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what organisations were consulted about membership of the new advisory steering group for the replacement of resettlement units as a result of his letter of 13 June; from the organisations which supported option two, how many suggested that at least 50 per cent. should be representatives from review teams and how many recommended that at least 50 per cent. should be from central organisations; how many of those responding suggested representatives from central organisations additional to those suggested in the consultation letter; and how many organisations recommended limiting the representation on the advisory steering group to one delegate for the six review teams covering the South of England.

Mr. Lyell: We consulted all major interests, including local authorities and the review teams. My main concern is to ensure that the advisory group makes best possible use of the expertise available. The bodies whom we consulted share this concern: one review team suggested that 50 per cent. of the group should come from review teams, and six bodies suggested additional members from central organisations. None of the other views mentioned by the hon. Lady figured in the responses.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people will be affected by the Government's decision to abolish the middle rate of statutory sick pay from April 1987, and the decision to uprate the top rate of statutory sick pay by 10 per cent.; and what is the current real value of each rate of statutory sick pay compared with its real value before the last uprating.

Mr. Lyell: It is estimated that in a full year about 400,000 payments will be affected by the decision to merge the middle and lower rates of statutory sick pay (SSP). An estimated 4·8 million payments will be made at the standard rate.

As previous SSP rates have been uprated in line with the movement in the retail prices index since the previous increase, the current real value of each rate of SSP is the same as its real value before the last uprating, which took effect last April.

Mr. Stephen Vail (Appeal)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will be making his decision on the appeal of Mr. Stephen Vail of 14 Livingstone road, Southsea, Hampshire, against the rejection of his complaint by the Hampshire family practitioners committee, case No. DS148.

Mrs. Currie: The Secretary of State has received the report of the oral hearing to Mr. Vail's appeal and expects to be able to issue his decision early in the new year.

Hearing Therapists

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total amount spent by his Department on posts of hearing therapists during the operation of the central funding scheme; if he is monitoring the number of posts now paid for by health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Allocations of revenue from central funds to the hearing therapist scheme are as follows:

	Non recurring, to cover costs during training (£ 000s)[1]	Recurring[2] (£ 000s)[1]
1978-79	25	Nil
1979-80	68	32
1980-81	81	88
1981-82	80	108
1982-83	110	104
1983-84	99	130
1984-85	124	112
1985-86	Nil	154

[1] At cost

[2] Each year's allocation has been built recurrently into Regional Health Authorities' cash limits.

It is for health authorities to decide on the number of posts that they wish to establish, and these are not formally monitored by the Department. We continue however to keep in close touch with the National Health Service training authority and the British Society of Hearing Therapists about the development of hearing therapy within the National Health Service.

Benefits

Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the latest take-up estimates for supplementary benefit and one-parent benefit.

Mr. Major: The latest estimates by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys of the number of one parent families in Great Britain for each year from 1979 to 1984, suggest that the take-up rate of one parent benefit over that period is as follows:

	Per cent.
1979	70
1980	77
1981	78
1982	83
1983	89
1984	93

Notes:

(1) The take-up rate is of those families who stand to gain. Not all families can gain because one parent benefit is taken into account as income for supplementary benefit purposes.

(2) The increase in child benefit (one parent benefit) for a single parent family was introduced in 1977.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Development Policy

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any proposals for reform of the Government's regional development policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My Department is carrying out a review of certain administrative aspects of our regional industrial policy in order to ensure that the schemes operate with the maximum effect and economy. Given the long time-span of private sector investment decision, it would be premature to launch into a fundamental review of the policy so soon after the last review was implemented.

Credit

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received about the availability of credit facilities to young people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: In the last year I have received some 22 letters expressing concern about consumer over-indebtedness, of which roughly one third have expressed particular concern about the availability of credit facilities to young people. I shall continue to keep the situation under review, but I do not believe it would be right to impose restrictions on the availability of credit to young people. However, the Consumer Credit Act imposes restrictions on the sending of circulars about credit to minors as well as providing a number of other valuable safeguards for all consumers entering into credit agreements.

Cigarettes

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will list in the Official Report the level of imports of cheap high-tar cigarettes into the United Kingdom in each of the past three years; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the countries who have exported cheap high-tar cigarettes into the United Kingdom over the past three years; and what was the level of each country's exports.

Mr. Alan Clark: Available information is limited to total cigarette imports, as tar levels are not separately identified in the OTS. Major exporters of cigarettes to the United Kingdom for the past three years are as follows:

United Kingdom Imports of Cigarettes

	£ millions
	1983	1984	1985
West Germany	7·3	28·9	46·1
Netherlands	18·0	9·4	11·3
Republic of Ireland	1·3	4·0	6·0
United States of America	1·4	4·2	5·5
Belgium	0·5	1·7	4·7
Others	2·4	3·2	2·9
Total	30·9	51·4	76·5

Japanese Imports (Duty)

Mr. Rippon asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will consider charging a duty on all Japanese imports equivalent to the duty they charge on Scotch whisky; what estimate he has made of the resulting revenue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: No. The European Community has launched a GATT article XXIII case against Japan on the discriminatory tax and duty treatment of imported alcoholic drinks. We are looking to the Japanese Government for urgent remedial action. If this is not forthcoming I shall press the Community to consider urgently how to pursue further its GATT rights.

Origin Marking

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he proposes to seek to introduce any changes regarding country of origin requirements in the labelling of manufactured goods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave on 1 December, at columns 434-35, to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor).

South Africa

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish a table showing the value of exports to and imports from the Republic of South Africa in the most recent annual period for which figures are available; and what steps he is taking to increase the level of exports to South Africa.

Mr. Alan Clark: The figures requested are as follows:

United Kingdom Trade with Republic of South Africa

	£ million
	Imports	Exports
1985	989·8	1,009·2
1 October 1985 to 30 September 1986	848·8	838·6

South Africa remains a major export market and my Department will continue to draw United Kingdom exporters' attention to the considerable opportunities which still exist there.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many trade missions have travelled to South Africa to promote exports in each of the most recent three years for which figures are available; and what missions are planned for 1987.

Mr. Alan Clark: Our records list those trade missions which received BOTB financial support. The numbers of such missions visiting South Africa in the last three complete financial years were as follows:

	Missions
1983-84	16
1984-85	12
1985-86	11

In line with the agreement reached by Commonwealth Heads of Government at Nassau in October 1985, Government funding for trade missions visiting South Africa is no longer available. Accordingly, the BOTB has funded no trade missions to South Africa in 1986 and has no plans to do so in 1987. In other respects, the normal range of officials assistance to exporters continues to be available to British business men who visit South Africa at their own expense, either individually or as a group.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the number of British jobs which are related to trade with South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: On the latest, but as yet incomplete, data for 1985, our best estimate is that about 90,000 full-time job equivalents may be involved in the export of goods and services to South Africa. This is a broad estimate based on the aggregate level of trade with that country, together with an assumption about the relationship between output and employment.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the restructuring of Sheffield Forgemasters.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Government have agreed to give a guarantee for £10 million to the bankers of Sheffield Forgemasters, subject to formal approval of the arrangements by the company's shareholders and loan stock holders. The guarantee is given in respect of additional facilities which the banks will make available to the company, and is provided under section 7 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 for an initial sum of £10 million, reducing in stages and expiring on 30 September 1988.

The decision to give the guarantee, first sought by the company last year, follows a re-appraisal of the company's financial prospects carried out by the Department earlier this year after the industrial dispute at the company's works last winter had been settled.

I am pleased that agreement on this guarantee has now been reached with the company and its bankers, which should help the company to complete its restructuring programme. This should in turn help the company's return to profitability, which is the only way of securing job prospects for those who work at Sheffield Forgemasters.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Statistics

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of foreign nationals at present serving sentences in Her Majesty's prisons.

Mr. Mellor: The estimated sentenced population of foreign nationality, other than citizens of Commonwealth countries, Pakistan and the Republic of Ireland, in Prison Department establishments in England and Wales was about 700 on 31 August 1986. The recording of nationality for citizens of Commonwealth countries, Pakistan and the Republic of Ireland is not sufficiently reliable for estimates of their numbers to be given.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of prison adjudications for each of the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: Statistics of the number of offences punished in each of the last 11 years are published annually in "Prison statistics England and Wales" (table 9.1) of the latest issue for 1985, (Cmnd. 9903). More than one charge may be dealt with at the same adjudication and the numbers of adjudications are not recorded centrally.

Boards of Visitors

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to appoint legally qualified clerks to the board of visitors serving in Her Majesty's prisons.

Mr. Mellor: There are no such plans. The White Paper on the "Prison Disciplinary System in England and Wales", published on 23 October (Cmnd. 9920), proposes the creation of new local panels of lay adjudicators forming a single prison disciplinary tribunal. Our intention is that these panels should have access where necessary to legal and procedural advice; the necessary arrangements will be the subject of discussions with interested organisations.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Ground asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many cases were awaiting resolution by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board at the end of each month since September 1981;

(2) how many cases were resolved by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board during each month since September 1981;

(3) how many staff were employed by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board at the end of each month since September 1981.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is given in the table:

Month	Cases awaiting resolution at the end of each month	Cases resolved during each month	Staff in post (part-time staff being each counted as one half)
September 1981	26,500	2,287	154

Mr. Ground asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the backlog of cases awaiting resolution by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board and the staffing of the board.

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to reduce the growing backlog of unresolved cases before the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board.

Mr. Mellor: As announced in connection with the Government's autumn financial statement, substantial additional funds are to be provided for the criminal injuries compensation scheme over the next three years. The additional provision for Great Britain in 1987-88 will be £33 million, which represents an increase of some 65 per cent. on the previously planned provision, and larger additional sums are to be provided in later years. The additional money will allow the recruitment of more staff for the board, and will finance substantially increased numbers of compensation payments.

Prisons (Costs)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department in which prisons the per capita costs per prisoner are (a) the lowest and (b) the highest in each of the past three years.

Mr. Mellor: Information on average weekly net operating costs per inmate for each penal establishment for 1984-85 and 1985-86 was published in the annual reports on the "Work of the Prison Department" for those years (Cmnd. 9699, appendix 2, table D, Cmnd. 11, appendix 2, table F). Equivalent information for 1983-84 was published in the "Prison Department Financial Report 1983-84", a copy of which is in the Library (see appendix 1, table 7).

The reports show that the establishments having the highest and lowest average weekly costs per inmate in these years are as follows:

	Highest	Lowest
1983-84	Albany	Kirkham
1984-85	Parkhurst	Rudgate
1985-86	Lindholme	Rudgate

Special factors affecting Albany's and Lindholme's costs were mentioned in the reports for the relevant years.

Race Relations

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the number of arrests arising from reported incidents of racial harassment in the Metropolitan police authority area, by borough, for each year since 1983, including the part year figures for 1986;

(2) what was the number of reported racial incidents in the Metropolitan police area by year since 1983, including the past year figures for 1986, by borough and by type of offence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am informed by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the available information is as set out in the tables. Detailed breakdowns by borough for the years 1983 to 1985 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Immigration

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines are issued to immigration officers at ports of entry concerning questions of an intimate nature to arrivals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Instructions are that questioning should be tactful, particularly when dealing with a member of the opposite sex and that questions which might be taken as casting a doubt on passengers' morals should be avoided.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many arrivals from (i) India, (ii) Pakistan and (iii) Bangladesh who have been in possession of visas have been refused entry to the United Kingdom since the visa requirement was introduced.

Mr. Waddington: Up to and including 2 December, one Indian, two Pakistani and five Bangladeshi nationals in possession of visas have been refused leave to enter.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what race relations training is given to immigration officers based at ports of entry.

Mr. Waddington: Training in racial awareness is included in the courses given to all newly appointed immigration officers and existing staff in the Immigration Service. Emphasis is placed on the careful handling of interpersonal relationships and the need for courtesy and impartiality.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints from arrivals in the United Kingdom in the last year he has received concerning the behaviour of immigration officers at ports of entry.

Mr. Waddington: From 1 January to 2 December this year 131 written complaints were received which related wholly or in part to the behaviour of immigration officers at ports.

Homelessness

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents for each police district of the Metropolitan police area are recorded as involving people who sleep rough in the current year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that the information requested by the hon. Member could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish advice given to the local police stations in the Metropolitan police area concerning the treatment of homeless people who present themselves at police stations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am informed by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that instructions are to be found in chapter 15 of the "Metropolitan Police Instruction Book", a copy of which is in the Library.

Police Manpower

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to increase the maximum permitted police strength in the county of Devon.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Devon and Cornwall police authority is responsible for determining the authorised establishment of the force, subject to my right hon. Friend's approval. An increase of 18 police posts was approved in January 1986, meeting in full the police authority's application. We are now considering an application from the authority for a further increase in 17 police posts in this financial year and hope to announce the outcome shortly.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place a copy of the finance and manpower code for the Metropolitan police in the Library.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Yes. I have arranged for the parts of the code that have been printed to be placed in the Library. The remaining parts will be added as they become available.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will detail those subjects covered by the Metropolitan police orders for each month since January.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The subjects covered in the Metropolitan police orders issued between January and October 1986 are shown in the table. The index of subjects covered by police orders issued in November has not yet been compiled.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Judiciary (Disabled Persons)

Mr. Evennett asked the Attorney-General how many judges, masters or registrars are (i) registered disabled or (ii) registered blind; and what steps the Lord Chancellor is taking to encourage the appointment of disabled or blind judges, masters and registrars.

The Attorney-General: No records are kept of the number of registered disabled judges, masters or registrars. There are no registered blind judges, masters or registrars. No steps are taken either to encourage or to discourage such appointments. However, all judicial appointments are subject to the condition that the appointee must be physically capable of discharging judicial duties effectively.

Mr. Evennett asked the Attorney-General what action has been taken by the Lord Chancellor's Department to provide access to court buildings for the disabled and blind.

The Attorney-General: New and adapted or reconditioned court buildings provide, to the maximum possible extent, all the facilities required for the disabled, including ramps and lifts as necessary. Other buildings have had improvements incorporated where this has been feasible. Court staff are always available to give assistance to disabled and blind court users.

Mr. Evennett asked the Attorney-General how many magistrates are (i) registered disabled and (ii) registered blind; and what steps are being taken by the Lord Chancellor to encourage the appointment of disabled or blind magistrates.

The Attorney-General: The number of disabled magistrates so registered is not available. Provided that their disability does not interfere with the discharge of judicial duties, properly qualified persons have an equal chance of appointment. Unfortunately, the deaf and the blind are in practice disqualified, the deaf owing to their inability to hear oral evidence, the blind owing to their inability to study documents and plans and to observe the demeanour of witnesses.

Braille Transcripts

Mr. Evennett asked the Attorney-General what facilities are provided by the Lord Chancellor's Department or otherwise exist for the provision of braille transcripts of documentary evidence and court documents.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor's Department has no facilities for the provision of braille transcripts. The Royal National Institute for the Blind and a number of other voluntary or commercial organisations provide such a transcription service. It would be for the party concerned to make his or her own arrangements to utilise these.

State Security

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Attorney-General what decision the Government has taken in regard to appealing against the judgment of the High Court in Dublin in respect of the publication of the book "One Girl's War".

The Attorney-General: Having taken counsel's advice in Dublin, the Government have decided not to appeal against yesterday's judgment of the High Court in Dublin. This judgment, for reasons based primarily on the constitution of the Republic, rejected the Attorney-General's application for an injunction to restrain publication of the book by Joan Miller.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Nicaragua, Honduras and El Salvador

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid has gone to (i) Nicaragua, (ii) Honduras and (iii) El Salvador in (a) 1984, (b) 1985, (c) 1986 and (d) 1987, projected.

Mr. Chris Patten: The latest available figures for gross British bilateral aid on a calendar year basis are as follows:

	1984 £	1985 £
(i) Nicaragua	9,000	116,000
(ii) Honduras	3,446,000	3,653,000
(iii) El Salvador	205,000	103,000

These figures are for total gross public expenditure on aid, which includes development aid, disaster relief, technical cooperation and Commonwealth Development Corporation loans.

Complete figures for 1986 and projected figures for 1987 are not available.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Everth Marin

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the death of Everth Marin in Colombia on 10 October.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of expressions of concern about the circumstances of Sr. Marin's death from hon. Members and other individuals and organisations.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings Her Majesty's diplomatic representation has had with human rights groups in Colombia in the last year.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's diplomatic representatives in Colombia maintain regular contacts with the Permanent Committee for the Defence of Human Rights, the most active Colombian organisation in this field. They also have close contacts with the human rights section of the Attorney-General's office, a body independent of the Colombian Government, set up earlier in 1986.

Nicaragua

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current level of Her Majesty's Government's diplomatic representations in Nicaragua; and whether an ambassador will be appointed solely to Nicaragua.

Mr. Eggar: Our representation in Nicaragua is at ambassdorial level. The ambassador resides in Costa Rica, with a charge d'affaires resident in Managua. Diplomatic staffing levels at all our posts overseas are kept under regular review.

Belize

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions Her Majesty's Government have had with the Government of Guatemala about their territorial claims over Belize; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Since Belize became independent in 1981 discussion of the territorial dispute has been a matter for Belize and Guatemala.

Guatemala

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the level of Her Majesty's Government's diplomatic representation in Guatemala during the current year; and when full diplomatic relations will be restored.

Mr. Eggar: Consular relations between the United Kingdom and Guatemala were re-established on 19 August 1986. We hope for an early resumption of diplomatic relations.

El Salvador

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings Her Majesty's Government's diplomatic representatives in El Salvador have had with CODEFAM, Committee of Mothers of the Disappeared, UNTS and Fenastras in the last six months.

Mr. Eggar: As part of their normal duties our diplomatic staff accredited to El Salvador maintain contact with human rights organisations and trade unions, as well as with political parties and the Roman Catholic Church.

Indonesia

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the occasions since January 1985 when United Kingdom Government or military officials have visited Indonesia stating in each case the purpose of the visit.

Mr. Renton: The principal visits have been as follows:

April 1985

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister; and senior officials.

June 1985

My right hon. Friend, the then Minister of State for Trade, the right hon. Member for Southend, West (Mr. Channon); and senior officials.

October 1985

Myself (to chair a regional heads of mission conference in Jakarta); and senior officials.

September 1986

My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction; and senior officials.

October 1986

My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary (to attend the EC-ASEAN ministerial meeting); and senior officials.

October 1986

My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food; and senior officials.

Other visits at senior level have included the following:

January 1985

Head of Defence Export Services Chief of Air Staff (Goodwill visit).

December 1985

Head of Research and Technology Policy Division, Department of Trade and Industry (in connection with Science and Technology Agreement). Assistant Secretary, External Relations Division, MAFF (accompanying trade mission).

January 1986
Head of Defence Export Services.

July 1986
ODA/DTI mission to negotiate concessional loan facility.

TRANSPORT

Manchester Outer Ring Road

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions there have been between the Government and local authorities in Greater Manchester about disposal of soil from the Manchester outer ring road Portwood to Denton and Denton to Middleton; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This Department held a series of discussions with the former Greater Manchester county council. We are now in contact with the minerals and waste disposal unit set up by the 10 Greater Manchester district councils. The Department is ready to hold any necessary further discussions with representatives of affected councils.

A1(M) Tunnel (Accidents)

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied that all reasonable steps have been taken to secure the safety of drivers and passengers in the advent of an accident in the newly-completed A1(M) tunnel at Hatfield.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. Day-to-day safety as well as measures for dealing quickly and effectively with a range of emergency situations have been a paramount consideration in the tunnel design. They have been the subject of extensive consultation with the police and other emergency services who recently simulated a major accident to test and get to know the operational facilities.

Motorways

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate his Department has made of the cost to business and industry of regular delays to traffic on newly constructed motorways such as the M1 to M25 link, and the approaches to it; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Estimates of the cost to road users of delays to traffic are generally made only in the context of specific proposals which will affect traffic conditions. Such proposals include road improvement schemes and arrangements during major maintenance. For proposed motorways, estimates are therefore made of the benefits from faster and safer journeys compared with conditions which would have existed had the motorway not be built. These appraisals take account of peak traffic flows and the effects on traffic on the approach roads. For the south-west sector of the M25, conditions are busier than anticipated and studies of the benefits of widening and other improvements are currently being undertaken.

It is expected that increased driver familiarity with the M1-M25 slip roads layout will reduce delays.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will list any significant motorway lane closures or roadworks which have been necessary within two months of the opening of any new stretch of motorway within the last two years; what is the specific situation regarding recently opened sections of the M25; and what action has been taken to reduce the cost to public funds of any necessary remedial measures.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The only significant lane closures occurred on the M25 motorway between junction 14 and Palmers Moor bridge, where there have been five lane closures, totalling 19 days.

These closures were necessary to enable the contractor to complete certain minor works which, by agreement, had been left unfinished at the time the motorway was opened to traffic. Normally, remedial work during the 12 months following completion is at the contractor's expense.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a statement on the traffic flow on the M1 and M25 motorways, especially between 7.30 am and 11.30 am and between 4 pm and 8 pm; to what factors he attributes the regular congestion in those periods; and what action he proposes to remedy the situation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The volume of traffic using certain sections and junctions of both M1 and M25 causes some localised peak hour delays. We have a number of measures already in hand to improve traffic flows and are currently looking to see what further action is required.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates of hourly traffic flow at peak periods were made by his Department when preparing for the direct link between the M1 and M25 motorways; what has been the actual outturn; and to what extent his traffic forecasts assume uninterrupted traffic flow at normal motorway speeds during peak periods.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I shall answer this question shortly.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the reason why traffic which had been flowing freely on the southbound carriageway of the M1 near to junction 11 at 10.58 am on 26 November had to come to an immediate halt in all three lanes without any prior warning; why the warning lights were not in operation to advise drivers to slow down in advance; and why serious congestion continued between junctions 11 and 9 at that time.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I know of no specific cause for the delays. Traffic flows on the southbound carriageway are normally high at this time of day and even a slight distraction for drivers could cause traffic to slow down and cause congestion which would take time to clear. Three accidents within the preceding two hours on the northbound carriageway, between junctions 9 and 10, may have had such an effect. It is for the police, who control the emergency signals, to decide whether they should be switched on. Automatic signals will be put on trial in the near future on the M1 northbound carriageway between junctions 10 and 19. These would, if successful, warn of congestion ahead. I will consider whether their use should, in due course, be extended or whether other forms of warning should be provided.

Carphones (Motorways)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to make it a criminal offence to use a hand held telephone whilst driving a car on a motorway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. Current legislation places a responsibility on drivers to maintain proper control of their vehicles at all times. A motorist who fails to do so as a result of distraction or lack of concentration is liable to prosecution. The revised "Highway Code", to be published in January, advises drivers not to use a hand held telephone while their vehicle is moving, except in an emergency.

Traffic Congestion (Newbury)

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Transport what measures his Department is taking to relieve traffic congestion on the A34 at Newbury pending the public inquiry about the possible route of the bypass and its construction.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Proposals to improve traffic conditions at Robin Hood roundabout are under consideration. Additional data are being obtained to enable a more detailed assessment of all aspects of the traffic problem to be made.

Newbury Bypass

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Transport why a public inquiry into the possible route of the Newbury bypass cannot be held in less than the currently estimated six to nine months.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Objections may be made until 29 January 1987. Thereafter, sufficient time will be needed to consider them and to evaluate any alternative routes proposed by objectors. Experience suggests that six to nine months is a reasonable estimate. The inquiry will be held as soon as possible.

Helicopters

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether there have been any further developments in respect of provision of search and rescue helicopters since 3 November.

Mr. Moore: The United Kingdom SAR committee endorsed the report of its working group at a meeting on 1 December. The report, a copy of which I am placing in the Library, contains some important recommendations, the most significant of which are:

that standard criteria should be agreed for the provision of SAR helicopter coverage around the UK for civil marine and aviation purposes that provision be made for a new SAR helicopter facility with an all weather-night capability in north-west Scotland and based in the Outer Hebrides that provision be made to keep a SAR helicopter in the Solent area and for this key facility to be upgraded to a full all weather-night capability

The report also recommends that the Ministry of Defence be requested to advise on the implications of shortening, for SAR purposes, call out times of Sea King helicopters at Prestwick and Culdrose; as well as other matters relating to types and capabilities of aircraft.

I welcome the report and will study its recommendations urgently.

My Department and the Ministry of Defence will carry out a joint review of the arrangements for SAR coverage around the United Kingdom coast, in the light of the report.

In the meantime, a helicopter will be provided in north-west Scotland as soon as possible and we are considering urgently with MOD how best to do this.

Goods Vehicles (Operator Licensing)

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether the review of the environmental provisions of the goods vehicle operator licensing system has been completed; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. I have placed a copy of the report of the review in the Library.

The review considered responses from about 50 individuals and organisations representing the industry, local authorities, environmental groups and the licensing authorities. A wide range of views was expressed, ranging from those who wished the scope of the environmental provisions to be substantially increased to those who wished to see them abolished. We concluded that the provisions seem to be striking a fair balance between the interests of people affected by goods vehicle operating centres in their neighbourhood and those of the road haulage industry. No major changes are therefore suggested. We propose, when the opportunity arises, to amend the legislation in order to:

clarify the law on the extent to which the environmental effects of traffic on roads within the vicinity of a centre is relevant consideration; limit the use of operating centres by operations with centres in more than one traffic area;

extend the range of activities involving authorised vehicles at an operating centre that may be subject to conditions imposed by a licensing authority; allow parish councils to make environmental representations; reduce the need for operators to advertise their applications in all cases.

The Department will be consulting interested parties on specific proposals in due course.

Blackwall Tunnel

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to improve the lighting and general appearance within the Blackwall tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Following my right hon. Friend's assumption of responsibility for Blackwall tunnel last April, he appointed consultants to advise him and his agents, the London borough of Greenwich, on its condition, maintenance and operation. Some changes to the lighting, ventilation and operating procedures have already been put in hand. We aim to make further improvements over the next few years.

Design (Consultancy Scheme)

Mr. Rathbone asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to encourage better understanding among senior managers in industry and commerce of the value of good design and, particularly, of his Department's funded consultancy scheme.

Mr. Butcher: I have been asked to reply.

As part of helping industry and commerce to improve international competitiveness the Department has a strategic interest in promoting the message that good design, together with related factors such as quality and marketing, are important ingredients for success in the market place. We have supported and contributed to a wide range of activities to spread awareness of this message among senior management in industry.

Last year we supported a series of design management seminars in four sectors—textiles, vehicles, information technology and leisure. As one of our many contributions to Industry Year we attracted top industrialists from over 60 major UK companies to design commitment conference, and encouraged them to spread the message further by holding design seminars with their suppliers. We are supporting a major conference on design management to be held on 8 December by the Society of Industrial Artists and Designers. We are supporting the Design Council's efforts to improve management awareness through major advertising campaigns.

The Department also offers practical help through the funded consultancy scheme, re-named support for design. With the longer-term aim of changing attitudes in industry towards design, this is targeted at small and medium-sized firms, giving them the opportunity to use expert design advice at reduced rates. Since its inception in 1982 the scheme has been successful in attracting nearly 7,000 applications for assistance and 3,000 projects have been completed. Successful case histories from the scheme are publicised as part of our management awareness effort.

PRIME MINISTER

Fixed-term Parliaments

Q140. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government will introduce legislation to provide for fixed-term Parliaments; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No.

Westland plc

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister when Sir Robert Armstrong first discussed with (a) her, (b) the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, (c) the then Secretary of State for Defence and (d) Mr. Bernard Ingham the letter from the Solicitor-General of 7 January to the then Secretary of State for Defence protesting at the leak of his letter of 6 January.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 17 November, at columns 49-50.

Jerusalem

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to support the establishment of a United Nations peacekeeping force for Jerusalem; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No.

State Security

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister whether she will set up an inquiry to establish whether Lord Rothschild had revealed information confidential to the security services to Mr. Ian Black, a journalist, in 1980 and 1981.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General gave to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 26 November, at column 268.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister if she will establish an inquiry into allegations that members of the security services conducted surveillance on Government Ministers in the 1970s under the code name Oatsheaf.

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister how many days in advance of the broadcast on 16 July 1984 of the Granada TV "World in Action" programme, "The Spy Who Never Was," Her Majesty's Government were informed that the programme was to be screened; and what information was sought from Her Majesty's Government by Granada.

The Prime Minister: It would be inappropriate for me to comment on matters which may arise in the proceedings concerning the Peter Wright case in Australia while those proceedings continue. I also intend to follow the precedent set by previous Prime Ministers of not commenting on security matters.

Pensions

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Prime Minister when pension arrangements for those with service in security services were last reviewed; and whether such pensions are inflation-proofed.

The Prime Minister: The last major review of public service pension schemes was in 1972. Pensions under those schemes are increased in line with the retail prices index in accordance with the provisions of the Pensions (Increase) Act 1971.

Engagements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 4 December.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 4 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today, including one with the Prime Minister of the Netherlands.

THE ARTS

News International

Mr. Greenway asked the Minister of the Arts what action he proposes to take regarding the banning of News International newspapers in public libraries in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I am watching the situation closely. The three authorities involved in the High Court proceedings, Camden, Ealing, and Hammersmith and Fulham, lifted the ban following the judgment, as have 14 others: Barnsley, Birmingham, Greenwich, Hackney, Harringey, Islington, Lambeth, Lewisham, Knowsley, Manchester, St. Helens, Sheffield, Southwark, and Waltham Forest. Six other authorities lifted the ban before the judgment: Coventry, Doncaster, Kirklees, Salford, Sandwell and Staffordshire.

I understand that only two authorities are currently not providing News International newspapers. These are Brent and Newham. News International has indicated that it may institute proceedings against authorities which do not lift the bans. It would not be sensible for me to take further action while News International action is pending, not least because of the additional costs to ratepayers if legal action is duplicated.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Children's Medicines

71. Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what advice his Department gives to manufacturers of children's medicines regarding the use of non-essential food colourants.

Mrs. Currie: Advice to manufacturers on the use of colouring matters permitted in medicinal products is given in Medicines Act leaflet No. 60 (MAL 60), a copy of which is available in the Library.

Benefits

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the increase in the value in real terms of housing benefit needs allowance since 1979-80 to the current year, and that projected so as to include the changes to take effect in April 1987, in respect of (a) single persons (b) couples/lone parents, (c) couples, both handicapped, (d) the dependent child addition and (e) single handicapped persons; and how this compares with changes in the retail price index in each case.

Mr. Lyell: The table shows such information as can readily be calculated: the first three columns show the needs allowance levels for the various categories requested at November 1979, July 1986 and April 1987. It is not possible to make a reliable projection of the real value of the needs allowance when uprated in 1987 since retail price index forecasts are not available in sufficient detail.

The needs allowances are not increased in line with the retail price index as they are only one component used in the calculation of housing benefit. The other main elements are the claimant's actual rent and rates, 60 per cent. of which are automatically reflected in the benefit calculation. For this reason the normal formula for uprating the needs allowances is linked not to the retail price index but to the level of the supplementary benefit long-term scale rate, plus 40 per cent. of average rents and rates, plus average water rates. In addition, wage earners benefit from an earnings disregard which we introduced in November 1979 and which has increased by nearly 350 per cent. since then. The retail price index increase over the relevant period is 61·8 per cent. and the percentage changes are set out in column 4 but, for the reasons stated, the comparison is inappropriate.

Housing Benefit: Needs allowances

	1	2	3	4
	Needs allowance levels			Percentage change column 2 over column 1 (1979-86)
	November 1979	July 1986	April 1987
Single person	31·05	48·10	48·90	54·9
Couple/lone parent	45·55	70·85	72·15	55·6
Couple, both handicapped	50·80	79·00	80·45	55·6
Dependent child addition	7·70	14·60	14·75	89·6
Single handicapped person	34·60	53·65	54·60	55·1

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people were dependent on supplementary benefit in London, broken down into local authority boroughs, in 1979 and on the latest available date.

Mr. Lyell: Information is not available in the precise form requested. Only details of the number of people dependent on supplementary benefit in the area previously covered by the Greater London council can be provided but these will take time to collate.

I shall let the hon. Member have a further reply as soon as this information is to hand.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library a copy of the circular he has sent to local offices on the April 1987 uprating of benefits.

Mr. Lyell: A copy of circular S24/86, which was issued to local offices on 3 November, is already in the Library.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those offices of his Department which have yet to complete the July 1986 uprating of benefits.

Mr. Lyell: The following offices have yet to complete the July 1986 uprating of supplementary benefit:

Finsbury Park, Hackney, Stoke Newington, Hendon, Canterbury and Thanet.

The uprating of other benefits has been completed in all offices.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is his latest estimate of the cost of the housing benefit scheme; how many people received housing benefit in 1985; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the latest estimate of the cost of the housing benefit scheme currently met by (a) central Government and (b) local government; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he proposes to increase the proportion of the cost of the housing benefit scheme met by local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current level of outstanding payment of housing benefit by the Department of Health and Social Security due to each housing authority in England and Wales.

Mr. Lyell: I shall let my hon. Friend and the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of housing benefit claims are initially incorrectly assessed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lyell: Administration of housing benefit, including assessment of claims, is the responsibility of local authorities who administer housing benefit, and information is not available centrally on the number of incorrect assessments.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications he has received in each of the years 1977 to 1985 for the treatment of a claim for supplementary benefit as a claim for (a) attendance allowance and (b) invalid care allowance pursuant to Regulation 9(5) of the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations; and how many such applications were successful in each of those years.

Mr. Major: I regret that information is not kept in the form requested. The available information relates to requests for a claim to supplementary benefit to be treated as a claim also for attendance or invalid care allowance under Regulation 9(5) of the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations 1979, and to requests to treat a document as a claim to attendance or invalid care allowance under Regulation 4 of those regulations. The available information is as follows:

Period	Applications made		Successful applications
	Attendance allowance	Invalid care allowance	Attendance allowance	Invalid care allowance
June 1983 to December 1984[1]	590	59	190	52
January 1985 to December 1985	407	98	109	85

[1] Records were not kept prior to June 1983. This period cannot be further separated into calendar years.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what criteria apply in determining whether to accept or reject applications made under Regulation 9(5) of the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations for the treatment of a claim for supplementary benefit as one also made for (a) attendance allowance and (b) invalid care allowance.

Mr. Major: There must exist a claim for supplementary benefit made on or after 29 August 1977 on which there is a clear indication that the person was likely to satisfy the conditions for attendance allowance or invalid care allowance respectively. If the supplementary benefit claim is accepted by the Secretary of State as a claim also for attendance or invalid care allowance, the claim is then subject to adjudication in the normal way in accordance with the legislation applying to those benefits.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average time, in weeks, currently taken to determine a request received under Regulation 9(5) of the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations from the date of receipt.

Mr. Major: About eight weeks.

Asian Mother and Baby Campaign

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the operation of the Asian mother and baby campaign.

Mrs. Currie: The campaign is a pilot project involving 16 district health authorities in 10 different areas. Its main feature is the employment of "link-workers", women conversant in English and at least one Asian language, whose role is to help overcome linguistic and cultural barriers between pregnant women from the Indian sub-continent and health professionals. The first link-worker scheme began in November 1984 and the most recent in April 1986 and for the first two years salaries are paid from special central funding. Although the professional evaluation will not be completed until mid-1988, early reports are encouraging and several authorities have already decided to continue the scheme when central funding ends. We hope others will consider developing similar schemes.

Population Statistics

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the 30 English non-metropolitan districts which have shown the greatest percentage growth in their electorate since 1981; and what has been the percentage growth and actual figures in each case.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is as follows:

Non-metropolitan County District (ranked by percentage growth)	Electorate		1981-86 growth
	1981 Register	1986 Register	Increase in electorate	Percentage increase
Milton Keynes	85,323	109,031	23,708	27·8

NHS (Property Sales)

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps are taken to ensure that the proceeds from sales of institutions emptied by the community care policy are transferred to those services which are becoming responsible for the care of their former patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Irving) on 29 October at column 183.

Family Statistics

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many families with children were dependent on supplementary benefit in 1979 and on the latest date available; and how many of this category had been on supplementary benefit for a year or more.

Mr. Lyell: The information is as follows:

Numbers of families with dependent children under 19

	1979 (thousands)	1984 (thousands)
Total	488	1,057
Number on benefit for a year or more	296	686

Disabled People

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consultations he intends to undertake with voluntary organisations of and for disabled people before bringing the various sections of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 into force or issuing guidance to local authorities and health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Appropriate voluntary organisations will be consulted before regulations are made under section 1 of the Act. We will consider separately whether or not it is necessary or appropriate to consult voluntary organisations on the implementation of other sections of the Act in each particular case.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to lay commencement orders for sections 5 and 6 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mr. Major: It was originally thought, on the basis of discussions with the local authority associations during the passage of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Bill through Parliament that sections 5 and 6 would not carry significant resource implications for local authorities. We had therefore hoped that these sections could be included amongst those parts of the Act which could be implemented quickly. The associations have however, in the light of further inquiries now produced some figures which suggest that implementation of these sections will indeed have significant resource implications. We have asked for urgent discussions with the associations to clarify this matter and these are now being arranged. Until this issue is resolved, I am unable to say when commencement orders might be laid to bring sections 5 and 6 into effect.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when he intends to lay a commencement order for section 11 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986;

(2) when he intends to lay commencement orders for sections 4, 8, 9 and 10 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mr. Major: As I said in reply to the hon. Members for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) and for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 26 November at column 289, we hope it will be possible to implement sections 4, 8, 9, 10 and 11 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 by 1 April 1987.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received seeking implementation of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Members for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) and for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 26 November at column 289.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider lifting the 31 December bar for those eligible for invalid care allowance following the European Court ruling.

Mr. Major: No.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what new steps he intends to take to advertise the eligibility for invalid care allowance following the ruling of the European Court.

Mr. Major: We have issued a new edition of leaflet NI 212 which includes full details of the extension of ICA to married women. We have written individually to 400,000 attendance allowance beneficiaries asking them to alert their carers to the extension of ICA. We have advertised the extension in the national press and journals, including women's magazines.

Up to 21 November, we had received some 85,000 claims from married women and new claims arrive at about 2,000 a week. We have no plans for any further publicity.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of claims he expects to be lodged for the invalid care allowance following the ruling of the European Court; and if he will estimate the number of those claimants drawing supplementary benefit.

Mr. Major: The number of claims received to 21 November from married and co-habiting women is 85,000. We continue to receive claims at the rate of around 2,000 a week. We expect, therefore, to have received about 97,000 claims by the end of the year. It is not known how many of these claimants are in receipt of supplementary benefit.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what factors have led to recent delays in the processing of awarded claims for invalid care allowance to married women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Once invalid care allowance is awarded by the adjudicating authorities, payment is usually processed the following week. There are no substantial delays in processing awarded claims.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services to what extent the appointment of additional consultants will be one of the special efforts to reduce hospital waiting lists, for which extra money was announced in the Chancellor's "Autumn Statement."

Mr. Newton: It will be for each regional health authority to decide what bids it wishes to make against the waiting list fund to make a significant impact on their waiting list or waiting time problem. It has already been made clear that the money will be carefully targeted and could be used, for instance, on extra staff, supplies or equipment.

Junior Hospital Staff

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the ratio of junior hospital staff up to and including senior registrars to consultant staff, excluding associate specialists, in each of the recognised specialties in each of the English health regions in the year for which the latest figures are available.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have the information that can be obtained without incurring disproportionate cost as soon as possible.

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what measure he proposes to correct the imbalance between the numbers of junior hospital doctors in training and the numbers of consultant posts available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Proposals to correct the imbalance in the hospital medical staffing structure, agreed between Health Ministers, chairmen of regional health authorities, and the Joint Consultants Committee, were published in July in the consultative document "Achieving a Balance", a copy of which is in the Library. The period of consultation has recently ended. In the light of the replies received, Ministers will be holding further discussions with health authorities and with the medical profession to develop detailed plans to put these proposals into effect.

Board and Lodging Allowances

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much has been paid out in board and lodging allowances in his Department's offices covering the Brighton, Kemptown and Brighton, Pavilion constituencies since 1979; how many claimant units received payment; and what is the average payment.

Mr. Lyell: I regret that information on amounts and numbers of supplementary benefit board and lodging allowances is not collected by individual local offices and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Hypothermia

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many deaths from hypothermia related causes were registered in the Newham borough since 1979, by month of registration.

Mrs. Currie: The table shows the number of deaths registered in the Newham Registration District (which is coterminous with Newham London borough) with any mention of hypothermia on the death certificate, irrespective of whether it did or did not appear as the underlying cause of death, by month of registration from January 1979 to 14 November 1986.

Single Payments

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many single payments have been paid out by his Department's office in Brighton for each month since January.

Mr. Lyell: Information is not available in the precise form requested. For each four week period since January 1986 the numbers of single payments made by the Department's Brighton office were as follows:

Four weeks ending	Number
14 January 1986	434
11 February 1986	659
11 March 1986	798
8 April 1986	855
8 May 1986	967
3 June 1986	919
1 July 1986	876
29 July 1986	798
26 August 1986	586
23 September 1986	572
21 October 1986	542
18 November 1986	591

Homeless People

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what advice his Department gives to family practitioners committees concerning the registration of homeless people with general practitioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Everyone normally resident in the United Kingdom is entitled to receive general medical services. If a person experiences difficulty in registering with a general medical practitioner, the family practitioner committee has a duty to assign him to a doctor's list. If a doctor refused to accept a person on his list he would still be obliged to provide any immediately necessary treatment for up to 14 days or until the patient was accepted by another doctor, whichever occurs sooner.

In 1985 FPCs were asked to indicate in their 1985-86 annual programmes whether there were any difficulties in their area in terms of people with no settled way of life obtaining general medical services. The results are currently being studied.

This year in response to special needs identified in parts of London two pilot schemes have been established, one in Tower Hamlets and the other in Camden. These schemes are taking primary health care to homeless people in the places where they congregate. The longer term objective is to encourage people to register on the list of a general medical practitioner wherever this is practicable.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, how many homeless people are estimated as not registered with a general practitioner in the current year; and what were the comparable figures for 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mrs. Currie: The statistics which the hon. Member seeks are not collected.

Embryo Research

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, pursuant to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 189, the proposed consultative document on the issues raised by the Warnock Report will include the suggested alternative draft clauses for future legislation to which he referred.

Mr. Newton: No. The document will indicate that when the Government bring forward comprehensive legislation on these issues they will offer Parliament alternative draft clauses on human embryo research.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Sport and Leisure Park

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the funding arrangements for the sport and leisure park proposed by the Joe Lindsay memorial youth group in west Belfast.

Dr. Mawhinney: A maximum grant of £207,925 is available from March 1986 to February 1987 in respect of the proposed Park and is made up as follows:

Wages	180,769
Administration and premises	19,656
Feasibility study	7,500

Disabled People

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultations he is undertaking on the extension to Northern Ireland by Order in Council of the provisions of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Consultations have already begun with interested Government Departments in Northern Ireland. This process of consultation will be carried through as quickly as possible.

ENERGY

Marine Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken in the last three years to ensure that marine pollution by drilling mud and drilling cuttings from production and exploration of oil and natural gas platforms in the North Sea under the United Kingdom's jurisdiction, is avoided where practicably possible.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: In October 1984 the Prevention of Oil Pollution Act 1971 was amended to include control of the use, on the United Kingdom Continental Shelf, of refined oils used to formulate oil based drilling muds.

In accordance with criteria agreed within the Paris Commission exemptions under the 1971 Act for the use of oil based muds may be issued. These exemptions prohibit the discharge of whole muds, require analysis of oil on cuttings, and for multi-well sites require the operator to carry out sediment monitoring before, during and after drilling.

In general no significant pollution risk arises from the discharge of water-based drilling muds and associated cuttings.

In some particularly sensitive locations the discharges of any muds and cuttings would not be permitted.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy at what intervals oil and natural gas platforms within the United Kingdom's jurisdiction are inspected to ensure compliance with regulations for the prevention and reduction of oil pollution.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Offshore oil production platforms on the United Kingdom Continental Shelf are inspected at least once each year by inspectors from the Department of Energy specifically to ensure compliance with regulations for the prevention and reduction of oil pollution. Other inspectors make more frequent visits and should they, helicopter pilots, or masters of offshore support vessels observe significant oil contamination of the sea, they report it to the Department of Energy.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy if permits issued by Her Majesty's Government to companies wishing to explore and exploit petroleum and natural gas include mandatory requirements to prevent, on the basis of the best available technology, marine pollution through technical and organisational measures.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: All licences issued to allow companies to explore and exploit petroleum and natural gas on the United Kingdom continental shelf state that the licensee shall not carry out any operation, authorised by the licence, which will interfere unjustifiably with the conservation of the living resources of the sea.

Before any development is approved, the Secretary of State for Energy must be satisfied that the licence operator will employ the best practicable means to minimise oily discharges.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what proportion of the consumer price for a unit of nuclear electricity is set aside for paying the cost of dealing with the waste occasioned by the generation of that unit;

(2) what will be the total estimated cost in 1986 money per unit of electricity generated of supervising the disposal of nuclear waste.

Mr. Goodlad: The Central Electricity Generating Board's Accounts for 1985-86, the latest year for which figures are available, include provision for the costs of nuclear waste treatment totalling around £70 million.

When averaged over the total electricity generated, these costs represent about 0·03p per unit. The electricity industry does not distinguish in its prices between nuclear and non-nuclear generation, but as a proportion of the overall price paid by consumers in England and Wales, these costs represent less than 1 per cent. of the total price of electricity.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Energy what are the latest relative total unit costs of the different types of electrical generation in the United Kingdom per unit, taking account of the cost of disposing of waste products.

Mr. Goodlad: The latest available comparative generation costs are those published by the Central Electricity Generating Board in its booklet "Analysis of Generation Costs 1983-84 Update", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what training exercises for emergencies have been held at Heysham 2 nuclear power station in the presence of one or more inspectors of Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate; what was the date and nature of each exercise; and what reports have been made by inspectors;

(2) what training exercises for emergencies have been held at Dungeness B nuclear power station in the presence of one or more inspectors of Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate; what was the date and nature of each exercise; and what reports have been made by inspectors;

(3) what training exercises for emergencies have been held at Hartlepool nuclear power station in the presence of one or more inspectors of Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate; what was the date and nature of each exercise; and what reports have been made by inspectors.

Mr. Goodlad: Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate requires emergency exercises to be demonstrated to their satisfaction before fuel loading, and at least annually thereafter, at all operational nuclear power stations. Formal comments are made by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate to licensees after each exercise.

Heysham 2 is approaching the fuel loading stage of commissioning. A team of inspectors from Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate observed exercises demonstrating its emergency arrangements on 18 July 1986 and 6 November 1986. The first exercise did not satisfy Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate, which required a second exercise. This was successful.

The most recent exercises of emergency arrangements at Hartlepool and Dungeness B nuclear power station took place on 19 November and 21 November 1986 respectively.

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the present stage of commissioning of each reactor at (a) Dungeness B, (b) Hartlepool and (c) Heysham 2; what problems have been encountered with each unit during commissioning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: This is a matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information other than educational and professional qualifications is provided in respect of named persons by a nuclear site licensee for Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate to judge whether a person is fit for his duties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: For any person to be appointed as a duly authorised person at a licensed nuclear site, Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate is notified in writing of the function to which the person is appointed, together with the person's qualifications and relevant experience.

British Nuclear Fuels

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, in the light of the recent study by Don Popplewell of the National Radiological Protection Board, he will now direct British Nuclear Fuels to release to independent scientists all its autopsy findings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: This is a matter for the management of BNFL. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Inspectors (Salaries)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report the current salary scales of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools in England, together with the number of these inspectors on each salary grade.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is as follows:

Grade	National Salary Scale £	Number in Grade on 1 December 1986
Her Majesty's Inspector (Grade 6)	18,020 to 24,302	375
Staff/Divisional Inspector (Grade 5)	23,730 to 27,065	65
Chief Inspector (Grade 4)	28,975 to 30,475	7
Senior Chief Inspector (Grade 2)	41,500 to 43,500	1
		448

Student Grants

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the changes in rights to higher education grants for mature students over the last five years, and give the dates of orders whereby these were effected.

Mr. Walden: The Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations do not define a mature student. Students aged 26 or over may be eligible to receive an older students allowance in addition to their basic grant if they satisfy certain conditions. One change has been made to those conditions in the last five years. Until 1 September 1986 students were eligible for the allowance if they had been in full-time employment for three of the six years immediately preceding the start of their course: but students commencing a course after that date must have earned sums totalling at least £12,000 at any time during the three years prior to the course in order to be eligible. This change was effected by the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations 1986 (SI No. 1306) which were laid before Parliament on 1 August 1986 and came into operation on 1 September 1986.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many mature students will lose their eligibility to statutory right to a grant for higher education as a consequence of changing the criteria to include remuneration as well as three years of employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: Students aged 26 and over may be eligible to receive an older students allowance in addition to their basic grant if they satisfy certain conditions. No students who were receiving the allowance under the arrangements operating before 1 September 1986 will lose their entitlement. Information about the number of students entering higher education since that date who would have qualified for the older students allowance under the previous criteria but who are not now eligible is not available. A number of students who were not eligible before will be under the new arrangements.

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the terms of reference for his inquiry into the funding of undergraduate student support; if they include part-time students; and when he expects it to be completed.

Mr. George Walden: The terms of reference of the student support review are:

> To review the present arrangements for the financial support of students studying at first degree level or equivalent in Great Britain and to consider the future basis for such support, having regard to:

(i) the situation and the maintenance needs of students, and the extent to which it is appropriate that those needs should be supported from public funds;
(ii) other actual and possible sources of support which would allow the removal of students from the social security system — including the case for a system involving loans as well as grants, and the contribution of sponsorship to the needs of students on vocationally oriented courses;
(iii) the Government's stated policies for higher education and access to it; and
(iv) arrangements made in other countries with developed systems for the financial support of students.

The review will consider the support of part-time students who are studying at first degree level. Its work is expected to be completed next year.

Teachers (Pay)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many teachers in post in England and Wales are drawn from ethnic minority groups; and what proportion of these are currently employed on the Burnham scale 1 or 2.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not collected by the Department.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many (a) male and (b) female teachers are currently employed in England and Wales; and how many (i) male and (ii) female teachers are on the Burnham scale 1 and 2.

Mrs. Rumbold: The latest information is for 31 March 1985 and is as follows:

	Full-time teachers[1]	Of which, number on Burnham scales 1 and 2
Male	165,380	68,170
Female	242,610	177,510

[1] The figures are provisional and cover full-time teachers in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England and Wales.

WALES

Housing Associations

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will clarify how much of the additional resources being made available for housing associations in Wales for 1987-88 is conditional on being used for restricted specific projects; and how much is by way of general increase to expand the normal activities of housing associations in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The additional resources are in part being made available to enable the Housing Corporation to make limited grants in support of specific projects to provide rented housing with private sector finance. Substantial additional resources will also be devoted to the conventional Housing Association grant-funded programme. The precise distribution of resources will be decided when we have considered the Housing Corporation's detailed proposals for its approved development programme in 1987-88 which we expect to receive shortly.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those local housing authorities in Wales which have registration schemes for houses in multiple occupation in their areas as confirmed by him under sections 346 to 351 of the Housing Act 1985.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: They are Cardiff city council and Swansea city council.

Council House Sales

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many council house tenants in Wales bought their houses under the right-to-buy provisions of the Housing Act 1980 and subsequent legislation in the financial year 1980-81 and each subsequent year for which figures are available; and what are his estimates for such sales in future years.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The number of council house tenants in Wales who bought their dwellings under the right-to-buy legislation is shown in the table:

	Local authority	New towns
1980-81	265	38
1981-82	11,219	506
1982-83	14,145	1,074
1983-84	7,258	456
1984-85	5,086	316
1985-86	4,833	277
1986-87 (Estimate)	5,000	[1]10

Estimates for future years are not available.
[1] Estimate only includes Newtown. Cwmbran figures have been amalgamated with those for Torfaen since April 1986.

Hill Farming

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he is satisfied with the present state of hill farming in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The annual review of the hill and uplands is not yet complete but an announcement will be made shortly.

Wales Tourist Board

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to give extra financial aid to the Wales tourist board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Details of the funds to be made available to the Wales tourist board for the financial year 1987-88 will be contained in the Supply Estimates usually published in March.

Schools Inspectors

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if there has been any change in the salary scales of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools in Wales since March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roberts: Yes. The following salary scales became effective from 1 April 1986:

Grade 4 (HM Chief Inspector)
28,350

29,100
29,850

Grade 5 (HM Staff Inspector)

23,730
24,741
25,754
27,065

Grade 6 (HM Inspector)

18,020
18,872
20,356
22,044
24,302

The Grade 4 scale was further revised with effect from 1 July as follows:

Grade 4 (HM Chief Inspector)

28,975
29,725
30,475

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools currently employed in Wales who have had no experience of teaching in primary schools; and how this figure compares with that on 18 March.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Fifty; this is an increase of three since 18 March 1986. I also refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him on 24 March 1986 at columns 347-48.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will arrange for the forward programme of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools in Wales to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. A particular value of reports by Her Majesty's inspectors is that they reflect the realities of educational practice, and this value would be reduced if programmes were published in advance.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current number of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools in Wales who have had no experience of teaching in schools; and how this compares with the figure on 24 March.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Five; there has been no change since 24 March 1986.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the figures for 1985 pertaining to the median waiting time and the maximum waiting time before admission to Singleton and Velindre hospitals for a cervical carcinoma.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman.

Disabled People

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) when he intends to lay commencement orders for sections 4, 8, 9, and 10 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986;

(2) when he intends to lay a commencement order for section 11 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I refer to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security to the hon. Members for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) and for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 26 November at column 289.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Wales what consultation he intends to undertake with voluntary organisations of and for disabled people before bringing the various sections of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 into force or issuing guidance to local authorities and health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Appropriate voluntary organisations will be consulted before regulations are made under section 1 of the Act. We shall consider whether it would be appropriate to consult voluntary organisations on the implementation of other sections of the Act as the need arises.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to lay commencement orders for sections 5 and 6 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: We are not yet able to say when commencement orders might be laid to bring sections 5 and 6 into effect.

Junior Hospital Staff

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the ratio of junior hospital staff, up to and including senior registrars to consultant staff, excluding associate specialists or sub-consultants, in each of the recognised specialties in each of the Welsh regions for which those figures are available.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The whole-time equivalents of junior and consultant hospital staff are:

Junior hospital staff and Consultant staff as at 30 September 1986 (whole-time equivalents)[1]

Teachers

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many teachers are currently employed in Wales; and how many of them are Welsh-speaking.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There were 27,952 teachers in full time equivalent terms in service in maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special schools at January 1986. Information on the total number who are Welsh speaking is not available.

However, a survey of secondary school teachers, carried out in 1984, revealed that nearly 4,400 or 30 per cent. of the total full-time and part-time teachers in maintained secondary schools regarded themselves as reasonably or fully fluent in oral Welsh.

Students (Financial Support)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that there is available for all full-time students in Wales undertaking courses at technical and further education colleges, a maintenance grant at least as great as the benefit they would receive if they were unemployed and dependent on supplementary benefit.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have been asked to reply.

Grants to students in non-advanced further education in England and Wales are made at the discretion of local education authorities; in addition the parents of full-time students up to age 19 receive child benefit. Support for students on degree level courses is under consideration by the student support review.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Telephone Calls

Mr. Roger King asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will make a statement on the arrangements for hon. Members to make international telephone calls from the Palace of Westminster: what record is kept of the number, length and destination of such calls; and what are the provisions for charging hon. Members for such calls made by themselves or their staff.

Mr. Biffen: Under arrangements approved by the Services Committee, hon. Members may make international calls from extensions on the Palace of Westminster exchange which must be booked through the House of Commons telephone operators. Records of international telephone calls are maintained for accounting purposes and hon. Members are billed by the Fees Office.

ENVIRONMENT

Houses (Multiple Occupation)

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide in respect of houses in multiple occupation information on (a) the total number of notices served by all local housing authorities in England under section 147 and schedule 24 to the Housing Act 1980 (now sections 366 and 368 Housing Act 1985) in respect of means of escape from fire for each of the following years: 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985 and (b) the total amount of special grants made by all local housing authorities in England towards the costs of means of escape from fire, including both mandatory and discretionary grants made for each of the above years.

Mr. Tracey: Information on the number of notices served is not available for all authorities. The following table gives information for England and Wales published by the Institution of Environmental Health Officers:

Year	Number of notices served	Number of authorities making returns
1981-82	2,889	85
1982-83	2,346	84
1983-84	2,301	82
1984-85	3,197	80

The Department's postal survey gave a figure of 3,853 notices served in 1983-84, the difference being probably accounted for by the higher response rate (96 per cent.).

The following table gives information for England on special grants (both mandatory and discretionary) for the provision of means of escape from fire:

Year	Number of grants	Total amount of grant £000
1982	1,130	1,604
1983	1,380	2,532
1984	1,830	4,303
1985	1,820	4,421

Marine Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the policy of his Department with regard to level of proof required that pollution is having harmful effects on the marine environment before appropriate action is taken; what criteria are used to decide when proof is sufficient and when damage becomes irreversible; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United Kingdom's regulatory authorities do not require absolute proof of environmental damage before appropriate action is taken. Where monitoring and research activities indicate trends which are likely to become unacceptable, action is taken by the appropriate authorities. Increasingly the United Kingdom is operating within a framework of nationally and internationally agreed quality standards into which safety factors are built and kept under continuous review.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the information which his Department has, within the last three years, exchanged with any other North sea states on (a) low waste/non-waste and low emission/non-emission technologies, (b) waste management, (c) the protection of aquatic environment, (d) substitutes and economic incentives and (e) technical suggestions with regard to solutions which render the disposal of wastes at sea unnecessary, namely recycling, reprocessing and waste disposal on land.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United Kingdom exchanges information with other North sea states on a regular basis through the Oslo and Paris commissions and their working groups, as well as through the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea, OECD, the EC and the international North sea conference. Such exchanges cover inputs, monitoring and related research, and waste management, recycling and alternative disposal options. Preparations for the international North sea conference are also considering the scope for applying cleaner technologies to discharges.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what initiatives his Department has proposed within (a) the London dumping convention, (b) the Oslo commission, (c) the Paris commission and (d) the EEC during the last three years to ensure that appropriate measures for the prevention of marine pollution are prepared and implemented as soon as possible.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government take their obligations in the European Community and as a contracting party to the London, Oslo and Paris conventions, seriously and conscientiously. Within the London and Oslo conventions the United Kingdom has instigated or been party to a number of collective initiatives in recent years, including a review of industrial waste disposal practices, the further improvement of controls over the disposal of persistent plastics at sea, and the elaboration of new guidelines for the disposal of dredged materials at sea. In the Paris commission and the EC we have in particular pressed for attention to be paid to the problems or organotins in marine anti-fouling paints.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions within the last three years his Department has exchanged information on national arrangements for monitoring and licensing discharges into the North sea with other North sea states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United Kingdom contributed to a paper prepared by the Germans for the 1984 Bremen North sea conference on the "Licensing and Monitoring Practices of Discharges in the Riparian States of the North Sea". The paper has subsequently been updated and discussed by the Paris Commission. The United Kingdom will participate in a comparison undertaken by the Paris commission of discharges from both sewage treatment works and industrial plant.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if Her Majesty's Government have made all the results of national pollution monitoring programmes available to parties of both the Oslo and Paris commissions to assist the joint monitoring programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United Kingdom participates fully in the joint monitoring programme of the Oslo and Paris commissions. The commissions agree on the work to be carried out under the programme and the United Kingdom supplies the relevant national data. In addition, the Government make available any other monitoring data relating to subjects under discussion within the two commissions.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what research his Department has conducted or commissioned in the last three years into the potentially hazardous nature of black and grey list substances entering the North sea within the framework of the Oslo commission, the Paris commission and the EEC.

Mr. Waldegrave: In addition to the information given in my replies to the hon. Member's questions on 27

November, at columns 311-17, about research relevant to the effects of organic synthetic compounds in the North sea, my Department has commissioned research during the last three years on the following grey list substances:

— boron, vanadium, sulphide, ammonia, iron, inorganic tin, copper nickel, zinc and arsenic.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the research papers commissioned or completed for Her Majesty's Government in the last three years examining the effects of nutrients from United Kingdom sources on the North sea.

Mr. Waldegrave: Within the last three years my Department has commissioned a research contract on the fate of fertiliser nitrogen in marine waters. In addition, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has commissioned a number of studies which include assessments of the effects of nutrients in the marine environment. While none of these is specifically directed to the North sea, it is expected that the knowledge gained will be of general application.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what new measures Her Majesty's Government have introduced in the last three years to protect the North sea from pollution of anthropogenic origins.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to his questions of 27 November, at columns 311-17. In addition, the enactment of part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 has further improved the controls exercised by my right hon. Friends the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland over the disposal of waste at sea.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list any recommendations currently being considered by his Department concerning the acceptable level of list I and list II substances in dredged materials to be disposed of in the North sea.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his question of 27 November, at column 314.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what reviews Her Majesty's Government have carried out within the last three years of methods employed by their environmental scientists to determine sediment contamination of the North sea by list I and list II chemicals with a view to achieving international comparability.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United Kingdom is playing a leading role in the studies of sediment contamination through the marine sediments working group of the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea and the joint monitoring group of the Oslo and Paris commissions. This has included intercalibration of sampling and analytical procedures for a range of metals.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to (a) prevent, (b) reduce and (c) monitor the input of potentially hazardous synthetic organic compounds into the North sea in the last three years.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave him on 27 November, at columns 311-17.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what research Her Majesty's Government have commissioned or completed in the last three years into the effects on marine, estuary and freshwater biota of the 129 potential list I substances mentioned in the communication of 22 June 1982 from the European Commission to the European Council on hazardous substances within the meaning of list I of European Council directive 76/464/EEC.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government have carried out exploratory surveys of the concentrations of some of the 129 substances and plan to continue this work. We have a major research exercise into the effects of organo tin compounds. We have reviewed the available date on toxicity, persistence and bio-accumulation and we have sponsored research aimed at the setting of quality standards for the several important uses of fresh and marine waters.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on national monitoring and research efforts currently being conducted to establish the environmental state of the North sea.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to his questions of 27 November at columns 311-17. In addition, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food undertakes a considerable programme of monitoring and research on marine environmental and fisheries matters in support of its statutory responsibilities. The level of resources committed to this programme is kept under review.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the research programmes Her Majesty's Government have established in the last three years to examine and improve knowledge on sedimentation processes and accumulation as well as on remobilisation of hazardous substances in the aquatic environment.

Mr. Waldegrave: Research on the movement and accumulation of sediment and on the mobilisation of metals has been commissioned by the Department as part of the ongoing work of the laboratories of the National Environmental Research Council, the Water Research Centre, and the Hydraulics Research Centre for the past six years. In addition, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has a programme concerned with sediment processes, accumulation and remobilisation of heavy metals in the aquatic environment.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek powers to require statutory water authorities in the United Kingdom to review periodically environmental quality objectives in relation to ongoing national and international research into the possible effects of list I and list II substances on the aquatic environment.

Mr. Waldegrave: Details of the standards laid down nationally in the United Kingdom for managing water quality were given in my replies to the hon. Member's questions on 27 November at columns 311-17. The standards are subject to review and may be revised by my Department in the light of experience of the water authorities or fresh scientific evidence.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how frequently he reviews environmental quality objectives in relation to ongoing national and international research into marine pollution.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department will review the quality standards set nationally for list II substances when it considers this necessary in the light of experience or fresh scientific evidence.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is satisfied that the current state of knowledge of the marine, freshwater and estuaries ecosystems is sufficient to ensure complete protection of these ecosystems from pollution from anthropogenic sources.

Mr. Waldegrave: While complete protection of all ecosystems is unattainable, and while there is always further progress to be made, I am satisfied that the research being carried out to improve our knowledge of aquatic ecosystems is adequate and that the main priority areas are being tackled.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent the environmental quality objectives adopted as a means of managing water quality take into account both the latest scientific data and the best technical means available to industry to reduce potentially harmful emissions.

Mr. Waldegrave: Information about the standards laid down in the United Kingdom for managing water quality was given in my replies to the hon. Member's questions on 27 November, at columns 311-17. The standards are subject to review and may be revised by my Department in the light of experience or fresh scientific evidence.

Quality standards are based on the effect of a substance upon the receiving environment; they are unrelated to technology-based emission standards. However, in setting consent conditions for individual discharges, water authorities may take account of the technology available to the firm concerned as well as the need to meet the quality standard in the receiving water.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what precautionary measures Her Majesty's Government have introduced within the last three years aimed at promoting the use of the best available technology to reduce emissions of airborne pollutants from United Kingdom industrial point sources.

Mr. Waldegrave: In the last three years Her Majesty's industrial air pollution inspectorate has issued six notes on the best practicable means for reducing emissions of airborne pollutants from scheduled processes. These were for cement works, mineral works, lead works, and the production of sulphuric acid, chlorine and ammonia.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken in the last three years to reduce the discharge of substances on the grey list in particular of specific heavy metals-metalloids, to rivers and estuaries discharging into the North sea.

Mr. Waldegrave: Information on the steps the Government have taken in the last three years to reduce the discharge of substances on the grey list, was given in my replies to the hon. Member's questions on 27 November, at columns 311-17.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to improve protection of the marine environment from pollution by mercury and its compounds with regard to mercury discharges from non-industrial services, in particular (a) thermometers, (b) batteries, (c) dental health establishments, (d) analytical laboratories, (e) electronic appliances and instruments and (f) chloralkali products for example sodium hydroxide.

Mr. Waldegrave: Advice on the storage, handling and recovery of mercury is contained in my Department's "Waste Management Paper No. 12", on mercury-bearing wastes. My Department has held discussions with representatives of the dentists' associations on the discharge of mercury from dental health establishments. As regards the use of mercury in analysis, my Department has suggested formally in its circular on implementation of EC directives on dangerous substances to water, that water authorities advise that mercury be used as little as possible in analysis and that discharges should not be disposed of to water. In addition, analytical methods for the determination of chemical oxygen demand which do not require the use of mercury are being introduced.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what detailed plans he has to deal with emergencies and accidents at sea involving the accidental release of oil or other noxious substances.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have been asked to reply.

The Department of Transport's marine pollution control unit, created in 1979, is permanently on call and is dedicated entirely to contingency planning for dealing with oil and other toxic substances spilt from ships at sea and to the direction of such counter-pollution operations as may be necessary. The unit has under contract a variety of resources at various locations around the United Kingdom coast which can be activated at short notice (a) to mount clean-up activities at sea in the event of pollution threatening the United Kingdom coastline or other marine interests, and (b) to assist local authorities with their onshore clean-up activities.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all oil pollution incidents reported by oil corporations to Her Majesty's Government within the last three years from vessels, production or drilling pipelines operating within the United Kingdom's jurisdiction.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I have been asked to reply.

In 1984, 47 spills from offshore installations on the United Kingdom continental shelf, totalling 130 tonnes of oil, were notified to the Department of Energy; 85 spills, in all 308 tonnes of oil, were notified in 1985. To date this year 148 spills, a total of 550 tonnes of oil, have been reported.

This figure does not include the oil spilt from the Flotta-Piper pipeline on 26 and 27 November 1986.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek powers to ensure that oil companies, wherever they use oil-based muds, reduce the residual oil cuttings using the best available solid control technology.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I have been asked to reply.

A condition of all exemptions, issued under the Prevention of Oil Pollution Act 1971, for the use of oil-based drilling muds, is that the operator shall install and operate efficient solids control equipment and continue to operate it at all times in such a manner as to reduce the oil content of the discharged cuttings to a minimum.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken in the last three years to seek to keep to a minimum the use of oil-based mud on oil exploration and drilling platforms in the North sea.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I have been asked to reply.

Drilling operators are permitted to discharge drilling cuttings contaminated with oil-based mud only within the conditions of an exemption from the Prevention of Oil Pollution Act 1971. Applications for such exemptions are accepted only where the use of oil-based muds is essential for geological, safety or economic reasons as agreed within the Paris Commission.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what toxicity test systems Her Majesty's Government have established in the last three years to classify oil-based muds as either low-toxicity or diesel-based.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I have been asked to reply.

The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food Fisheries research laboratory has developed marine toxicity test methods, involving measuring effects on brown shrimp, for both base-oils and oil-based drilling muds. The tests allow the discrimination of products with acute toxicities similar to diesel oil and diesel-based muds from those products of sufficiently low toxicity to be accepteable for use on the United Kingdom continental shelf under the provisions of the revised Prevention of Oil Pollution Act 1971.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what research Her Majesty's Government have commenced or completed in the last three years to develop alternative substances for base oils which are biodegradable and of low-toxicity as well as into the ecological impact of drilling muds based on diesel and alternative low-toxicity based oils.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I have been asked to reply.

The Department of Energy in consultation with the Fisheries Departments operates toxicity standards for oil used in formulating drilling muds. The oil industry and its suppliers use these standards when developing new base-oils and oil-based muds.

Government and oil industry scientists have conducted studies on the environmental impact of the discharge of oil contaminated drilling cuttings. This work has shown that the base oils used are highly biodegradable and that any environmental impact is localised.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Environment for what period of time nuclear waste will require to be supervised, given present technology.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government's regulatory authorities will expect facilities to be designed so that safety is not dependent on long-term supervision, but recognise that near-surface disposal of low level waste may require control of land use for some decades after the repository is closed.

Deep disposal of intermediate-level waste will require supervision only for the period before the repository is closed.

Homelessness

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his Department's current estimates of homelessness per London borough and the comparable figures for 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Tracey: The following table gives for those authorities responding to our questionnaire the number of households which, after due inquiry, were found to be homeless and for which the authority either accepted a reponsibility for securing accommodation or provided advice and assistance.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many hostel places per London borough are available for homeless people in each London borough and what are the comparable figures for 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Tracey: The Department does not collect this information. However, I refer the hon. Member to the series "Homlessness Statistics, Actuals" published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy, and to the report "Single Homelessness in London 1986" by the Single Homelessness in London Working Party. These give, respectively, information for successive financial years on hostel places available for homeless families and single people in hostels for which individual authorities are responsible and information for 1981 and 1985 on direct access, specialist and non-specialist places available for homeless single people in a wider range of accommodation including hostels. Copies of the CIPFA publications ar in the Library; the main relevant table from the working party's report is as follows:

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice his Department gives to local housing authorities concerning the provision of an address for homeless people for the purposes of obtaining medical care and registration with a general practitioner.

Mr. Tracey: Arrangements for ensuring appropriate access to medical services are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services.

Rates

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all services, subsidies, grants and other payments made by London boroughs in 1986-87 which are offset against contributions to the London rate equalisation schemes, giving details of the criteria used to determine which expenditure shall be allowed to be offset in this way.

Mr. Ridley: In determining the contributions of the City of London and the City of Westminster to the London rate equalisation scheme in 1986-87 I had regard to the following expenditure which I considered those authorities were likely to incur:

Contributing authority	Service or function supported	Expenditure in 1986-87 £'000
City of London	Museum of London	800
	Greater London Record Office	1,450
City of Westminster	English National Opera and London Festival Ballet	2,200

I did so because I considered that this expenditure would be incurred in carrying out functions for the benefit of some or all of the other rating authorities in Greater London.

Local Government Reorganisation

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish details of all services, subsidies and expenditure previously undertaken by the Greater London council which were transferred to (a) the Sports Council and (b) Thames water, showing for each body the details of services transferred and the total expenditure in 1986-87 on those services;

(2) if he will publish details of all services, subsidies and expenditure previously undertaken by the Greater London council which were transferred to (a) the Arts Council,

(b) regional arts associations, (c) the South Bank board, (d) the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission, (e) the City of London, (f) the Inner London education authority, (g) English Heritage and (h) other institutions, showing for each body the details of services transferred and the total expenditure in 1986-87 on those services.

Mr. Ridley: The destinations of functions formerly carried out by the GLC were set out in my Department's circular No. 8/86, issued on 18 March 1986. A copy is available in the Library.

I shall write to the hon. Member about his other questions.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the total current expenditure of each London borough in 1985-86 and 1986-87 (budgets) showing what part of the 1986-87 budget is attributed to services inherited from the Greater London Council.

Mr. Ridley: The latest information provided to the Department by each London borough on its total current expenditure for the years 1985-86 and 1986-87 is as follows:

	1985-86 £ million	1986-87 (budgets) £ million

The 1986-87 figures include expenditure on ex-GLC services as well as on other services. I have no information on how much is attributable to ex-GLC services.

Leased Plant

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from (a) local government, (b) leasing companies, (c) motor vehicle suppliers and manufacturers, (d) computer suppliers and manufacturers, (e) lift manufacturers and (f) central heating engineers on his proposals to count the value of leased plant against local authorities' capital allocations.

Mr. Ridley: I have received a number of representations from local authorities and leasing companies. I shall consider these representations, and consult the local authority associations prior to laying regulations before the House.

Local Authority Expenditure

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the estimates of local authority gross expenditure and income, excluding double counting of flows, for England in (a) 1985-86 and (b) 1986-87 using breakdowns consistent with those in table 1 of the Department of the Environment publication "Local Government Financial Statistics, England 1984-85".

Mr. Ridley: This information is not yet available.

Mrs. Roe asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, in the light of the report by the Public Accounts Committee on the control of local authorities' capital expenditure, he will now review the project control system for housing schemes.

Mr. John Patten: My Department has today sent to the local authority associations a consultation paper, prepared jointly with the Welsh Office, proposing the abolition of project control for new building and renovation schemes as from 1 April 1987, and its replacement by a system of unit cost limits which will not require the submission of schemes to the Department.

This change will reduce work both for local authorities and for the Department, and allow authorities to plan and implement their capital programmes more efficiently. It will also clarify their responsibility for achieving value for money in their housing schemes. To promote value for money the Department will be improving the statistics available on costs of schemes, and commissioning an in-depth study of a sample of recent schemes. The Audit Commission will also be providing guidance for local authority auditors on value for money issues.

Existing procedures will continue to apply where a local authority proposes to buy houses or land for housing.

I have placed copies of the consultation paper in the Library and the Vote Office. The local authority associations have been asked to comment by January 30 so that, if they are approved, the new arrangements can come into effect in 1987-88.

Urban Development Grants

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what research his Department is carrying out into the outcome of a representative sample of urban development grant-aided projects; which housing projects have been included in the sample, and how these were selected; according to what criteria the outcome of these projects is being evaluated; and when his Department intend to publish the full findings and recommendations of this piece of research.

Mr. John Patten: My Department has commissioned Aston university to research into the performance and impact of the urban development grant programme covering the period September 1982 to June 1985. The researchers are expected to report in two or three months' time. The research is based on a representative sample of projects, including housing projects. The individual projects are not being identified in the research report. The basis of the evaluation of housing projects will include the leverage of private sector investment, improving housing conditions and housing choice, jobs provided, bringing land and buildings into use, and environmental improvement.

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all housing projects for which urban development grant aid has been approved within the last 18 months; and if he will specify for each project (a) any capital receipt obtained by the local authority, (b) the level of grant aid per unit of accommodation provided, (c) the profit element included in developers' costs, (d) whether the units of accommodation provided were for sales or for letting at market rents and (e) any marketing element included in the developers' costs.

Mr. John Patten: Details of housing projects, which in a few cases are combined with other uses, approved for urban development grant since 1 June 1985 are as follows. For reasons of commercial confidentiality it is not the practice to disclose details of developers' costs or profits, though these are, of course, a central part of the UDG appraisal process. Information on capital receipts is a matter for the relevant local authority. All the schemes listed provide housing for sale except The Parade, Ladywood, Birmingham, which provides lettings on assured tenancies.

Housing (Improvement for Sale)

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all local authority improvement for sale schemes for which Exchequer subsidy has been paid during the last six years; and if he will specify for each scheme (a) the number of units of accommodation improved for sale, (b) whether these units were acquired by the local authority for improvement for sale, or previously let by the local authority under secure tenancies, (c) the level of subsidy paid per unit included in the scheme, (d) the capital receipt to the local authority from the sale of the properties and (e) the value per unit of improvements.

Mr. Tracey: I shall answer this question shortly.

Council House Sales

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all disposals of council housing during the last six years where the local authority obtained less than best consideration reasonably obtainable for the property; and if he will specify for each disposal (a) the consideration obtained by the local authority, (b) the best consideration considered reasonably obtainable and (c) why special consent was granted for the disposal.

Mr. Tracey: Disposals of council dwellings at a discount for owner-occupation are authorised by general consents and do not normally come before the Department. Disposals of housing land worth £100,000 or more for which individual consents have been granted since June 1981 are as follows. It was a condition of consent that the reduction in the land price should be passed on to purchasers within defined priority categories in the form of reduced prices for their houses or plots. The further details requested could be provided only at disproportionate expense.

(1) Sales of housing land for self build schemes

[1] Plus profit sharing arrangement.

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all disposals of council housing to housing associations during the last six years; and if he will specify for each disposal (a) the consideration obtained by the local authority, (b) the outstanding debt charges on the property and (c) whether the properties were subsequently (i) let at fair rents, (ii) sold under a lowest homeownership scheme and (iii) sold on the open market.

Mr. Tracey: The information is not readily available. The Secretary of State has granted a general consent for disposals of council housing at current market values for improvement and resale into owner occupation. Information about other sales to housing associations, under individual consents, is not held centrally and could be collected only at disproportionate expense.

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations his Department has received concerning (a) the requirement that where empty council houses are sold, the disposal must be for owner-occupation, (b) the requirement that where council houses are disposed of to housing associations, the transfer price shall be set at the local authority's outstanding loan debt where that is below the market value; (i) what specific issues have been raised, and (ii) which bodies have expressed themselves in favour of a relaxation of the requirement that empty council houses can be sold only for owner-occupation.

Mr. Tracey: The local authority associations and other interested bodies have commented on a consultation paper issued in September on the review of the general consents to the disposal of council houses and land by agreement. The proposals, which would include consent for the disposal of empty council houses for purposes other than owner-occupation, have generally been welcomed, but reservations have been expressed about the proposal that all disposals to housing associations should be at market value. The responses are under consideration.

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will raise the limit of £25,000 on discount under the right to buy.

Mr. John Patten: Yes. My right hon. Friend intends shortly to make an order setting a new limit of £35,000 in order to take account of inflation since 1980, when the present limit was set.

Sport (South Africa)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government regarding the extent to which the governing bodies of sport and individual sportsmen themselves decide whether or not to participate in contacts with sportsmen of South African nationality; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: Decisions on whether or not to participate in sporting contacts with South Africa are for the governing bodies of sport and individual sportsmen to make. The Government meet their obligations under the Gleneagles agreement by withholding public support for and discouraging such contacts.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent information he has obtained about the application of apartheid in sport in South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: This Department receives information on this and related topics from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and a number of other independent sources.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has offered to the rugby football authorities about the current visit to the United Kingdom of a group of South African students; whether he treats this group of students as an official South African team; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: No specific advice has been given to the rugby football authorities about the tour of a team known as the Hedgehogs. The Government remain committed to the Gleneagles agreement. All governing bodies of sport have been advised of our policy.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many civil servants employed by his Department and engaged primarily on regional matters are based in (a) Yorkshire and Humberside, (b) the north-east and (c) the north-west.

Mr. Ridley: The number of staff in my Department in each region at 1 December 1986 is as follows:

	Number
(a) Yorkshire and Humberside	98
(b) North East	95
(c) (i) North West	153
(ii) Merseyside Task force	50

Home Security

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to promote improvements to home security; and how much money is estimated to be spent during 1987-88 on these purposes.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 3 December 1986]: The Department is seeking to promote improvements to home security in a variety of ways. Among the most important are the following:

The estate action team is encouraging local authorities to improve security on rundown council estates as part of a strategy to revitalise them. A significant proportion of estate action's £75 million resources for 1987-88 will be spent on improvements to security, and on measures to reduce crime and vandalism.

The Department's priority estates project will be publishing a handbook of estate management shortly, which will include advice on improving security and reducing crime through better management.

The Department funds a number of crime prevention projects through the urban programme. Some £2·5 million is likely to be spent this year on projects directly related to home security.

It is not possible at this stage to estimate how much we will spend directly on home security measures in 1987-88, but the activities I have outlined illustrate the importance we attach to this subject. In addition to our own direct spending, we shall also be encouraging all those involved in housing, whether local authorities, housebuilders or owner-occupiers, to take security fully into account in the design and management of their houses.

Tributyl Tin Paint

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will immediately take steps to ban the manufacture and use of tributyl tin paint in British estuarian waters, in light of evidence on sex change in marine snails;

(2) if in the light of research by Dr. P. Gibbs and Dr. G. Bryan of the Marine Biological Association laboratories at Plymouth as to effects on marine life of the percentage content of copolymer in tributyl tin paint, he will now reduce still further the permitted percentage copolymer levels in the paint's content; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what assessment he has made of the effects on marine life of the use by yachtsmen of tributyl tin anti-fouling paints on the bottoms of boats.

Mr. Waldegrave: Extensive research and monitoring programmes, and co-ordination of other work going on in the United Kingdom were elements of the package of measures announced by the Government on 24 July 1985. These programmes are described in pollution paper No. 25, copies of which were placed in the Library when it was published in September. The results are assessed as they become available, and possible actions considered.

A full review of all the available information will be carried out during 1987 with a view to deciding what further actions may be necessary. The results of the research carried out by Dr. Gibbs and by Dr. Bryan will be considered as part of that review. The monitoring results for the current year indicate that water quality is still unacceptable in several areas but that, in estuarine waters for which comparative data are available, there has generally been a reduction in concentrations of organotin compounds.

My statement of July 1985 indicated that the permitted level or organotin compounds in copolymer paints supplied to the retail market would be further reduced in the coming year in line with advances in paint technology. Regulations will be introduced shortly which reflect these advances. In addition, all anti-fouling paints will become subject in the provisions of part III of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 on 1 July 1987. My right hon. Friend has at present no plans for any further legislative action, but we shall keep the situation under review.

Water

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the numbers and grades of staff presently employed in the water legislation division of his Department; and if he will give an estimate of the estimated expenditure in 1985-86 and 1986-87 on (a) staff and (b) other costs incurred by his Department in producing the White Paper (Cmnd. 9735) and subsequent preparations for water legislation.

Mr. Ridley: Work on the preparation of the White Paper (Cmnd. 9734) cannot be exactly separated out from other related work, but might amount to about 20 per cent. of the staff cost in 1985-86.

The expenditure of the two DOE divisions, whose main work is preparing the policies and legislation announced in the White Paper, is estimated as follows:

	Staff £	Other £
1985-86	156,609	103,561
1986-87	370,000	1,300,000

The staff in the water legislation division number 16 at the present time. They comprise one grade 5, four grade 7, seven executive and four clerical staff.

These figures do not include certain other costs, such as accommodation, which was borne centrally.

DEFENCE

Trident Missiles

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the year by which the research, development, engineering and testing of nuclear warheads for the Trident D5 missiles will be completed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The programme to develop the warheads for Trident will fully support the Trident in-service date of the mid-1990s.

Chemical Weapons

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence if provision for the storage of chemical weapons in the United Kingdom in time of crisis has already been made.

Mr. Stanley: There are no chemical weapons based in the United Kingdom and we have received no requests for such basing from the United States.

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence if any equipment necessary for the storage of chemical weapons has been delivered to Royal Air Force stations in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Stanley: No.

Bigeye Bombs

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has agreed to stockpile the casings for Bigeye bombs in the United Kingdom either now or in time of war.

Mr. Stanley: No.

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the F111 aircraft based at Lakenheath or Upper Heyford would be used as delivery platforms for Bigeye bombs in the event of war.

Mr. Stanley: No such request has been received. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the right hon. Member for Llanelli (Mr. Davies) on 15 May at columns 545-6.

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence if there are any plans to use Royal Air Force aircraft as delivery platforms for Bigeye bombs in the event of war.

Mr. Stanley: No.

Binary Weapons

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has agreed to stockpile any of the precursors for binary weapons in the United Kingdom either now or in time of war.

Mr. Stanley: No.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied that all reasonable steps are taken to secure the safety of local residents when nuclear weapons are transported along the A1(M) in Hertfordshire.

Mr. Stanley: For security reasons, it has been the practice of successive Governments not to comment on the routes or methods used to move nuclear weapons. I can, however, assure my hon. Friend that the most stringent safety precautions are taken whenever it is necessary to move nuclear weapons.

Departmental Codification Section

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the transfer of the codification section in the Ministry of Defence in Harrogate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Codification is one of many Ministry of Defence activities the management of which is subject from time to time to review. The most recent examination of codification has concluded that in the present circumstances the location of the codification section in the Ministry of Defence at Harrogate should remain unchanged.

RAF North Luffenham

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to receive the report of the inquiry into the future of RAF North Luffenham; and what representations he has received.

Mr. Freeman: The study into the future of RAF North Luffenham is continuing, and it is still too early to anticipate when the report will be completed. Since my noble Friend, the then Minister of State for Defence Support, met my hon. Friend and representatives of the Rutland district council on 30 April, I have received a submission from the council concerning the perceived effects of closure of the station on the local community. A reply will be sent very shortly.

Stand-off Missile

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the jointly developed long-range stand-off missile is capable of carrying a nuclear warhead; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The NATO staff target to which studies are being directed is for a conventional weapon and does not include a nuclear option.

Defence Establishments

Mr. Denzil Davies asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations of all Ministry of Defence establishments and facilities in Wales.

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations of all Ministry of Defence establishments and facilities in Scotland.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the locations of all Ministry of Defence establishments and facilities in the north-west of England;

(2) if he will list the locations of all Ministry of Defence establishments and facilities in the north-eastern region of England;

(3) if he will list the locations of all Ministry of Defence establishments and facilities in the south-eastern region of England;

(4) if he will list the locations of all Ministry of Defence establishments and facilities in the south-west region of England.

Mr. Freeman: I shall write to the right hon. and hon. Gentlemen.

Tucano

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the Tucano to be in service with the Royal Air Force as its basic trainer; what was the date originally planned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I shall answer shortly.

Belize

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Defence what non-United Kingdom forces have had use of British facilities in Belize over the last three years.

Mr. Stanley: I shall answer shortly.

Officers (El Salvador)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many serving officers of the armed forces of El Salvador have received training or briefing at Ministry of Defence establishments in the United Kingdom over the past year.

Mr. Freeman: One member of the Salvadorean armed forces is currently undergoing training at a Ministry of Defence Establishment in the United Kingdom. No other training or briefings have been provided during the last year.

Royal Dockyards

Mr. Stevens asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future management of the royal dockyards.

Mr. Younger: I am now satisfied that there exists the basis for an advantageous contract to be placed for the future operation of Rosyth dockyard with Babcock Thorn Ltd. Under the arrangements that have been negotiated to date, a contract could offer the possibility of saving some £38 million over the seven-year term contract, with the prospect of annual savings exceeding £15 million thereafter under any subsequent contract. The contract would encourage improvements in efficiency and enable the contractor to compete for commercial and naval work with no possibility of cross-subsidy from the core programme of naval refitting. I have provided further information to the trade unions in a response to their paper of 24 November, and do not intend to take a final decision on the placing of a contract until I have taken account of any further trade union views and have satisfied myself that the continuing process of consultation with the trade unions has fully met my obligations under the Dockyard Services Act.

Negotiations for a contract for the operation of Devonport are continuing, and I expect to be able to make a further announcement shortly.

A copy of my letter to the trade unions has been placed in the Library of the House.

CIVIL SERVICE

Vacancies (Greater London)

Mr. Evans asked the Minister for the Civil Service how many vacancies presently exist at clerical officer and clerical assistant level, respectively, in the Civil Service in the Greater London area.

Mr. Luce: Responsibility for recruitment to the grades of clerical officer and clerical assistant rests with Government Departments individually. Information on the number of vacancies in these grades is not held centrally and I regret that the information requested could not be obtained by the Cabinet Office (Management and Personnel Office) without incurring disproportionate expenditure.

EMPLOYMENT

Training

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Paymaster General what is the total number of people subject to special employment and training measures at the latest available date for the Islington, South constituency; and what are the measures and the numbers affected in each case.

Mr. Lee: It is not possible to give a precise total figure because of the various bases on which local information is collated. The number of people participating in the following employment measures and training in the Islington, South constituency on 31 October was:

	Number
Community Industry	99
YTS	387
Voluntary Projects Programme	10
Adult Training	179

In addition, in the area covering the boroughs of Hackney, City, Islington, Tower Hamlets, Camden, Westminster, Kensington and Chelsea, and Hammersmith and Fulham, which includes the Islington, South constituency, there are 4,954 people on the community programme and 637 people receiving the enterprise allowance. In London and the south-east 4,308 people were participating in the new workers scheme. A further breakdown for these schemes for the Islington, South constituency is available only at disproportionate cost.

Tobacco Industry

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General how many workers were employed in the tobacco industry at the latest date; and what was the figure in June 1979.

Mr. Lee: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Rooker asked the Paymaster General if he will list the schemes run by his Department which are available to long-term unemployed males who are not eligible for benefit due to their partner working with an income above supplementary benefit levels.

Mr. Lee: The main schemes run by my Department and the Manpower Services Commission which are available to long-term unemployed males who fall into this category are as follows:

New Workers Scheme
Voluntary Projects Programme
Community Industry
YTS
Training for Enterprise
Wider Opportunities Training Programme
Access to Information Technology
Job Training Scheme
Jobclubs
Travel to Interview Schemes
Open Tech Programme
Career Development Loans[1]

[1] This is a pilot scheme which is running for a three-year period from April 1986 in Aberdeen, Bristol/Bath, Greater Manchester and Reading/Slough.

In addition, all long-term unemployed people who are signing on at a benefit office for credit of national insurance contributions will be eligible for and called to a restart interview.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Paymaster General if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the number of people unemployed in each district council ward for the borough of Brighton and (b) the number of those people without a job for more than one year; and what percentage they constitute of the total number of people unemployed.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the number of unemployed claimants at 9 October 1986 in each electoral ward in the Brighton local authority district, and the number of those who have been unemployed for over one year.

	Total unemployed	Unemployed over one year	Percentage of total
Elm Grove	466	169	36·3
Falmer	696	349	50·1
Hanover	466	167	35·8
Hollingbury	427	158	37·0
King's Cliff	644	272	42·2
Lewes Road	558	196	35·1
Montpelier	742	303	40·8
Moulsecoomb	400	157	39·2
Patcham	201	58	28·9
Pier	836	366	43·8
Preston	377	116	30·8
Preston Park	389	136	35·0
Queen's Park	591	253	42·8
Regency	1,068	428	40·1
Rottingdean	235	76	32·3
St. Nicholas	477	174	36·5
St. Peter's	396	134	33·8
Stanmer	353	127	36·0
Warren	580	225	38·8

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Paymaster General (1) how many claims for unemployment benefit were held at the adjudication office in Birmingham on 31 October 1985; (2) how many claims under consideration at the adjudication office in Birmingham on 31 October had been held there for more than three months.

Mr. Lee: The number of claims under consideration was 5,482. Information is not readily available about the number outstanding for more than three months, and this could be obtained only at disproportionate expense.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Permanent Secretaries (Pensions)

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average (a) lump sum and (b) annual pension entitlement to which a retiring permanent secretary has been entitled over the past five years; and what has been the highest sum in each category.

Mr. Brooke: Civil Service penions are based on salary at the time of retirement and the length of reckonable service; the lump sum is three times the amount of the annual pension. The information requested is shown in the table. The average pensions and lump sums shown are based on the average reckonable service of those in grades 1 and 1a who retired in the years concerned and the average salary in payment to these grades over the year to 31 March. The maxima are those for a grade 1 with the maximum length of reckonable service of 40 years at age 60.

	Average		Maximum
	Pension £	Lump sum £	Pension £	Lump sum £
1981-82	14,946	44,838	16,585	49,755
1982-83	15,491	46,473	18,875	56,625
1983-84	19,018	57,054	20,531	61,593
1984-85	18,916	56,748	22,322	66,966
1985-86	20,999	62,997	25,771	77,313

Shares

Mr. Baldry asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many individuals it is estimated owned shares in 1983; and what is the estimated number now.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Precise figures are not available, but survey evidence suggests that the number of individual shareholders is now around 7 million, double the 1979 figure.

Tax Havens

Mr. Dubs asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the annual loss of revenue to the Exchequer through tax havens.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that it is not possible to provide such an estimate.

Tobacco (Taxation)

Mr. Parry asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the current level of taxation on cigarettes, cigars, pipe tobacco and hand-rolled tobacco in each of the European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Brooke: As the information on this subject is lengthy, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Mr. Parry asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the revenue from taxation on (a) cigarettes, (b) cigars, (c) pipe tobacco and (d) hand rolling tobacco in each of the last seven financial years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: For information on the revenue yield of the exise duty on tobacco products I refer the hon. Member to table 23 on page 45 of the "Report of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise" for the year ended 31 March 1986. There is a copy in the Library of the House. Statistics on the revenue from pipe tobacco are not compiled separately, but pipe tobacco represents the bulk of the category "other smoking and chewing tobacco."

Estimates of the VAT revenue from these products are made on the basis of consumers' expenditure data, which do not provide disaggregated information for each of the categories mentioned. The table that follows shows the estimated VAT yield from tobacco products:

	Cigarettes (£ million)	Other tobacco products (£ million)
1979-80	390	60
1980-81	550	80
1981-82	620	100
1982-83	660	110
1983-84	700	110
1984-85	750	120
1985-86	800	120

Mr. Parry asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the European Economic Community concerning tax harmonization policies on tobacco; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: No formal representations have been made since June 1986, when agreement was reached at the Council of the European Communities to an indefinite postponement of the next stage of the Commission's proposals for further harmonisation of cigarette taxation.

Income Tax

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the percentage share of tax paid by the top five, 10 and 20 per cent., of income earners for the years 1978-79 and 1985-86.

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost in the 1987-88 financial year of introducing a reduced rate tax band of (a) 25 per cent. and (b) 20 per cent. on the first £1,500 of taxable income; and what would be the effect on the net income of (i) a single person, (ii) a couple where the wife is not working, and (iii) a couple where the wife is working and paying tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let my hon. Friend and the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Charities

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he now intends to lay the regulations governing payroll giving to charities under the Finance Act 1986.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 6 November, at column 518.

Mortgages

Mr. McCrindle asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning mortgage interest tax relief for joint unmarried borrowers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Value Added Tax

Mr. McCrindle asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with the European Commission concerning the extension of value added tax to new commercial buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The EC Commission's challenge on certain of the United Kingdom's zero ratings is a legal matter. As is normal in these cases, correspondence has been exchanged with the Commission and written pleadings have been lodged with the European Court. These procedures are preparatory to the oral hearing before the court (for which a date has yet to be set). The Government have publicly stated several times that they will defend their case robustly. In this connection I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment in reply to the Summer Adjournment debate on this subject on 25 July, at columns 923-26.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he plans to seek to extend value added tax to goods and services, not already covered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: No. I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget speech on 19 March 1985, at column 796.

Mr. Meacher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the percentage change in real personal disposable income for each year since 1970.

Mr. MacGregor: This information is published in table 3.16 of the 1986 edition of United Kingdom national accounts (the Central Statistical Office "Blue Book") which is available in the Library of the House of Commons.

Personal Incomes

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will make an estimate of the number of taxpayers earning less than two thirds of median male earnings in 1986-87; and what proportion this group represents of all taxpayers;

(2) how many (a) working families with children and (b) childless people in work had incomes below the tax threshold at the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon possible.

Income Tax and National Insurance

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) the proportion in percentage terms, (b) the amount in current prices and (c) the amount in constant 1985-86 prices of personal income taken by income tax and national insurance in 1986-87 for those at 2,000 per cent. of average earnings on the same basis as his reply of 26 March to the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw), Official Report, column 530-36.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The figures are in the table.

Income tax and NIC at 2,000 per cent. of average earnings in 1986-87

	£ per week	£ per week at 1985-86 prices	Percentage of gross income
Single
(i) Income tax	2,381·99	2,312·78	55·8
(ii) NIC	25·65	24·90	0·6
(iii) (i) plus (ii)	2,407·64	2,337·69	56·4
Married no children
(i) Income tax	2,366·76	2,297·99	55·5
(ii) NIC	25·65	24·90	0·6
(iii) (i) plus (ii)	2,392·41	2,322·90	56·1
Married couple both earning
(i) Income tax	2,203·18	2,139·17	51·6
(ii) NIC	51·30	49·81	1·2
(iii) (i) plus (ii)	2,254·48	2,188·98	52·8
Married couple with 2 children
(i) Income tax	2,366·76	2,297·99	55·3
(ii) NIC	25·65	24·90	0·6
(iii) (i) plus (ii)	2,392·41	2,322·90	55·9

Notes:

1. Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that households have no other tax relief apart from the standard allowances. Earners, including working wives are assumed to pay Class 1 National Insurance contributions at the contracted-on rate. The figures for National Insurance contributions are financial year averages .
2. Average earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of all full-time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence.
3. The married couple with both working is assumed to have joint earnings of 2,000 per cent. of average earnings. In calculating disposable income it is assumed that the joint earnings are split between husband and wife in the ratio 60:40.
4. For the married couple with two children, the percentage column expresses taxes etc. as percentages of gross earnings plus child benefit. For this purpose, financial year averages are used for child benefit.

Commercial Bills

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what index is now his preferred indicator of the competitiveness of British manufacturing industry.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 28 November 1986, c. 398]: For a complete assessment of the competitiveness of United Kingdom manufacturing it is necessary to consider measures of cost and price competitiveness and the effects of non-price factors.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Development and Advisory Service

3. Mr. Rogers asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many staff are currently employed in the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service; and how many were employed in June 1979.

Mr. Jopling: There are currently 4,390 staff in ADAS. Five thousand and four hundred and sixty eight were employed in June 1979.

Consumer Representation

13. Mr. Fisher asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to improve consumer representation on food matters.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I believe that current arrangements in general allow for an appropriately wide range of representation by consumer interests on food matters.

Land Use

14. Mr. Weetch asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his plans for alternative land use and the rural economy.

15. Mr. Maclennan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish a White Paper on land use policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: I have made a number of statements about my policies for the future of agriculture, including alternative land use and the implications for the rural economy, most recently at the annual conference of the society for responsible use of resources in agriculture and on the land on 24 September this year.

I shall continue to use all appropriate means to promote the Government's policy for agriculture and the reform of the common agricultural policy and to keep the industry informed of our thinking.

Cereals

16. Sir John Farr asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect of an imposition of quotas on cereal production.

Mr. Gummer: In my view cereal quotas would stifle initiative, strike hardest at the most efficient producer, lead to pressure for higher support prices and pose enormous administrative difficulties.

25. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many producers are currently liable to the cereals co-responsibility levy.

Mr. Gummer: Producers are intended to bear the impact of the levy, but are not themselves normally liable to pay it, as it is collected at the stage of processing, export, or sale into intervention.

26. Mr. Jackson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress is being made in introducing a scheme to divert land from cereals production.

Mr. Gummer: Our ideas on the diversion of land from cereals production stimulated a constructive discussion among Community Agriculture Ministers at the informal Council meeting in September. Since then useful detailed discussions have taken place with officials of the Commission and other member states. We will continue to encourage the Commission to come forward with proposals for a scheme that can be applied to the whole Community.

28. Mr. Cockeram asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reaction there has been to his proposals to divert land from cereals production.

Mr. Gummer: Our ideas on cereals land diversion received a constructive reception from other Agriculture Ministers in September and we are pursuing with the Commission the points made in discussion. Representations on our ideas have been received from many different sources.

32. Mr. Hardy asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to discourage criminal or improper activity in regard to the storage of surplus cereals.

Mr. Gummer: Inquiries are made into the reliability of prospective storekeepers. Their contractual responsibilities are closely prescribed and enforced and there is regular monitoring of their financial status and of the stocks they hold.

41. Mr. Andy Stewart asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy towards the introduction of any scheme of quotas for cereals.

Mr. Gummer: I remain totally opposed to the introduction of any scheme of quotas for cereals.

54. Mr. Key asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on his proposals for cereals land diversion.

Mr. Gummer: Representations on our ideas have been received from many different sources.

57. Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy towards proposals for compulsory restriction of cereals production.

Mr. Gummer: I am firmly opposed to such a policy.

69. Mr. Baldry asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what policies he intends to use to tackle the surplus of cereals.

Mr. Gummer: I shall continue to press in the Council of Ministers for a package of measures based on restricting the level of support to producers, complemented by the diversion of land away from cereals production.

Productivity and Wages

17. Miss Maynard asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the increase in productivity in the agriculture industry in each of the last three years; and what was the increase in real terms in the wages of agricultural workers in each year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information is as follows:

Total productivity, labour productivity and average earnings (in real terms) in agriculture—1983 to 1985

Year	Total productivity in agriculture[1] (United Kingdom)		Labour productivity in agriculture[2] (United Kingdom)		Average weekly earnings of all hired men in agriculture in real terms (Great Britain)[3]		Average hourly earnings of all hired men in agriculture in real terms (Great Britain)[3]
	Index 1983 = 100	Per cent. change over previous year	Index 1983 = 100	Per cent. change over previous year	Index 1983 = 100	Per cent. change over previous year	Index 1983 = 100	Per cent. change over previous year
1983	100	−2	100	−4	100	+6	100	+5
1984	108	8	117	+17	100	0	101	+1
1985	(fc)108	(fc)0	(fc)114	(fc)−3	103	+3	103	+2

[1] The measure of total productivity compares changes in the volume of gross agricultural output with those in the volume of productive inputs employed, namely labour, capital items and materials inputs.

[2] Labour productivity is defined as gross agricultural product at constant prices per whole-time man equivalent. The total number of man-equivalents is calculated from the numbers of farmers, partners, directors, and their spouses, salaried managers and full-time, part-time and seasonal or casual workers recorded at the June census, weighted according to their estimated annual hours worked.

Source: Table 24 of the White Paper of the "Annual Review of Agriculture 1986".

[3] Average weekly and hourly earnings of all hired men working full-time in agriculture.

Source: Employment Gazette, July 1986.

Forestry

18. Mr. Adley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out those matters relating to forestry for which he is responsible.

Mr. Donald Thompson: As a Forestry Minister my right hon. Friend has a general responsibility for forestry matters in England and, acting jointly with the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales, for forestry policy in Great Britain.

Common Agricultural Policy

19. Mr. Alexander asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the policies for reform of the common agricultural policy which he will be pursuing.

Mr. Jopling: The policy of the Government is to press for reform of the CAP, through price restraint and appropriate complementary measures, in order to tackle the problem of surpluses and their associated budgetary costs.

51. Mr. Deakins asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the anticipated cost of the common agricultural policy in the European Economic Community draft budget for 1987; and what is the percentage change from the cost in 1985.

Mr. Jopling: The 1987 Community draft budget, as amended by the Budget Council on 26 November, provides 24,174 mecu for expenditure under the common agricultural policy. This is 17·6 per cent. higher than expenditure in 1985.

Beef

20. Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the beef variable premium scheme.

Mr. Jopling: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) earlier today.

59. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the present state of the beef industry.

Mr. Gummer: The beef market has remained weak. Although slaughterings have been lower than last year, total supplies have been similar as a result of increased imports, particularly from the Irish Republic. A high level of intervention stocks continues to overhang the market. Nevertheless, producer returns have so far this marketing year averaged about 95·5 per cent. of the target price.

63. Mr. Marland asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what alternative methods of disposal are currently being considered for surplus beef stocks.

Mr. Gummer: Commission proposals for reform of the beef regime are currently under consideration in the Council of Ministers. The Government are pressing for the regime to be more market-orientated so reducing reliance on intervention and the consequent build-up of stocks. While surplus stocks remain, the Government support their disposal by the most cost-effective means. Intervention beef is available under a wide range of sales for both domestic and export markets.

68. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has plans for further encouragement for beef producers in the less-favoured areas.

Mr. Gummer: Beef producers in the less-favoured areas benefit from the wide range of support measures under the Community beef regime and also from the arrangements for the payment of hill livestock compensatory allowances, which for beef cows amount to some £50 million this year. I expect to make an announcement shortly on the rates of these allowances to apply in 1987.

Dairy Industry

21. Mrs. Shields asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning dairy farming in Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I receive frequent representations on the subject of dairy farming in Yorkshire and more generally. The House debated the subject on 1 December and I also refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave this afternoon to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) on the subject of charging.

24. Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many dairy farmers have applied to take part in his new outgoers scheme.

Mr. Gummer: By 21 November 62 producers had submitted applications to take part in the Milk (Community Outgoers) Scheme throughout the United Kingdom, representing some 10·6 million litres of quota.

29. Mr. Knox asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement about milk quotas.

Mr. Gummer: Surpluses in the dairy sector continue to be of grave concern. The Council of Agriculture Ministers is currently considering a package of measures aimed at tightening up the quota system and further reducing quota levels.

43. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on progress over the milk outgoers scheme.

Mr. Gummer: By 21 November 62 producers had submitted applications to give up some 10·6 million litres of quota under the Milk (Community Outgoers) Scheme in the United Kingdom.

45. Mr. Penhaligon asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on the European Communites new proposals for milk quotas.

Mr. Gummer: I support the Commission's efforts to reduce dairy surpluses and restore balance to the market. However, I strongly favour a policy of price restraint and direct action on quotas rather than measures which will render the quota system more inflexible.

Pesticides

22. Mr. John Carlisle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to take to control the residues of pesticides in agricultural products.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The safety screening of pesticides under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 takes account of their likely residues in agricultural products, and requires any residue to be safe. In addition, the Government proposed on 30 October to fix statutory limits for certain residues. I recommend my hon. Friend to consider the proposal, which I have placed in the Library of the House as a consultative document.

Inspection Charges

23. Mr. Hicks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the proposed charge for statutory visits for milk and dairy inspections; and what are the criteria that were taken into consideration in assessing the level of this charge.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham).

Grassland and Forage

27. Sir Peter Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to assess the potential of grassland and forage in relation to the needs of British farming.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I fully recognise the important contribution which grassland and forage make to our livestock industry.

The current research and development effort on production and utilisation of grassland and forage amounts to £23 million. This is an indication of the high priority which the Government attach to this work.

Fishing Industry

30. Mr. Allen Adams asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to strengthen the British distant water fleet.

62. Mr. Dixon asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the amount and planned structure of the British fishing fleet.

Mr. Gummer: The development of the distant water fleet is a matter for the commercial judgment of the vessel owners concerned, but they will be guided by the provisions of new Community measures, which were agreed in principle earlier today by the Fisheries Council, to improve and adapt structures in the fisheries and aquaculture sectors.

64. Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has for encouraging the expansion of the Grimsby fishing fleet.

Mr. Gummer: A number of measures already exist to encourage the expansion of the fishing fleet at Grimsby and other ports. These measures will be continued in the new fisheries structures regulations which were agreed in principle earlier today by the Fisheries Council. They will provide a sound framework for future development of the fisheries sector over the next decade.

Lamb Sales (France)

31. Mr. Ray Powell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to resolve the dispute with France over lamb sales.

Mr. Jopling: We made very strong representations to the French Government at the time of the interference with our lamb exports during October. That interference subsequently ceased. Various measures have been proposed within the European Community to deal with the situation on the sheepmeat market. We shall resist any measures which discriminate against British producers or traders.

36. Mr. Torney asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take retaliatory action against France if any tax or duty is imposed upon British sheep entering France.

Mr. Jopling: The treaty provides for the Commission and for member states to take proceedings against any member state which may be in breach of its treaty obligations.

Fertilisers

33. Mr. Favell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will extend the sampling of fertilisers by trading standards officers to cover intermediate bulk containers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Yes. An amendment to the Fertilisers (Sampling and Analysis) Regulations 1978 to allow sampling of intermediate bulk containers by trading standards officers will be laid before Parliament shortly.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

34. Dr. Marek asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he now expects the first management agreements to be secured in environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. Jopling: I expect to invite farmers in the designated areas to apply to join the environmentally sensitive area schemes early next spring.

Horticulture

35. Sir David Price asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set up an independent inquiry into horticultural marketing.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We have no plans to set up such an inquiry.

Agriculture (White Paper)

37. Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he intends to publish a White Paper on agriculture during the current Session of Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: The annual review of agriculture is taking place as usual and I expect to publish the resulting White Paper early next year. I have made several statements in speeches and debates in recent months about the future of agriculture. In this way the agriculture industry is kept informed of developments in the Government's thinking, but I keep in mind all possible means of promoting and explaining our policy.

Departmental Expenditure

38. Mr. Forth asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the expenditure plans for his Department over the next three years in the light of the Chancellor's autumn statement.

Mr. Jopling: In the autumn statement the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced that the new planning totals for expenditure on Agriculture, Fisheries and Food are:

£ million

	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90
Total	2,550	2,680	2,780
Comprising
IBAP and other EC expenditure	[1]1,660	1,780	1,880
Domestic agriculture, fisheries and food	[1]880	900	900

[1] Do not sum due to rounding.

For 1987-88 and 1988-89 respectively this represents an overall increase on previously planned expenditure of £90 million and £180 million. Much of this increase is accounted for by expected additional expenditure on market support under the CAP. This will be incurred by the Intevention Board for Agricultural Produce, mainly in respect of the cost of taking agricultural produce into intervention. This expenditure is unavoidable under present Community policies although most will be recovered when intervention stocks are sold.

Other expenditure for which Agriculture Departments are responsible will increase by some £50 million in 1987-88 and £60 million in 1988-89 which represents the net effect of a number of changes. The majority of these will result in higher expenditure on capital works. These changes include some £30 million additional local authority expenditure to reflect more closely the level of precept payable to water authorities to fund flood defence works; £6 million in specific grants to water authorities to reduce the risk of flooding from the sea on the east coast and in Seaford, Sussex; and £10 million in 1987-88, but with diminishing sums in the other future years, largely to meet commitments under present capital grants policy.

A detailed commentary on the plans will appear in the public expenditure White Paper to be published early next year.

North Sea Fisheries (Mesh Sizes)

39. Sir Walter Clegg asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the North sea mesh size which will be operative from 1 January 1987.

Mr. Gummer: The general mesh size in the North sea will increase from 80mm to 85mm on 1 January 1987. This is a first stage in increasing the mesh size to 90mm, which will take effect on 1 January 1989. The existing derogation for vessels under 300bhp fishing for sole will be retained and larger vessels fishing for sole will be able to continue to use 80mm meshes provided they have at least 15 per cent. sole on board and no more than 20 per cent. of cod, haddock, whiting and saithe combined.

Beam Trawling

40. Mr. Charles Wardle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on beam trawling in the EEC.

Mr. Gummer: The package of technical measures which was agreed at the meeting of the Council of Ministers on 23 September included significant new provisions to control beam trawling in the Community. The measures of particular interest to the United Kingdom fishermen are, of course, those which will apply within 12 miles of our coast and I am pleased to say that we have succeeded in improving upon the exising rules.

With effect from 1 January 1987 it will not be permitted to derate the engines of new beam trawlers nor newly installed engines in existing beam trawlers to meet the power restriction of 221 kw (300bhp). Permitted derating of engines in existing vessels will be limited to those of which the maximum power is not more than 300 kw (407bhp). Furthermore, no new beam trawler exceeding 24m length overall will be permitted to operate within 12 miles. In addition, the maximum aggregate length of the fishing beam permitted within 12 miles will be 8m.

These provisions, which are set out in Council regulation (EEC) 3094/86, will apply to all vessels including those of other member states with rights to fish in some parts of our 12-mile zone.

Animal and Plant Diseases

Mr. Coombs asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to prevent cross-Channel shoppers introducing serious animal and plant diseases to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I reminded cross-Channel Christmas shoppers in a message issued in October of the risks of introducing serious animal and plant diseases into the country and appealed to them to consider the position of Britain's farmers and growers. There are strict limits on the amounts of meat and plant material which overseas shoppers may bring back, and some products are totally prohibited. We take every opportunity of publicising the need for the public to follow the rules and so avoid disease risk to our animals and crops.

Food Labelling

Mr. Waller asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to announce his proposals relating to the labelling of fats and other nutrients.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We are still in the process of considering the many comments made on the proposed Fat Labelling of Food Regulations and on the guidelines for fuller nutrition labelling. We hope to be able to make a further announcement shortly.

Farm and Countryside Initiative

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress is being made in the farm and countryside initiative.

Mr. Jopling: The farm and countryside initiative is making excellent progress. In its first 10 months of operation 85 projects have been approved by the Manpower Services Commission's area manpower boards, creating 1,604 jobs for long-term unemployed people. Backed by the initiative, high quality projects are now coming forward which are of clear benefit to rural communities.

I am also glad to report that the National Westminster Bank has just confirmed that substantially increased national sponsorship funds will be provided in 1987. The bank has agreed that £100,000 will be available for England and Wales.

Council of Agriculture Ministers

48. Dr. Mark Hughes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the principal results of his period as President of the Council of Agriculture Ministers.

Mr. Jopling: My priority has been to focus the attention of Agriculture Ministers on the urgent need for reform of the common agricultural policy, particularly in the beef and dairy sectors, to which the Council will return next week. A number of specific decisions have been taken, of which the more important are:

Continued access for New Zealand butter in 1987 and 1988.
Establishment of a vineyard register.
Restructuring of vinegrowing in Portugal.
Implementation of the agreement with the United States on maize imports.
Arrangements for testing meat for residues.
Regulations concerning the protection of forests from fire and from atmospheric pollution.

Trent Grain Company

49. Mr. Ashley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if there hs been any stock loss of grain by the Trent Grain Company.

Mr. Gummer: A checkweighing operation at Uttoxeter, in premises previously occupied by the Trent Grain Company, has disclosed shortfalls in intervention stocks of wheat and barley. In view of the possibility of legal proceedings, I am not in a position to give details.

Inshore Fishing

50. Dr. Godman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he will be taking to improve the profitability of the inshore English and Welsh fishing treaty.

Mr. Gummer: I am sure that the new structures regulation which was agreed in principle earlier today by the Fisheries Council will provide the long-term framework within which the inshore industry can plan ahead with confidence.

Confectionery Industry (Butter)

52. Mr. Gregory asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the value of subsidised European Community butter which has been made available to the United Kingdom confectionery industry in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The amount of subsidy paid by the European Community on butter used in the United Kingdom for the manufacture of cakes, pastry goods, biscuits and sugar confectionery in each of the years since 1979 is as follows:

	£ million
1979	10·40
1980	13·75
1981	7·02
1982	15·21
1983	26·46
1984	24·90
1985	29·23
1986[1]	15·30

[1] up to 30 June 1986.

Fish (Marketing)

53. Mr. Nellist asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is satisfied with the Sea Fish Industry Authority programme for the marketing of British fish.

Mr. Gummer: In my reply to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 6 November I announced that the possibility of further Government funding for the sea fish industry development programme was under consideration. I am pleased to be able to say that following the recent public expenditure survey discussions, the Government have now agreed to provide a further sum of £4 million towards the cost of this programme over the next two years, up to the end of March 1989. I am confident that this additional funding will enable the authority to build on the considerable steps it has so far taken to improve the promotion and marketing of fish.

We shall be notifying the Commission of this proposed funding, as required by article 93(3) of the European Community treaty.

Food From Britain

55. Mr. Conway asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the operation of Food From Britain.

Mr. Gummer: On 22 September, Ministers announced new appointments to the council of Food From Britain. The appointments are designed to give the food and agriculture sectors contributing to Food From Britain a more direct influence over its operating strategy. The restructured council met for the first time on 19 November. Food From Britain is appointing boards for the home and export markets to draw up operational plans and budgets.

Sheep Scab

56. Mr. Cash asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what success there has been in measures to eradicate sheep scab.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Following a record 157 outbreaks of sheep scab in 1983, a concentrated effort has been made to control and ultimately eradicate the disease. This has involved, in particular, compulsory dipping nationally twice a year. The results have been encouraging, with 131 outbreaks in 1984, 74 in 1985 and only 46 so far this year. Complete eradication is attainable only with the continued co-operation of the sheep industry.

Farm Incomes

58. Mr. Livsey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on current levels of farm incomes.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The annual review of agriculture 1987 is in progress. A White Paper will be published early in 1987 which will contain the information sought.

Common Fisheries Policy

61. Sir Michael Shaw asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action is being taken to enforce the common fisheries policy in the European Community.

Mr. Jopling: It is, of course, the responsibility of each member state to enforce Community fishery rules in the waters under its fisheries jurisdiction and in respect of its own fishermen. Each member state has a national fisheries inspectorate to carry out this task. In addition, the Community established general rules on inspection, monitoring, record keeping and a Commission Inspectorate of Inspectorates to ensure even-handed enforcement throughout the Community.

As my right hon. Friend the Minister of State reported on 6 November, the Council of Ministers has now decided to strengthen these control arrangements and for the first time agreement has been reached to penalise overfishing. We have given priority to obtaining these improvements and are delighted to have obtained them during our presidency.

Food Additives

60. Mr. Chapman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom system of control of food additives.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Food Act 1984 and regulations made under it provide a comprehensive system of control over food additives in England and Wales. Similar legislation applies in Scotland and Northern Ireland. This legislation is kept under review.

Independent advice to Ministers on the need for and safety of food additives is provided by the Food Advisory Committee and the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment. Further details of the United Kingdom's system of control are contained in information sheets in my Department's food facts series. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Country Landowners Association

65. Mr. Colvin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the Country Landowners Association; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Jopling: I met the president of the Country Landowners Association formally on 2 October 1986. We had a wide-ranging discussion about matters of mutual interest.

Fish Stocks

66. Dr. Michael Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken within the European Economic Community to seek to conserve fish stocks.

Mr. Gummer: We have attempted to develop and build upon the provisions of the common fisheries policy which were agreed in 1983. Each year we seek to agree total allowable catches and quotas for all the commercially important stocks to avoid quantitative overfishing. In support of these quantitative restrictions there is a raft of technical conservation measures concerning minimum mesh and fish sizes, closed areas and restriction on the use of certain gear.

I am delighted to say that during the first half of our presidency we succeeded in getting the Council of Ministers to agree a complete revision of the technical conservation regulation which represents major improvements in the conservation regime. It is also of paramount importance that these measures are all effectively enforced throughout the Community and, as I reported on 6 November, I was very pleased to have been able to steer the Council of Ministers towards reaching agreement on a regulation designed to strengthen the Community enforcement measures.

Agricultural Land

67. Mr. Philip Oppenheim asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received on the rating of agricultural land.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Recently, my Department has received only two representations on the rating of agricultural land, one urging the retention of derating and the other calling for an extension of derating to the keeping and breeding of all horses. Responsibilities for rating policy rest with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Sheep (Radioactive Contamination)

Mr. Strang asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the number of sheep which still have radioactive contamination levels above that acceptable for human consumption and following the Chernobyl accident.

Mr. Jopling: I regret that information is not available in the form requested, but only about 1.5 per cent. of sheep in the United Kingdom remain subject to the restrictions introduced following the Chernobyl accident and our live monitoring of sheep leaving the restricted areas shows that only a proportion of them show radio caesium levels above the acceptable level.

Prawn Fishery

44. Mr. Beith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the prawn fishery off the north-east coast of England.

Mr. Gummer: Departmental scientists regularly monitor this fishery. Their last report submitted to me in September 1985, and which was also communicated to the industry, suggested that yields could be increased if the minimum mesh size were to be increased or if fishing effort were reduced. An increase in the minimum landing size, which I know is favoured by some fishermen, would have no effect on the conservation of the stock and, indeed, would result in increased discarding which is already high. Subsequent monitoring by our scientists has so far confirmed their 1985 report but studies are continuing.

SCOTLAND

Forestry

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the potential for forestry in lowland farming areas.

Mr. John MacKay: The Government recognise the considerable potential for forestry in lowland farming areas. This is already encouraged through the Forestry Commission's forestry grant scheme and broadleaved woodland grant scheme, and we are considering ways in which it might be further promoted.

Hairdressing

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland under what industry heading the standard industrial classification of hairdressing was included for the purpose of compiling 1984 and 1985 employment statistics.

Mr. Lang: Hairdressing is classified as activity heading 9820 of the 1980 Standard Industrial Classification. 1984 and 1985 employment statistics were compiled on this basis.

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the most recent estimate provided to him of the current underspend of the Scottish Development Agency in 1986-87.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Development Agency does not currently expect to underspend its budgetary provision for 1986-87.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the level of long-term unemployment in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: On 9 October 1986, the latest date for which information is available, the number of unemployed claimants aged under 25 in Scotland totalled 134,774. The figure for December 1979 is not available, but on 11 October 1979 the corresponding figure was 71,271. This information, shown on a quarterly basis, is available in the Library. The figures are not comparable due to the various changes which have taken place in the compilation of the statistics over the period.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the latest unemployment levels in Scottish constituencies.

Mr. Lang: On 9 October 1986, the latest date for which information is available, the number of claimants who have been unemployed for one year or more in Scotland totalled 146,390.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the level of unemployment in Glasgow at the latest date; and what were the figures in December 1979.

Mr. Lang On 9 October 1986, the latest date for which information is available, the number of unemployed claimants in each parliamentary constituency within Scotland was as shown in the table. This information is available in the Library. Unemployment rates are not calculated for parliamentary constituencies.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the measures to reduce long-term unemployment in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: On 9 October 1986, the latest date for which information is available, the number of unemployed claimants in the Glasgow travel-to-work area was 113,412. The number of registrants at jobcentres in the Glasgow travel-to-work area on 6 December 1979 totalled 52,602. This information is available in the Library. The figures are not comparable due to the various changes which have taken place in the compilation of the statistics over the period.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the level of youth unemployment in Scotland at the latest date; and what were the figures in December 1979.

Mr. Lang: The restart programme and the community programme are the two principal measures designed to assist the long-term unemployed.

In the restart programme, which was introduced nationwide on 1 July 1986, Scottish figures show that 89 per cent. of the client group identified to date have been contacted, with 71 per cent. being either counselled or excused counselling. An offer of assistance was made to 91 per cent. of those interviewed. 75 per cent. of interviewees accepted the offer.

On 31 October 1986 there was a total of 32,121 filled places on community programme projects in Scotland. During the year to 30 September 1986 there were 38,976 entrants to the community programme, of whom 58·2 per cent. had been unemployed for 12 months or more.

These figures provide a good indication of the high proportion of long-term unemployed people in Scotland now benefiting from Government employment measures.

Disabled People

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when he intends to lay a commencement order for section 13 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Represention) Act 1986;

(2) when he intends to lay a commencement order for section 11 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986;

(3) when he intends to lay commenecement orders for sections 4, 8, 9 and 10 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986;

(4) when he intends to lay commencement orders for sections 12, 14 and 15 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986;

(5) what consultation he intends to undertake with voluntary organisations of and for disabled people before bringing the various sections of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 into force or issuing guidance to local authorities and health boards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: My written answer of 14 July, at column 380, to the hon. Member confirmed that decisions on implementation of different provisions of the Act will be taken in the light of consultation with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and other factors. This also dealt with our proposals to issue guidance as and when particular provisions of the Act are due to be commenced.

The convention has recently submitted substantially increased estimates of the costs involved in implementing the Act as a whole and these are to be the subject of further discussion with my Department in the very near future. Whatever the outcome of these discussions, I am hopeful that almost all the sections referred to by the hon. Member can be introduced during 1987-88 and I shall be seeking the convention's specific views on this possibility. Section 15 of the Act now appears as part of section 5(1) of the National Health Services (Amendment) Act 1986 and is already in force.

My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to consult voluntary organisations on the implementation date for provisions though there are certainly facets of particular provisions (including section 1 on the appointment of authorised representatives) on which he will wish to consult when implementation is in prospect.

Dairy Industry

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has sought improvements to the milk outgoers scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The Community milk outgoers' scheme is founded on Community legislation, which requires that it is operated on a United Kingdom basis. While the administration of the scheme might have been simpler if it had been set up on a regional basis, it is our intention to try to ensure that a disproportionate amount of quota is not extinguished in Scotland as a result of the scheme.

Historic Buildings and Monuments

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people are employed in the historic buildings division of his Department; and if he will set out their responsibilities and job titles.

Mr. Rifkind: The historic buildings division of the historic buildings and monuments directorate of the Scottish Development Department comprises the following staff:

	Number
Deputy Director (part-time) Grade 5	1
Personal Secretary (part-time)	1
Principal (part-time)	1
Principal	1
Senior Executive Officers	2
Higher Executive Officers	5
Executive Officers	6
Clerical Officers	8
Clerical Assistants	9
Full time equivalents	32½
Principal Inspector of Historic Buildings	1
Inspectors of Historic Buildings (1 Post vacant at present)	6
Assistant Inspectors of Historic Buildings	5
	44½

The division is responsible for the listing and conservation of historic buildings, and the payment of grants towards their upkeep.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the numbers, rank, and responsibilities of those employed within the ancient monuments inspectorate of his Department.

Mr. Rifkind: The ancient monuments inspectorate is part of the ancient monuments division of the historic buildings and monuments directorate of the Scottish Development Department. Its staffing is as follows:

	Number
Principal Inspector of Ancient Monuments	1
Inspectors of Ancient Monuments	7
Assistant Inspector of Ancient Monuments	1
Curatorial Officers Grade E	3
Conservation Officer Grade E	1
Senior Photographers	2
Graphics Officer	1
Higher Executive Officer	1
Clerical Officers	2
Clerical Assistant	1
	20

The inspectorate provides professional advice to the division on the maintenance and presentation and the development of the management of (i) the ancient monuments within the care of the Secretary of State and (ii) the Palace of Holyrood house.

The inspectorate is also responsible for the management of the directorate's archaeological programme.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many grants were awarded by him in respect of historic buildings and monuments in each year from 1979 to the latest available date;

(2) how many applications for grants for historic buildings and monuments were refused by him in each year from 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested in respect of historic buildings grants is contained, for the years 1979-80 to 1984-85, in the annual reports of the Historic Buildings Council for Scotland; copies are available in the Library. In 1985-86, 108 grants were offered and accepted, and 39 applications refused.

Grants to owners of ancient monuments are made under the Ancient Monuments and Archaeological Areas Act 1979. Information on grants awarded before 1983 is not available. In 1983-84, 11 grants were awarded totalling £67,274; in 1984-85, nine grants totalling £46,222; in 1985-86, eight grants totalling £36,480.

Voluntary Bodies

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has now received a letter from Mr. Alistair Lang, chairman of the Strathclyde urban aid action group, dated 20 November, requesting an early meeting; and when he hopes to arrange to receive a deputation from representatives of the voluntary bodies.

Mr. Ancram: Mr. Lang's request is presently under consideration.

Scottish Sports Council

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total cost and unit cost of printing, production and distribution of the Scottish Sports Council's annual report; and what is the grant provided by his Department to the Scottish Sports Council.

Mr. John MacKay: Final costs are not yet available. The estimated total and unit costs are respectively £9,040 and £5·02. Grant-in-aid to the Scottish Sports Council is expected to amount to £4·585 million in 1986-87.

Local Authority Officers

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the guidance given to local authority officers regarding standards of professional conduct in carrying out their duties.

Mr. Ancram: Guidance on this subject would be a matter for local authorities themselves, and for relevant professional associations. No such guidance has been issued centrally.

Commissioner for Local Administration

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any proposals for legislation in this Session in relation to the functions of the Commissioner for Local Administration in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: Yes. The Local Government Bill will include proposals to amend part II of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1975 so as to enable the commissioner to investigate complaints arising from the administrative actions of licensing boards, to provide him with wider discretion to accept and investigate complaints which are made "out of time", and to give him discretion to delegate to his staff the function of making reports. These changes, and others which have previously been made, will ensure that the powers and duties of the commissioner remain broadly in line with those of the local ombudsmen in England and Wales. Proposals for more fundamental changes in the commissioner's powers were included in the recent report of the Widdicombe committee. It would, however, be premature to consider legislation on any of those more radical proposals while the Widdicombe committee's recommendations are still the subject of consultation.

Housing

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what public expenditure provision he intends to make for capital expenditure on housing in 1987-88.

Mr. Rifkind: Public expenditure provision for capital expenditure on housing in Scotland in 1987-88 will be £548 million. This compares with provision of £458 million in the present year and represents an increase of 20 per cent. Public expenditure figures are net of capital receipts. When forecasts of those receipts are taken into account, gross expenditure is expected to be at least £720 million.

Council of Fisheries Ministers

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the outcome of the European Council of Fisheries Ministers meeting held on Wednesday 3 December.

Mr. Gummer: I have been asked to reply.

Together with my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Scotland I represented the United Kingdom at the meeting of the Council of Fisheries Ministers on 3 and 4 December, under the Presidency of my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

I am very glad to report that, pending the receipt of an opinion from the European Parliament, the Council reached a common position, subject to reserves by three member states, on a presidency compromise in respect of the Commission's proposals on fisheries structures. The proposals covered a range of measures designed to improve the structure and associated facilities of the fishing fleet over the next five years.

This marks a major success for the presidency. It means that the British fishing industry will be able to claim 50 per cent. grants for modernisation of boats. There will also be effective measures for reducing the catching capacity of the Community fleet and these fit well with the conservation measures agreed by the Council this year.

The package included provision for grants for the construction and modernisation of fishing vessels and permitted the rates of grant to be supplemented by national Governments up to the levels applying under the previous scheme. There is also provision for laying-up grants, grants for exploratory voyages, aids to aquaculture and assistance to improve port facilities. These measures, if finally approved, will be of considerable importance to the fishing industry.

TRANSPORT

M1 (Accident)

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the incident that occurred prior to 8.30 am on Friday 28 November north of junction 16 on the M1 motorway between London and Wakefield and which caused severe congestion.

Mr. Moore: Severe traffic congestion was caused on M1, and throughout Northamptonshire, on 28 November as a result of a fire on an articulated lorry carrying cans of oil. The vehicle stopped on the northbound hard shoulder immediately north of junction 17 (M45). The fire quickly spread to the vehicle's load, and became extremely intense. Burning oil spread over three lanes of the motorway, badly damaging the road surface. Emergency services promptly brought the fire under control.

The motorway was initially closed to northbound traffic, which was diverted via A45 and A5. Later some traffic was able to use the motorway while the road was resurfaced, though other traffic continued to be diverted. A short delay to southbound traffic was caused by smoke from the burning oil.

Transport Conference

Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the outcome of the conference, "Transport Without Handicap, A Priority for Europe" on 1 and 2 December.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This conference, which was organised by the Department of Transport as one of the initiatives to mark the United Kingdom presidency of the European Community, brought together nearly 500 people from 13 countries of Europe to discuss recent developments and future needs in the field of transport for disabled people. Delegates and speakers included representatives of transport operators, local and national Governments, voluntary sector groups and a large number of disabled transport users.

The conference provided a forum for an exchange of experience and expertise on a Europe wide basis and an opportunity to identify priority areas for future initiatives at both national and international levels.

Disabled People

Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to make available to a larger proportion of disabled people the facilities currently available through the mobility advice and vehicle information service.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department of Transport's mobility advice and vehicle information service provides advice and guidance to disabled people on driving and car adaptations. MAVIS was established a year ago, initially on a two-year pilot basis. Its operations are being closely monitored to establish the most effective way to make such advice available to disabled people throughout the country. The results of the monitoring and recommendations for future developments will be made in 1987.

In addition, the Department of Transport will be holding the third mobility road show on June 12, 13 and 14 1987. This major international motor show for disabled people has, in previous years, attracted many thousands of disabled people from all over the United Kingdom and Europe to look at and test drive a wide range of vehicles.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many civil servants employed by his Department and engaged primarily on regional matters are based in (a) Yorkshire and Humberside. (b) the north-east and (c) the north-west.

Mr. Moore: The total number of officers employed by the Department at our regional offices in Leeds (Yorkshire and Humberside region), Manchester (north-west region) and Newcastle (northern region) was 353 on 1 October 1986. This figure includes 16 local government officers working full time for the Department. The details are as follows:

	YHRO	NWRO	NRO
Civil Servants	143	145	49
Local Government Officers	14	2	nil
Total	157	147	49

Motorists (Eye Tests)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he proposes to introduce legislation to require motorists to take regular eye tests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. Current legislation already places the responsibility on motorists to meet, at all times when driving, a standard of visual acuity equivalent to an ability to read a vehicle number plate from a distance of 75 ft for characters 3½ in high or 67 ft for characters 3⅛ in high. The number plate test is one that motorists can take for themselves at any time and can be readily used by the police for enforcement purposes. Motorists who have any doubts about their ability to satisfy the test should consult an optician for further advice.

Research studies have not identified poor eyesight as a significant factor in accidents. There is no evidence to suggest that the present arrangements are failing to meet the requirements of road safety.

Roads

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what representations he has received concerning the construction of new roads on stilts above railway lines; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consideration is being given to the construction of a motorway on stilts between central London and Gatwick airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have received suggestions from time to time but have no proposals for such schemes.

An assessment study into transport related problems in the broad corridor between central London and Gatwick is under way. The consultants have been identifying the problems in this corridor. I hope to publish their report soon.

Motorways (Signs)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport what qualifications for those employed by temporary signing contractors on Britain's motorways are necessary to meet the road safety requirements of his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Detailed guidance on safety for both workmen and road users is contained in the various Departmental publications listed in trunk road management and maintenance notice 9/85, a copy of which is in the Library. Contractors are responsible for ensuring that the requirements are met and that their employees are trained accordingly.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the companies who tendered for temporary signing work on motorway contracts in Buckinghamshire during 1984, the level of each tender, and the price of the tender from the successful bidder.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's agent, Buckinghamshire county council, did not invite separate tenders for temporary signing work on motorway contracts in 1984. Traffic management arrangements at major works were part of the responsibility of the main contractors.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the standard of the work carried out under the temporary signing contract on the Buckinghamshire section of the M1 during the 1984 major works.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The employer for these works was Buckinghamshire county council, the agent authority for this part of the M1. The temporary signing was sub-contracted by the main contractor. I understand that the county engineer was satisfied with the standard of work.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the Association of County Councils concerning the regulations regarding the tendering by local authorities for signing work in respect of major works on motorways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am not aware of recent representations from the association on this matter.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether local authority repair and maintenance agencies are restricted from tendering for signing work for his Department during periods of major contracts on motorways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Agent authorities' direct labour organisations may tender for work for the Department but have no powers to work as a sub-contractor to a private sector maintenance contractor.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport what guidelines his Department issues to agencies doing contract work on behalf of his Department in respect of temporary signing work on motorway maintenance.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department issues detailed guidance in the form of standards, advice notes, manuals and site drawings. These publications are listed in the relevant trunk road management and maintenance notice (TRMM/9/85). A copy is in the Library.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will list the total cost of contraflow temporary signing on motorway contracts for the current year and the comparable figures for 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Temporary signing is often carried out as part of the main works contract. The cost is not recorded as a separate item.

Motorways (Maintenance)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations his Department has received from local authorities in respect of their ability to tender for motorway maintenance contracts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department has received no formal representations from local authorities on this matter.

Newbury (Traffic)

Mr. Michael McNair Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates his Department has made of the increase in traffic on the A34 through Newbury in 1988, 1990 and 1992, respectively.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The forecast traffic flows for the A34 near the Robin Hood roundabout (based on a 12-hour period on a weekday in May) are:

	Vehicles per day
1988	35,000 to 37,000
1990	36,000 to 39,000
1992	37,000 to 41,000

These figures take no account of the proposed Newbury bypass as this will depend on the outcome of the statutory procedures.

Docklands Light Railway

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Newham, South on the funding of the docklands light railway eastern extension, Official Report, 1 December, column 617, he will place in the Library a copy of the text of the assurance he has received from the London Docklands Development Corporation concerning private funding of the extension.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am unable to deposit the documents referred to as they contain commercially sensitive information. We believe that this part of the docklands light railway can and should be paid for out of the private and public sector development gains it is expected to generate.

Thames Crossing, Dartford

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to introduce legislation to authorise a new crossing of the Thames at Dartford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: I announced proposals for the construction of a new, privately financed, bridge to be undertaken by Dartford River Crossing Ltd., the concession company, on 29 September. Since then the Department and the company have been discussing in detail the statutory and contractual arrangements which will govern the construction of the new bridge and the transfer and operation of the existing tunnels. Discussions have been required with interested third parties, including the county councils, the Port of London Authority, and local landowners.

Many of these matters are novel and complex and it is important that we get them right. Nevertheless, good progress has been made, and I aim to introduce a Bill as early as possible after Christmas.

ENERGY

Berkley Power Station

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will now make available for independent assessment all the details of the incident at Berkley nuclear power station reported to the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate on 7 January 1983 and all the documents relating to the subsequent safety review;

(2) if he will now make available for independent assessment all the details of the incident at Berkley nuclear power plant involving the discovery of environmental contamination on 25 September 1980 and all the documents relating to subsequent inquiries;

(3) if he will now make available for independent assessment all the details of the discovery of weld defects at Berkley nuclear power station on 26 November 1980 and all the documents relating to subsequent inquiries;

(4) if he will now make available for independent assessment all the details of the incident at Berkley nuclear power station involving radioactive contamination discovered during work begun in January 1981 to remove a discharge pipeline and all the documents relating to subsequent inquiries;

(5) if he will now make available for independent assessment all the details of the incident at Berkley nuclear power station on 25 June 1981 involving radioactive contamination and all the documents relating to subsequent inquiries.

Mr. Goodlad: These incidents were independently assessed at the time by HM nuclear installations inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive. Descriptions of the incidents, and of the immediate subsequent investigation of the incident of 25 June 1981, are given in the HSE's quarterly reports for third and fourth quarters, 1980, first and second quarters 1981 and first quarter 1983. HMNII advises me that following the incident of 7 January 1983 a comprehensive safety review of the cranes was undertaken, leading to a programme of refurbishment, and that changed procedures were adopted to prevent damage to an operating reactor by an operating crane. They advise me that following the incident of 26 November 1980, remedial work was carried out on both reactors 1 and 2; and that the remainder of the disused pipeline exposed in January 1981 was removed under radiologically controlled conditions. All this work has also been assessed by HMNII, whose final agreement was required before the reactors could be restarted following the work on the defective bellows welds found on 26 November 1980; and is required before the operator will be permitted to resume normal operation with the cranes referred to in the report on 7 January 1983 incident.

Political Advisers

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list those currently employed by Her Majesty's Government to act as his political advisers.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have no political advisers.

Aerogenerators

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the number of aerogenerators of the largest size currently operating which would be required to generate 1,360 MW of electricity.

Mr. David Hunt: The largest aerogenerator currently operating in the United Kingdom is a 300 kW machine on Orkney. A total of 4,534 such machines would be required to generate 1,360 MW.

Elsewhere in the world there is a small number of 3 MW machines and there is a 3-MW machine currently under construction on Orkney. A total of 454 3 MW machines would be required to generate 1,360 MW.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Falkland Islands (Slaughterhouse)

Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will direct the Falkland Islands Development Corporation to reverse its decision to reject Captain E. P. Carlisle's proposals for a ship-based slaughterhouse to be operated by a Falkland Islands company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: No. The proposal has been fully considered by the Falkland Islands Development Corporation and I have no reason to ask for its decision to be reviewed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Telephone Calls

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Lord Privy Seal if outgoing telephone calls from offices within the Palace of Westminster are logged on a computer.

Mr. Biffen: In June 1985 the Services Committee decided that call information logging equipment should be fitted to the new Palace of Westminster electronic telephone exchange for system management purposes only. The information stored by this equipment can be accessed by only a severely restricted number of individuals, and there are no facilities for recording telephone conversations.

WALES

Health Authorities

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many associate specialists have been appointed in each health authority in Wales; and in what specialties; and what estimate he has of the actual financial saving to each authority.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Associate specialist posts are established with the approval of the central manpower committee. Costs are not a relevant factor in the determination of applications. Information on the overall cost of such appointments in not held centrally. The remaining information requested is given in the following table:

Vasectomies

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many vasectomies were carried out by (a) junior hospital staff and (b) consultants and consultant surgeons in each of the health authorities in Wales in the past year for which details are available.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The available information is shown in the following table:

Number of vasectomies carried out in hospitals in Wales in 1985

District Health Authority	Number
Clwyd	479
East Dyfed	195
Pembrokeshire	23
Gwent	165
Gwynedd	234
Mid Glamorgan	562

West Glamorgan	205

Details of the staff carrying out such operations are not available.

Morriston Hospital

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made with the proposed cardiac surgery unit at Morriston hospital near Swansea; and whether other centres for such procedure are envisaged within Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There are no plans to develop a cardiac surgery unit at Morriston hospital, Swansea. A unit at Cardiff is being planned.

Cardiac Bypass Surgery

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will enumerate the number of individuals registered with family practitioner committees within Wales that have received cardiac bypass surgery at hospitals outside the Principality in each of the past four individual years.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is not available centrally.

Cardiothoracic Surgery

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will detail the arrangements for cardiothoracic surgery within Wales, in addition to those at the university teaching hospital at Cardiff.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Facilities for thoracic surgery are available at Llandough hospital, Penarth.

Mammography Centres

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the locations of specialist mammography centres in Wales, enumerating how many such procedures were carried out annually at each centre for the last three individual years for which figures are available.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Statistics on mammography tests are not held centrally.

National Museum

Mr. Faulds asked the Secretary of State for Wales what funds voted for the purchase of specimens by the National Museum of Wales during 1982-83, 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 were vired for other purposes; and if he will specify the sums and the purposes for which authority to vire was granted.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is as follows:

1982-83	Nil.
1983-84	£100,000 for salaries and general administrative expenditure.
1984-85	£555,765 for salaries and general administrative expenditure.
1985-86	Nil.

Housing Condition Survey

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales why it was necessary for any of the civil servants and local government officers in Wales who have been involved in compiling the Welsh housing condition survey to be required to sign a declaration under the Official Secrets Act; and whether this has been required for each of the previous Welsh housing surveys.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The signing of declarations was not required in the previous survey in 1981, but it is considered that it would be a breach of confidence if those acting on behalf of the Welsh Office in undertaking the housing condition survey disclosed personal information gained in the course of their duties. The signing of the declaration under the Official Secrets Act served as a reminder to those engaged on the survey work about the confidentiality of information acquired in official work.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the approximate target date for publication of the current Welsh housing condition survey; and whether the scope of the survey will report to any significant extent from the scope of previous such surveys.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: It is hoped that publication of the 1986 Welsh house condition survey will take place in December 1987 or January 1988.

The report of the survey will differ in extent from previous reports as results will be published at local authority district level.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many people involved in compiling the current Welsh housing condition survey have been required to sign a declaration under the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: One hundred and forty four.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Middle East (Peace Conference)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government with regard to the resolution 38/58C of the United Nations General Assembly on the proposal for an international peace conference on the middle east.

Mr. Renton: An international conference could be valuable if the gap between the parties can be narrowed and they can agree on the principle and nature of such a meeting. With the majority of our EC partners we abstained on this resolution because we believe that an immediate conference would not be productive if these conditions are not met.

United Nations Association (Grant)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why there has been no increase in grant to the United Nations Association in the past five years; and if he will increase the grant in future in real terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The level of the grant-in-aid to the UNA is reviewed annually. The size of this grant together with those to other organisations has to be decided in the light of all the available information and of the limited resources available for all activities undertaken by the FCO. No absolute commitments can be given for future years.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the subject of the Falkland Islands has been discussed in the past 12 months in the context of European Economic Community political co-operation; what was the result of any such discussions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Our views on various aspects of the Falkland Islands question have been made plain to our partners. We have tended to use bilateral contacts for this purpose but my right hon. and learned Friend briefed his colleagues on 10 November on the Falkland Islands interim conservation and management zone and our views on the Falklands vote at the UNGA have been made plain in the Political Committee.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the other European Economic Community members voted in the recent United Nations resolution about the Falkland Islands; and what explanation they have given to Her Majesty's Government for their attitude.

Mr. Eggar: The majority of our European Community partners (Belgium, Denmark, Federal Republic of Germany, Republic of Ireland, Luxembourg and Portugal) abstained. French, Greek, Italian, Dutch and Spanish support for the resolution reflects a variety of considerations.

Diplomatic Missions

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what, for each diplomatic mission overseas, is the current (a) authorised establishment and (b) actual staffing level.

Mr. Eggar: The current diplomatic and aid wing authorised United Kingdom-based establishment at each post overseas is:

Western Hemisphere

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs into what divisions the western hemisphere is divided for the administrative purposes of his Department; which nations each division covers; how many home-based staff are allocated to each; and of what grades.

Mr. Eggar: The western hemisphere is divided for administrative purposes within the diplomatic wing of the FCO among five departments under an assistant under secretary. The nations each department covers and the allocation of home based staff to each are:

Department	Nations covered	Home based staff
1. North America Department	Canada, United States of America	Nine comprising five Diplomatic and four Administrative and Technical staff
2. South America Department	Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Paraguay, Peru, Uruguay, Venezuela, Polar Regions	18 comprising 11 Diplomatic staff and seven Administrative and Technical staff
3. Mexico and Central America Department	Mexico, Cuba, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Honduras, El Salvador, Panama, Belize, Guatemala, Dominican Republic	14 comprising eight Diplomatic staff and six Administrative and Technical staff
4. West Indian and Atlantic Department	Anguilla, British Virgin Islands, Montserrat, Turks and Caicos, Ascension, Bermuda, St. Helena, Tristan da Cunha, Cayman, Islands, Haiti, Bahamas, French Guiana, Guyana, Jamaica, Suriname, Trinidad and Tobago, Antigua and Barbuda, Bardados, Dominica, Grenada, Guateloupe, Martinique, Netherlands Antilles, St. Kitts, St. Lucian, St. Vincent Grenadines	16 comprising nine Diplomatic staff and seven Administrative and Technical staff
5. Falkland Islands Department	Falklands, Argentina	19 comprising 10 Diplomatic staff and nine Administrative and Technical staff

Aid wing activities are covered by two departments under one under secretary.

Department	Nations covered	Home based staff
1. Latin American, Caribbean and Pacific	Bolivia, Ecuador, Peru, Chile, Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Paraguay, Uruguay, Venezuela, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Anguilla, British Virgin Islands, Cayman Islands, Montserrat, Turks and Caicos Islands, Bahamas, Belize, Guyana, Jamaica, Suriname, Antigua, Barbados, Grenada, St. Kitts and Nevis, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, Trinidad and Tobago	14 comprising 11½ Administrative and Executive and two and a half clerical and secretarial grades
2. South Atlantic and Gibraltar	Falkland, St. Helena, Tristan da Cunha	Six and a half comprising five Administrative and Executive staff and one and a half clerical and secretarial grades

Iran and Iraq (Arms)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to take the lead in securing a United Nations embargo on the supply of arms to Iran and Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No, we do not believe it would be effective. Our own very restrictive policy on defence sales to Iran and Iraq remains unchanged. We do not sell any defence equipment to either side which could significantly enhance their capability to prolong or exacerbate the conflict.

PRIME MINISTER

Westland plc

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister when and by what means the chief information officer at the Department of Trade and Industry and the press secretary at No. 10 Downing street first became aware that a letter was to be sent by the Solicitor-General to the then Secretary of State for Defence alleging material inaccuracies in relation to Westlands.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 17 November, at columns 49-50.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Terrorism

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he has taken following the terrorist attacks on the border at the Army/police station in Middletown on 23 November and at the Fane Valley Co-operative building at Newtownhamilton on 25 November; who were responsible for these terrorist attacks; whether the terrorists were operating from the territory of the Republic of Ireland; and if he will make a statement on the security situation along the Irish/United Kingdom border.

Mr. Scott: These disgraceful attacks are the subject of investigations by the Royal Ulster Constabulary. Appropriate assistance is being sought from the Garda Siochana. Both are thought to have been the work of the Provisional IRA. In the attack at Middletown the mortar rounds were fired from a vehicle situated in the Republic of Ireland. The vehicle used to convey the bomb to the Fane Valley Co-operative building was hijacked in Northern Ireland shortly before the attack took place.

Although much has been done to seek to reduce the level of terrorist activity in the border region the Government remain concerned at the security situation there, and measures are in hand on both sides of the border designed to bring about further improvements in the situation.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, in the light of the Taoiseach's statement in London on 28 November that progress by the United Kingdom in the implementation of the Anglo-Irish Agreement would determine progress with the Republic's Extradition Bill, he will make representations to the Irish Government about their intentions with regard to the fulfilment of their obligations under paragraph 7 of the joint communiqué of the Anglo-Irish summit meeting of 15 November 1985, Cmnd. 9657; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: The Irish Government are well aware of our views on the desirability of early ratification of the European convention on the suppression of terrorism, and we understand their desire to enact legislation designed to bring this about.

ENVIRONMENT

Showmen

Mr. Barnett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will direct the London residuary body to observe the recommendations contained in his Department's circular 23/83 with regard to its role as landlord of land occupied by showmen; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: No.

Planning Zones

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made about the effect on the revenue of the creation of simplified planning zones; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: Simplified planning zones will have no direct effect on central Government revenue. Local planning authorities will not receive the fees which would have been payable on making planning applications for development authorised by simplified planning zone schemes.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list any recommendations currently being considered by his Department concerning the acceptable level of list I and list II substances in dredged materials to be disposed of in the North sea;

(2) what concentrations of list I and list II substances are regarded as acceptable levels of contamination in dredged materials to be disposed of in the North sea.

Mr. Gummer: I have been asked to reply.

In the context of both the Oslo and London dumping conventions, to which the United Kingdom is a signatory, guidelines for the disposal of dredged materials were adopted this year which prescribe the conditions under which licences may be issued for the sea disposal of dredged materials. Whilst the guidelines do not set numerical limits on the levels of Annex I and II substances, they indicate the factors to be taken into account in assessing whether or not the environmental impact of contaminated spoils is acceptable.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on the amounts of list I/ black list substances which render sewage sludge unsuitable for sea disposal.

Mr. Gummer: I have been asked to reply.

These substances may not be disposed of at sea except where they occur in, for example, sewage sludge as trace contaminants. In deciding on particular cases, in accordance with the relevant international conventions, my Ministry takes full account of the need to protect the marine environment, its living resources, human health and other relevant factors.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Investment Business (Licence)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will consider bringing in provisions of the Financial Services Act relating to the conduct of investment business in the United Kingdom without a licence, with immediate effect; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: It would not be possible to implement immediately the provisions which require investment businesses to be authorised, because it is necessary first to give such businesses an opportunity to obtain authorisation. Our intention is that the agency should be designated, the self-regulating organisations and professional bodies recognised and an interval allowed for businesses to apply to them, before bringing into force the requirement to be authorised. I hope that it will be possible to complete the last of these stages during the second half of 1987.

Regional Aid

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish his latest figure for the amount of regional development grant and regional selective assistance paid out for each regional area covered by grant aid for 1984-85, 1985-86 and so far in 1986-87.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The payments of regional development grant[1] made in each region of England and in Scotland and Wales in 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87 to date are:

Region/Country	1984-85 £ million	1985-86 £ million	1986-87[3] £ million
North East	61·6	46·4	56·8

[1] Consists of old and new style RDGs; the new RDG scheme was introduced on 29 November 1984.
[2] Industrial and Training Grants only.
[3] April to October.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what is his budgeted figure for payments in (a) regional development grant and (b) regional selective assistance; and what is his best estimate of the amounts due;

(2) if he has any plans for any further moratorium on the payment of regional development grant; and if he will give details of any such plans.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Merchant Shipbuilding

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many people were employed in merchant shipbuilding in 1979 and in the most recent year for which figures are available in (a) Great Britain, (b) the United Kingdom, (c) France, (d) Germany, (e) Italy and (f) the European Economic Community as a whole.

(2) if he will publish the most recent information available to him of the support for shipbuilders in (a) Japan, (b) Taiwan, (c) Korea and (d) all individual countries of the European Economic Community;

(3) under what circumstances shibuilding intervention fund support is now available to private sector yards; and what are his proposals for the future.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much shipbuilding intervention fund support has been paid out in each year since 1977, and in total, to each of the member countries of the European Community.

Mr. Giles Shaw: There is no support for merchant shipbuilding paid to Member countries from European Community funds. Each member state administers a regime of aid that is agreed with the European Commission within the framework of successive Council directives on shipbuilding aids. For the United Kingdom, Her Majesty's Government have made the following payments to merchant shipbuilding yards from the shipbuilding intervention fund:

Financial Year	£ million
1976-77	1·4
1977-78	19·3
1978-79	10·8
1979-80	36·3
1980-81	45·8
1981-82	54·5
1982-83	54·9
1983-84	43·4
1984-85	28·1
1985-86	30·8
1986-87	19·3

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of world orders has been won by British shipbuilding yards in 1985 and so far in 1986.

Mr. Giles Shaw: During 1985, United Kingdom shipbuilding yards won 2·7 per cent. of world new orders for merchant ships. During the first six months of 1986, United Kingdom yards have won 1·6 per cent. of world orders.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of orders placed by British shipowners has been placed in Britain in 1985 and so far in 1986.

Mr. Giles Shaw: During 1985, 61 per cent. of new orders for the United Kingdom flag were placed in United Kingdom yards. During the first six months of 1986, 78 per cent. of new orders for the United Kingdom flag were placed in United Kingdom yards.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the numbers employed in each of the yards of British Shipbuilders in 1979, the numbers employed currently, and the number to be employed in April 1987.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information is as follows. The figures for 1979 include employment at companies since sold or closed:

[2] Austin and Pickersgill Ltd. and Sunderland Shipbuilders merged in April 1986 to form a new subsidiary, North East Shipbuilders Ltd.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the current orders of British Shipbuilders and the date of completion.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The following is the information:

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his latest figure for the gross domestic product per head of each regional area expressed both in 1986 prices and as a proportion of the south-east for (a) 1979 and (b) the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information requested is:

Gross Domestic Product per Head by Region at 1986 (Second Quarter) Prices and Relative to the South-East (= 100)

	£'000 At 1986 Prices		As per cent. of South East (= 100)

SOCIAL SERVICES

Diabetics

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the possibility of diabetics obtaining blood-sugar testing equipment on a general practitioner's prescription.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 1 December at column 530.

Viral Diseases

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information his Department has on the incidence of (a) post-viral fatigue syndrome, (b) coxsackie B infection and (c) myalgic encephalomyelitis;

(2) what steps his Department is taking to study and correct: (a) post-viral fatigue syndrome, (b) coxsackie B infection and (c) myalgic encephalomyelitis.

Mrs. Currie: Formal notification is not required for any of these conditions, but their incidence in this country is low. Only coxsackie B has been identified in the laboratory. The Public Health Laboratory Service's Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre (CDSC) reported 1268 cases in 1985, though the incidence may have been somewhat higher since not all cases would have been the subject of laboratory investigation. In the early 1950s outbreaks of benign myaligic encephalomyelitis occurred in some London hospitals, but despite extensive investigations no causal agent was found. No outbreaks have been reported in recent years. We have no data centrally on post-viral fatigue syndrome.

Treatment for all these conditions consists mainly of complete rest and quiet during the acute phase of the illness.

The Department is not currently funding centrally any research into these conditions.

Hospital Building Maintenance

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will provide a breakdown of the hospital services building maintenance expenditure figures given in the Official Report for 21 July, column 92, into capital and revenue figures.

Mrs. Currie: All expenditure on hospital building maintenance is classified as revenue in health authorities' accounts.

Deceased Patients (Valuables)

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services who is responsible for laying down the procedures governing the return of valuables belonging to a patient who dies in hospital; and if he will place a copy of the relevant guidelines in the Library.

Mrs. Currie: General guidance governing the return of valuables belonging to a patient who dies in hospital is set out in health memorandum (72)41, a copy of which is in the Library. Health authorities are responsible for producing detailed written instructions, based on departmental guidance, for local use.

Benefits

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions since November 1980 a period of exceptionally severe weather has been recognised for the purpose of the Supplementary Benefits (Single Payments) Regulations for each of the Department of Health and Social Security local offices of Stockton, Middlesbrough, Hartlepool, Eston and Redcar.

Mr. Major: Single payments of supplementary benefit were available under the exceptionally severe weather provision in this area in the winter of 1981-82 and the winter of 1985-86.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish his latest figure for each regional area, and for the country as a whole, of the numbers claiming supplementary benefit and supplementary pension and his estimate of the numbers dependent on these claims.

Mr. Lyell: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will outline his policy for targeting special winter fuel payments to elderly people and disabled people.

Mr. Major: Help with heating costs is available each week to supplementary benefit claimants through the weekly scale rates and heating additions. Extra help through the exceptionally cold weather provision has been targeted on vulnerable groups; the elderly, the very young and the sick and disabled.

Pensions

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce a system to enable pensioners who reach their 65th birthday several days before their first pension pay day to be able to receive a once-off Giro from his Department's local office to pay to them the pension appropriate to that number of days for which they currently lose their pension.

Mr. Major: Retirement pension is paid to people who have both attained a minimum age and retired from regular work. People approaching pension age are already advised in leaflet NP32, sent automatically before age 60-65 to all those for whom the Department holds a contribution record, that any gap between the date of retirement and the first pension pay day can be avoided by making the pay day the retirement date where this is possible for them. The pension is in law a weekly benefit, and at present no powers exist either to pay retirement pension for odd days between the date of retirement and the pension pay day, or, indeed, to recover it for days after a pensioner's death included in a weekly payment already cashed.

Cervical Cancer

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action his Department will take to seek to reduce mortality and morbidity through early detection of carcinoma of the cervix in women below the age of 35 years.

Mrs. Currie: All women who are or have been sexually active should be regularly screened for cervical cancer. Guidance to health authorities on the screening of women below the age of 35 was set out in HC(84)17, a copy of which is in the Library. The guidance is currently under review.

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action his Department will take to seek to reduce the mortality and morbility rate through early detection of carcinoma of the cervix in women between the ages of 50 and 60 years who are at greatest risk.

Mrs. Currie: Women between the ages of 50 and 60 are within the priority group on whom health authorities have been asked to put the main emphasis in their cervical cancer screening programmes. The Government are committed to cutting death rates from cervical cancer by improving the effectiveness of these programmes. In January this year all health authorities were required to give priority to improving their cervical cancer screening programmes, including implementing computerised call and recall systems. Our detailed guidance to health authorities is currently under review.

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now publish a statistical report on the medical and regional variations in the incidence of cervical cancer for the period 1974 to 1983.

Mrs. Currie: Information on the incidence of cancer, including cervical cancer, is published routinely in "Cancer Statistics: Registrations" series MB1 and in the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys Monitors series MB1. Data for 1983 were published on 27 November 1986, and a copy of "Cancer Statistics: Registrations 1983" may be found in the Library.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many exceptionally cold weather payments have been made in each year since 1980 to applicants at offices in the Bath district.

Mr. Major: Payments were made in the winters of 1981-82, 1984-85 and 1985-86. Information on the number of payments for the winter of 1981-82 is not available, but for the other two winters is 252 and 1,200 respectively.

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many exceptionally cold weather payments have been made in each year since 1980 to applicants at offices in the Bristol district.

Mr. Major: Payments were made in the winters of 1981-82, 1984-85 and 1985-86. Information on the number of payments for the winter of 1981-82 is not available, but for the other two winters is 1,090 and 5,355 respectively.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services by how much claims are being backdated following the change in the rules for invalid care allowance after the European Court ruling.

Mr. Major: Claims may be backdated for up to 12 months before the date on which the claim is actually made, subject to the statutory authorities being satisfied that the conditions were met throughout the period and that there is good cause for delay in claiming. Claims from married and cohabiting women may be backdated to 22 December 1984 subject to the conditions being satisfied. This will apply to claims from married and cohabiting women received by 31 December 1986. After that date the 12-month limitation on backdating will apply to all claimants. Statistics are not available of the amount of backdating in individual cases.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to have completed the review of all claims for invalid care allowance currently pending, following the decision in the European Court.

Mr. Major: Experience with cases so far processed—and particularly the extended time needed to obtain replies to inquiries about backdated claims—indicates that all claims currently pending will be proceed by March.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications for invalid care allowance are currently awaiting a decision.

Mr. Major: At 21 November 1986, the latest date for which information is available, 65,767 from married women; 10,380 from men and single women.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims for back payment of invalid care allowance, following the European Court decision, have now been processed and are being paid.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 3 December at column 701.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will detail the number of telephone inquiries to the Preston office received for each week since he announced his revision of eligibility for the invalid care allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Records of the number of telephone inquiries received are not kept routinely. The available information relates to the period from 19 November to 2 December only. During this period, a total of 1,969 telephone calls were received by the ICA unit at Preston, Lancs.

Drug Addicts (Syringes and Needles)

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimates he has made of the cost of providing disposable syringes and needles to drug addicts.

Mrs. Currie: The costs would depend entirely upon the method of distribution selected, the number of outlets and the proportion of addicts who avail themselves of such a facility.

Resettlement Units

Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made in providing alternative means of resettlement to his Department's resettlement units.

Mr. Lyell: All review teams have now reported to me. Those in Bristol and Brighton have put forward constructive proposals to replace the resettlement units there. In each case, there will be nearly twice as many beds as in the existing units, but provided through smaller and more informal facilities based in the community. I have approved these proposals and will be providing direct funding to give them effect. We shall also make funds available to review teams for development work.

This practical help demonstrates the Government's commitment to improving provision for people without a settled way of life, in partnership with local government and voluntary bodies. I have also set up an advisory steering group, with members from the review teams and from the main interests concerned, including local authorities. The team will advise me on the best strategy to achieve better provision and a sensible distribution of resources throughout the country.

I am not satisfied that it is enough simply to hand over existing units to local authorities or voluntary bodies, and I have asked those review teams which recommended this to think again. It is my hope and expectation that, in doing so, they will follow the positive and thoughtful example of the Bristol and Brighton teams.

Hospital Medical Staffing

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will detail the proposed pay and conditions of service of the sub-consultant grade proposed in his Department's document "Hospital Medical Staffing —Achieving a Balance"; whether such doctors will be able to undertake private practice; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether future appointments to consultant posts will only take place from the ranks of sub-consultants as referred to in his Department's publication "Hospital Medical Staffing—Achieving a Balance".

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 4 December on the subject of "Achieving a Balance". Details of the conditions of service of the proposed intermediate service grade are yet to be negotiated. Pay will be determined by the Government in due course, in the light of the recommendations of the Doctors and Dentists Review Body. It is envisaged that the vast majority of consultant appointments would, as at present, be from doctors who had undertaken higher professional training in the senior registrar grade.

Doctors (Drug Prescribing)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to take any action to draw to the attention of doctors the guidelines drawn up by the Royal College of Physicians concerning inducements by some drug firms to pursuade doctors to prescribe their drugs.

Mr. Newton: The Department has had under consideration for some time the issue of revised guidance to the Health Service on the acceptance of gifts and hospitality and has been consulting health authority and professional interests. I have seen the Report of the Royal College of Physicians and I will be considering what reference to this should be made in our guidance.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how much was committed in each year since its inception to the blood products laboratory at Elstree;

(2) what reductions have been made in the funds originally estimated to be provided for the blood products laboratory at Elstree;

(3) if he will make a statement on the progress of the project to build the blood products laboratory at Elstree;

(4) when it was originally proposed that the United Kingdom should become self-sufficient in the blood product factor VIII;

(5) when Her Majesty's Government were first committed to the blood products laboratory at Elstree; and what was the original estimate of its cost and of its likely completion date;

(6) when the production of factor VIII was estimated to come on stream at Elstree; and when it actually came on stream.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 1 December 1986 c. 532-33]: The present blood products laboratory commenced manufacture of factor VIII concentrate in 1968. Its production of heat treated factor VIII now meets approximately one third of the England and Wales requirement.

In 1981, before AIDS transmission was associated with blood products, approval in principle was given for the construction of a new blood products laboratory at Elstree. In 1982 more detailed proposals were approved for a laboratory to make England and Wales self-sufficient in blood products. Construction began in May 1983. To enable the building to be completed earlier than traditional methods would allow a "fast track" design and build contract was adopted. When a unique project like this laboratory is built under this method it is extremely difficult to forecast accurately at the outset either the final cost or the completion date since the detailed design is developed as building progresses. Our working assumption at that time was that the cost would be £21·1 million and completion would be at the end of 1985 or early in 1986. We now expect the new BPL to be completed during the first part of 1987. There is no single identifiable reason for the building taking longer and costing more than originally expected other than the complexity of the design required being greater than anticipated. The building will still have been completed two or three years earlier than traditional contracting methods would have allowed.

Progress on the new laboratory has not been impeded by lack of finance; it has been fully funded throughout. Capital expenditure to date has been as follows:

	£'000s
1981-82	38
1982-83	276
1983-84	4,977
1984-85	16,648
1985-86	13,663
1986[1]	10,000

[1] To date.

It is not possible for a complex pharmaceutical plant to reach full production immediately but it is expected that after commissioning, limited production will begin later in 1987. On current predictions, substantial supplies of factor VIII will be available during 1988; self sufficiency should follow in 1989.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Dual Resident Companies

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to review the taxation of dual resident companies.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have authorised the Inland Revenue to publish today a consultative document introducing draft clauses on the tax treatment of dual resident companies. Comments on the draft clauses should be sent to the Board of Inland Revenue to arrive by 31 January 1987.

Recent legislation in the United States and evidence of substantially increased use of dual resident companies at the expense of the United Kingdom Exchequer now make United Kingdom legislation necessary. The Government intend to introduce provisions dealing with dual resident companies in the Finance Bill 1987.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. William Powell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many firm proposals have been received by the Inland Revenue for the establishment of new business enterprise scheme companies to take advantage of the provisions on ship chartering introduced in the Finance Act 1986; and how many have gone ahead.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Companies raising finance under the business expansion scheme obtain approval from local tax offices and no central record of proposals is kept. Statistics are collected once investment has been made and a formal application by the company approved. No information on companies engaged in ship chartering is yet available.

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. McCrindle asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning mortgage interest tax relief for joint unmarried borrowers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1986]: A married couple are entitled to mortgage interest relief on up to £30,000 of the loan to buy their main home, but unmarried borrowers sharing a home can have relief on loans up to £30,000 each. This issue was discussed in the Green Paper on the "Reform of Personal Taxation" and a substantial number of the individuals and organisations who responded considered that steps should be taken to end the disparity of treatment. The Green Paper suggested that one possibility would be to apply mortgage interest relief to the residence so that two or more people borrowing to buy a house would share the £30,000 limit between them, whether they were married or unmarried.

Family Incomes

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) working families with children and (b) childless people in work had incomes below the tax threshold at the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1986]: Information on weekly income in the 1984 family expenditure survey suggests that about a quarter of a million working families with children and 300,000 working childless couples or single people in the United Kingdom had incomes after personal allowances and mortgage interest relief below the tax threshold.

A "working" family is defined as one in which at least one adult is in full-time employment or self-employed.

CIVIL SERVICE

Administrative Class

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Minister for the Civil Service what number and percentage of the administrative class of the Civil Service (a) are Oxbridge graduates and (b) have been educated privately in the latest available year; and what are the comparable figures for 1981.

Mr. Luce: Statistics are not kept centrally of the educational background of current members of the administrative group, of which the former administrative class now forms part. Statistics are, however, kept of the university attended by new recruits to the grades of administration trainee (AT) and higher executive officer (development) (HEO(D)). In 1986 there were 81 new entrants to these grades of whom 38 (47 per cent.) were graduates of either Oxford or Cambridge university. In 1981 the corresponding number of recruits was 41 of whom 24 (59 per cent.) were Oxbridge graduates. Statistics of the school attended by recruits to these grades have not been kept since 1981, when 13 (32 per cent.) of AT entrants had been educated at direct grant or independent schools.

SCOTLAND

New Town Development Corporation

Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what conclusions he has reached on the housebuilding role of the New Town Development Corporation in the light of his recent review.

Mr. Rifkind: The policy which the Government introduced in 1983 temporarily restricting new general needs housebuilding by the development corporations was designed to increase the opportunity for private development of housing, to broaden housing choice, and to improve the tenure balance in new town communities. We made it clear that the policy would be reviewed after it had been in operation for a few years.

In reviewing the corporations' role in housebuilding, I have carefully considered the detailed evidence they have presented on housing needs in their areas. To assess the adequacy of future housing supply, I have also had regard to the special demographic factors affecting new towns and their impact on the local housing market.

The review has confirmed that the policy adopted in 1983 has been instrumental in extending home ownership and private housebuilding in the new towns. Completion rates have nearly doubled since 1983. The level of home ownership, supported by our commitment to the right to buy as well as by new private housebuilding, has risen appreciably. We remain committed to further private housing development in the new towns, both as a means of promoting balanced communities and as an attraction to industrial investment. The provision of a broad range of housing is vital to the fulfilment of the corporation's economic development role.

At the same time, we recognise that projected household growth in new towns is at least double the Scottish average. It would be unreasonable to expect the private sector to satisfy all the housing needs implied by this growth. A mixed supply of housing capable of meeting the needs of the rising generation must be maintained if the towns' natural population growth is to be protected. In these circumstances, I have decided that it is now appropriate to lift the moratorium on general needs housebuilding by corporations and to allow corporations themselves to assess the relative priorities as between house improvement and new building for rent in their areas.

I am also concerned to ensure proper integration of general and special needs development.

To enable corporations to finance a new build programme, we are making available £6 million more for new housing investment than was allocated last year. In addition, corporations will be permitted to plan ahead on the assumption that, depending on the overall resources available for housing investment, they may expect to receive in aggregate a further increase of some £8 million over the 1987-88 level phased over the following two years. With some readjustment of priorities this would be sufficient to permit the construction of 1,400 houses for rent over the next three years. The precise size of the new building programme will depend on corporations' assessment of priorities in their areas.

I am confident that the programme we envisage will enable corporations to meet the particular needs for rental housing arising in the new towns. Sustained private sector activity will complement the corporations programmes. This will secure our major aim of creating viable, diverse and balanced communities in the new towns before the development corporations are wound up.

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland at what minimum cost level he requires to approve Scottish Development Agency investments where private sector funding is lower than 60 per cent. of project finance; and what changes in Scottish Office guidelines have been made in this respect since 1979.

Mr. Lang: A threshold in this particular form does not exist in the Government's current industrial investment guidelines for the agency; nor did it in those previous to 1980. The current guidelines do, however, require the agency to seek the Secretary of State's approval inter alia for any investment which would bring the agency's total investment in a company both to more than £150,000 and to more than 50 per cent. of the funding of the company from all sources. A copy of the guidelines was placed in the Library of the House when they were issued in 1980.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide the figures for (a) budget and (b) actual expenditure of the Scottish Development Agency in 1985-86.

Mr. Lang: The agency's approved budget (defined as its gross grant-in-aid plus its net provision of investment funds) was £128·0 million in 1985-86. On this definition actual expenditure, which was augmented by additional unanticipated grant-in-aid receipts which the agency received approval to retain, was £131·1 million. Taking account also of investment income actual gross expenditure was £136·6 million.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportions of the Scottish Development Agency expenditure from 1978 up to 1986 and budget for 1986-87 went on industrial investment; and if he will provide the figures for industrial investment at 1986 prices.

Mr. Lang: The information is as follows:

Gross expenditure on industrial investment

Year	Outturn prices £ million	1986 prices £ million	As percentage of total expenditure
1978-79	5·5	10·7	8·5
1979-80	8·5	14·1	10·4
1980-81	7·1	10·0	7·0
1981-82	6·6	8·4	6·4
1982-83	12·7	15·1	10·0
1983-84	11·2	12·8	9·2
1984-85	10·8	11·8	8·8
1985-86	8·1	8·3	5·9
[1]1986-87	9·0	9·0	7·0

Note:

The agency's total expenditure is defined as gross grant-in-aid, plus gross investment.

Electronics Industry

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will explain the reasons for reclassifying electronics industry employment for the years 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Lang: Under the standard industrial classification industrial and commercial establishments are classified to an industry according to their principal or main product, and when this changes the reclassification of that establishment results in a change in the industry's employment. If the reclassified establishment produces more than one product the change in employment resulting from reclassification can be greater than the underlying change in employment related specifically to the product. In the IDS estimates, published in IDS "Statistical Bulletin No. C.2.1", one major establishment in Scotland was reclassified to another industry because of changes in its product structure between 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the estimates of electronics employment provided by the Engineering Industry Training Board in 1979 and the most recent dates for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: The Engineering Industry Training Board estimates that there were 38,350 people employed in the electronics industry in Scotland in 1979 and 39,700 (provisional estimate) in 1985. The EITB defines electronics to comprise activity headings 3301, 3302, 3441, 3442, 3443, 3444, 3452, 3453 and 3454.

The EITB definition is based on different activity headings from those included in the IDS definition, partly reflecting differences in the activities of establishments in these activity headings in Scotland and the United Kingdom as a whole. If this difference in definition is removed, the difference in estimates of employment from the respective sources in 1985 are relatively minor.

Anderson Brown Engineering

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if Anderson Brown Engineering is in receipt of public sector contracts; and if he will list these contracts.

Mr. Lang: Government Departments and local authorities individually negotiate their contracts with companies. Information about contracts obtained by individual companies could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Council House Sales

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many council house tenants in Scotland bought their homes under the right-to-buy provisions of the Tenants Rights, &c. (Scotland) Act 1980 and subsequent legislation in the financial year 1980-81 and each subsequent year for which figures are available; and what are his estimates for such sales in future years.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is provided in the table. Estimates for future years are not available.

Sales to sitting tenants[1]

Year	Local authority	New town	Scottish Special Housing Association	Total
1980-81	3,199	1,365	1,681	6,245

Infectious Diseases

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information his Department has on the incidence of (a) post-viral fatigue syndrome, (b) coxsackie B infection and (c) myalgic encephalomyelitis.

Mr. John MacKay: These are not notifiable diseases and no data are available centrally which would enable their incidence to be determined.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps his Department is taking to study and correct (a) post-viral fatigue syndrome, (b) coxsackie B infection and (c) myalgic encephalomyelitis.

Mr. John MacKay: Serological surveillance studies of these diseases are at present being undertaken by the regional virus laboratory at Ruchill hospital, Glasgow. Further related research is being carried out at the Southern general hospital, Glasgow.

Abortions

Mr. Campbell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state (a) the number of abortions which have been performed in Scotland under the Abortion Act 1967 and (b) how many of these abortions were performed in emergency to save the life of a mother.

Mr. John MacKay: During the period 1968-85 128,582 abortions have been performed in Scotland under the Abortion Act 1967, of which 15 were performed in emergency under section 1(4) of the Act to save the life of a mother. Information on the numbers of abortions performed under section 1(1) of the Act, which sets out other grounds for the termination of pregnancy, is contained in the annual HMSO publication "Scottish Health Statistics"; a copy of which is in the Library.

Firefighting

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he proposes to take to implement the recommendations made to his Department by the firemaster of the Grampian fire brigade concerning the case for increased training for prison officers in first aid and firefighting and other procedures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The recommendation on training in first aid firefighting is one of several put forward by the firemaster of Grampian fire brigade following the fire at Peterhead prison on 13 November 1986. Officials of the Scottish Home and Health Department are studying this recommendation as part of their comprehensive examination of operational issues for the Scottish prison service following the incident at Peterhead.

Strip Searching

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many women have been strip searched in each prison in Scotland during the last 12 months; what were the comparable numbers for the previous 12 months; how many times per month each woman is strip searched; whether strip searching takes place on a random or regular basis; and what are the purposes of the searches;

(2) how many men have been strip searched in each prison in Scotland during the last 12 months; what were the comparable numbers for the previous 12 months; how many times per month each man is strip searched; whether strip searching takes place on a random or a regular basis; and what are the purposes of the searches.

Mr. Lang: Strip searching of inmates, male or female, in Scottish prisons is carried out only to the extent necessary to maintain security and prevent inmates having concealed weapons or unauthorised substances such as drugs.

Standing orders require strip searches to be carried out on the following occasions:

(a) as part of normal admission and discharge procedures;
(b) when a prisoner is being transferred to a segregation unit;
(c) during routine cell searches and special cell searches where there is reason to believe that contraband or weapons are being concealed;
(d) following "open" visits; and
(e) on leaving prison to attend a court hearing.

Statistics are not kept on strip searches of male prisoners or the small number of female prisoners held on remand in local prisons. The number of strip-searches of females at Cornton Vale institution in 1985, when figures were first kept, was 4,219 and in 1986, to 31 October, 2,924.

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the strip searching of women in Scottish prisons has ever been carried out in front of male officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: No. The statutory rules governing searching of prisoners stipulate that a prisoner shall be searched only by officers of the same sex as the prisoner.

Legal Aid (Glasgow)

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report a copy of his reply to the letter from the secretary of the Scottish Council for Civil Liberties, copies of which have been sent to hon. Members, regarding the refusal of legal aid applications in Glasgow district courts.

Mr. Lang: Following is the reply:

Dear Mr. Godwin,

Mr. Lang has asked me to thank you for your letter of 26 November to the Secretary of State expressing your concern about the refusal of legal aid applications by Glasgow District Court, and to reply on his behalf.

Under the present arrangements it is entirely a matter for the court to decide whether or not legal aid should be awarded in any particular case. In reaching its decision, however, the court must have regard to statutory criteria which includes the interests of justice and the avoidance of undue financial hardship. The Secretary of State cannot intervene in individual cases or advise particular magistrates. If there has been a change in the way in which Glasgow District Court applies the interests of justice criterion when dealing with applications for legal aid it is not as a result of guidelines recently issued by the Scottish Home and Health Department. No guidelines on this matter have been issued by the Scottish Home and Health Department to district courts since March 1982 and it is not intended to revise them at this stage.

As you appreciate, the Legal Aid (Scotland) Act 1986 provides for the transfer of responsibility for the determination of applications for legal aid in summary criminal cases from the courts to the newly established Scottish Legal Aid Board. It is hoped that this transfer will take place on 1 April 1987. One of the main reasons for the change is to secure greater consistency in the award of legal aid and the factors set out in section 24(3) of the Act are designed to help the Board to achieve this in their consideration of the interests of justice criterion. This provision will be brought into operation when the Board assumes responsibility. Meantime it must remain a matter for the individual courts to decide how to apply the existing statutory criteria.

Yours sincerely,
PETER A. D. RITCHIE,
Private Secretary

Private Education

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many members and what percentage of the Scottish judiciary have been educated privately; and what are the comparable figures for 1981.

Mr. Lang: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many members of the permanent secretariat of the Scottish Office have been educated privately, what percentage of the secretariat this comprises; and what are the corresponding figures for 1981.

Mr. Rifkind: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the post-school activity of school leavers by social class in terms of full-time unemployment, unemployment or youth training schemes, full-time further education and other activities in the latest available year.

Mr. John MacKay: The most recent available information about the destination of school leavers is contained in the following table:

School leavers from 1983-84 session: destination at October 1984 by father's social class

Father's social class		Destination (in percentages) at October 1984						Number in sample

Nurses (Dundee)

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many qualified nurses are employed in each hospital in Dundee with Tayside health board; and what is the funded establishment in each case.

Mr. John MacKay: On 9 November 1986 the number of qualified nurses in post in each hospital in Dundee was as follows. These are the funded establishment figures in each case and are "whole-time equivalents".

	Number
Dundee Royal Infirmary	329·65
Ninewells	676·17
Kings Cross	140·09
Ashludie	106·20
Royal Victoria	109·49
Strathmartine	174·56
Royal Dundee Liff	234·45
	1,770·61

Telephones

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what information he has on the number and percentage of people in Dundee without a telephone from the 1981 census; and if he will disaggregate the figures further by district council ward boundary;

(2) what information he has from the 1981 census on the number and percentage of people without a telephone, by social class.

Mr. John MacKay: This information was not collected in the 1981 census.

Torness

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the planned generation capacity of the Torness nuclear power station.

Mr. Lang: I am advised by the South of Scotland Electricity Board that it expects that subject to all necessary approvals being obtained from Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate the gross generating capacity of the Torness power station will be slightly in excess of 1400 MW.

EMPLOYMENT

Passive Smoking

Mr. Foulkes asked the Paymaster General what is the policy of the Health and Safety Executive in relation to passive smoking.

Mr. Trippier: The executive's policy is to ban smoking at work where there is particular danger, for example, of fire or explosion, and otherwise to encourage voluntary workplaces agreements to limit smoking to certain areas of separate smokers and non-smokers.

The responsibility for general public health matters, including passive smoking, lies with the Department of Health and Social Security. The Independent Scientific Committee on Smoking and Health, which has considered a comprehensive review of the evidence on health effects from passive smoking, is due to report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services next year.

YTS

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General how many youth trainees are currently engaged in YTS that involve off-the-job training in further education colleges in (a) England and Wales, (b) Scotland and (c) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not available in precisely the form requested. The most recent information is from a survey of YTS schemes in January-February 1986. This survey showed that schemes responsible for 42 per cent. of all trainees in Great Britain used colleges of further education to provide the main part of their off-the-job training. This includes cases where colleges of further education managing schemes provided their own off-the-job training in-house.

Separate estimates for Scotland, England and Wales are not available.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General how many youth trainees undertook off-the-job training at further education colleges in each of the years since the scheme's inception in (a) England and Wales, (b) Scotland and (c) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not available in the form requested. The youth training scheme started in England, Wales and Scotland in 1983. No information is available on the numbers of YTS trainees undertaking off-the-job training in colleges of further education for the financial years 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1986-87.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster-General if he will publish a table showing (a) the numbers and percentages of jobs lost, or gained, in each regional area and in Britain as a whole between June 1979 and June 1986, or the latest month for which figures are available in (b) all industries, (c) all manufacturing industries, (d) all service industries, (e) shipbuilding and repairing, (f) metal goods engineering and vehicles, (g) mechanical engineering, (h) electrical electronic engineering and instrument engineering, (i) health, education and personal social services, (j) retail distribution and (k) banking insurance and financial.

Mr. Trippier: Information about job gains and losses is not available from the Department's statistics, but an indication of the net changes can be seen by comparing levels of employment at different dates.

Regional estimates of the numbers of employees in employment in the shipbuilding and repairing, mechanical engineering, electrical and electronic engineering and instrument engineering industries are not available for June 1979 or June 1986. The available information is given in the following table.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will publish a table showing, for each regional area, the number of persons at work, who are (a) employees and (b) self-employed, in June 1979, June 1983 and June 1986 or the latest month for which figures are available; and if he will estimate the number of second jobs included in these figures.

Mr. Trippier: The following tables give the numbers of employees in employment and self-employed at the dates for the area specified.

The second jobs included in the employees in employment estimates are not separately identified, but estimates from the Labour force surveys suggest that the numbers of people with a second job as an employee in Great Britain in spring 1979 and spring 1983 were 289,000 and 372,000 respectively. Estimates are not available for spring 1986. The survey sample is not large enough to give reliable estimates separately for each region.

The employment estimates do not include second jobs when they are held as self-employed.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will publish a table showing the number of additional (a) jobs in service industries, (b) jobs in banking, insurance and finance, (c) self-employed and (d) small business, starts over stops, created in (i) the south-east and (ii) the south-east, south-west, and East Anglia as a proportion of the total additional jobs created throughout the country in these categories.

Mr. Trippier: The following table gives the available estimates of changes in employment:

New Increases in Employment June 1983 to June 1986

Thousand

	South East	South West	East Anglia	Great Britain	South East as proportion of Great Britain Per cent.	Sum of three regions as Great Britain Per cent.
Employees in banking, finance, business services etc (SIC80 Division 8)	+106	+11	+7	+499	21	25
Employees in service industries (SIC80 Division 6 to 9)	+374	+51	+44	+833	45	56
Self employed	+224	+45	+26	+505	44	58

For small business the available information relates to VAT registrations and deregistrations. The most recent estimates are that over the five-year period 1980-84 there was a net surplus of registrations over deregistrations of 125,000 in Great Britain as a whole, of which (i) 42 per cent. were in the south-east and (ii) 57 per cent. were in the south-east, south-west and East Anglia taken together.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will list the numbers of unemployed for each postal code area in the Dunfermline East constituency for November 1986, November 1983 and November 1985, respectively.

Mr. Trippier: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Skillcentres

Ms. Richardson asked the Paymaster General (1) what steps his Department are taking to encourage manual and technical skills training courses for women in skillcentres; and how many women-only manual and technical skills courses in skillcentres there are nationally;

(2) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Barking on 28 November, why the closure of the women into manual skills' course at Deptford skillcentre was carried out without consultation with the London boroughs of Southwark, Lewisham and Greenwich; and whether the Manpower Services Commission has received representations alleging racism and sexism at Deptford skillcentre;

(3) if he will instruct the Manpower Services Commission to co-operate with the inquiry sponsored by the London boroughs of Southwark, Lewisham and Greenwich to look into allegations of racism and sexism at the Deptford skillcentre;

(4) how many (a) women and (b) men are currently undergoing training courses at skillcentres in the Greater

London area; how many are currently undergoing courses at the Deptford skillcentre; and which courses they are taking.

Mr. Trippier: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mines and Quarries Act

Mr. Redmond asked the Paymaster General if he will place in the Library correspondence between himself and the chairman of the National Coal Board in connection with any proposed changes in the Mines and Quarries Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have not corresponded with the chairman of the National Coal Board in connection with any proposed changes in the Mines and Quarries Act 1954.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Higher Education

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the latest percentage of 18-year-olds entering full-time education.

Mr. Walden: The Department's usual way of monitoring participation in higher education is the age participation index. This is defined as the number of full-time and sandwich home domiciled initial entrants to higher education aged under 21 expressed as a percentage of the average population of 18 and 19-year-olds. Initial entrants are those entering a higher education course for the first time. The provisional age participation index for Great Britain in 1985 was 13·9.

Scottish Universities

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the figures and percentage composition of entrants by social class into Scottish universities in the latest year; and what are the comparable figures for 1981.

Mr. Walden: Information on acceptances by social class to universities is collected by the University Central Council on Admissions, and information relating to Scottish universities could be provided by it only at disproportionate cost.

Welsh Language

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if all institutions of higher or further education accept A-level Welsh, both first and second language, on the same value as other modern language A-level qualifications when candidates make applications for places on their courses.

Mr. Walden: Universities, polytechnics and other colleges are responsible for their own admission decisions. My right hon. Friend is not aware of any that regard an A-level in Welsh (either as first or second language) less favourably than A-levels in other subjects in their general admission requirements for first degree level courses. Nor does he know of instances where A-level Welsh is inappropriately not accepted as meeting the specific requirement for entry to particular courses.

School Meals

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report the number of children entitled to free school meals at the beginning of this autumn term, and the number now entitled to them after the recent changes for each local education authority in the west midlands.

Mr. Dunn: I will reply as soon as possible.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools in Avon take part in the assisted places scheme; and if he will give the name of the schools and the number of places involved.

Mr. Dunn: I will reply as soon as possible.

School Discipline

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will introduce legislation to define the powers of local education authorities in relation to investigations into the conduct of parents and governors in relation to school disciplinary matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: One of the aims of the new Education (No. 2) Act 1986 is to clarify the responsibilities of local education authorities, governing bodies and head teachers across the whole range of responsibilities. The Government have no present plans for further legislation on this.

Disabled Students

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice his Department offers colleges for further and higher education in order to widen access to students with disabilities.

Mr. Walden: In terms of physical access the DES has issued, and periodically updates, Design Note No. 18 which contains guidance for those responsible for making educational buildings accessible to disabled people. A copy of this has been placed in the Library.

In 1983 the DES commissioned the preparation of a staff development pack for teachers of students with moderate learning difficulties in colleges. This was published in January 1985 under the title "From Coping to Confidence".

A working group is now considering the training support required for the full range of further education staff concerned with special needs students. The group is expected to report early in 1987.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students with disability are currently attending courses at colleges of further and higher education.

Mr. Walden: The information is not collected centrally on a routine basis, but a survey of students with special educational needs was commissioned by the Department in 1985. The survey indicated that in November 1985 there were around 30,000 students with special educational needs attending courses at colleges of further and higher education.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consideration of the effects of student loans on students with disability his Department has made in its research into student loans schemes.

Mr. Walden: The student support review will take account of the situation of disabled students in any consideration it gives to the possibility of introducing a student loans scheme.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what special funds are available from his Department for colleges of further and higher education to improve access for students with disabilities.

Mr. Walden: Such students will have a wide range of special educational needs and the support that they require will vary accordingly. The Government believe support should generally be made by the maintaining LEA, taking account of the needs of those students whom a college proposes to admit.

However, through the mechanism of education support grant the Government are contributing to the expenditure of up to £0·5 million in each of the financial years 1986-87 and 1987-88 to enable more students with disabilities to participate in mainstream courses in colleges. The grants cover 70 per cent. of approved expenditure on the part of selected LEAs to establish a continuing system of micro-electronic support for students with physical and/or sensory disabilities.

National Council for Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received regarding membership of the National Council for Vocational Qualifications and young people with special needs.

Mrs. Rumbold: Appointments to the National Council for Vocational Qualifications are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment. During the summer several letters were received all suggesting that one member of the NCVQ should have a specific responsibility for reviewing the vocational training and qualifications requirements of people with special needs. The final arrangements for membership of the Council, as outlined in the White Paper "Working Together — Educational and Training", were that appointments would be made on a personal basis in the light of individual knowledge and expertise rather than be representative of specific bodies or viewpoints.

Statistics

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, in respect of the statistics kept and published by his Department, he will publish in the Official Report any changes since 1979 in (a) the statistical series which are published, including those which have been introduced and those which have been dropped; (b) the basis on which any elements in the statistics are estimated, calculated or presented; (c) the periods over which, and the dates on which the series are collected or published; and (d) any other respects in the ways in which statistics are collected, recorded, presented, evaluated or published; and if he will explain the reasons for any such changes.

Mrs. Rumbold [pursuant to her reply, 3 December 1986, c. 626]: Only minor changes have been made since 1979 to the regular annual statistics collected by the Department. The statistics of first destinations of students from public sector institutions have had their coverage extended and have been collected on an individual basis in place of the former college summaries and those collected through the teacher destination survey. The annual monitoring survey of students and staffing ratios in further education has also increased its coverage in the last few years. Surveys of PICKUP courses have been introduced, while surveys of maintained youth clubs in adult education have been dropped. Information collected on overseas students has been incorporated in the "Further Education Statistical Record". The summary information published in statistical bulletins has been expanded, and the statistical volumes have been redesigned and their production costs reduced.

These changes in the basis of compilation, presentation and publication of statistical series have been made from time to time in response to the Government's requirements for statistical information, changes in the administrative systems on which some series are based, the development of new statistical techniques and technological developments affecting the compilation and dissemination of statistical data.

When such changes are made they are fully documented in the relevant statistical publications.

DEFENCE

DROPS

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the award of the demountable rack off-loading pick-up system contract.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am pleased to announce that, following competitive selection and trialling, we have now decided to award main production for the British Army's DROPS vehicles and ancillary equipment to Foden Trucks and Leyland Vehicles Ltd (Scammell Motors). These firms will be responsible respectively for the supply of the improved and the medium mobility vehicles. Load Handling Systems for the fleet will be provided under sub-contract by Multilift (UK) Ltd of Shrewsbury. This programme will comprise over 2,000 vehicles with a total value of some £220 million. Trials of production built vehicles will lead to full production in 1988, with the equipments entering service with the Army in 1989. DROPS will represent a major advance on the Army's existing logistic capabilities for the outloading and resupply of ammunition in the field. The programme will also provide much needed orders for the United Kingdom motor industry, sustaining over 1,000 jobs in the industry and with beneficial effects on associated component suppliers.

Dog Training School, Melton Mowbray

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has now supplied to the National Audit Office all background and statistical information within his possession relating to the future of the dog training school at the Royal Army Veterinary Corps, Melton Mowbray, including all reports of special inquiry teams; and whether he will encourage corps and unit commanders to give full information to assist the Comptroller and Auditor General in his inquiry.

Mr. Freeman: The National Audit Office has access to all such information, if it wishes to see it, including that held by corps and unit commanders. Ministry of Defence staff always give every possible assistance to the NAO in the discharge of its duties.

Tornado Aircraft (Noise Nuisance)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the representations which he has received regarding noise nuisance at the village of Stretton, Rutland, and, in particular, Walnut Close in that village; and what specific steps are being taken to deter the pilots of Tornado aircraft from flying directly over Walnut Close contrary to the approved flightpath and to repeated assurances to the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton.

Mr. Freeman: Representations have been received in the Ministry of Defence and RAF Cottesmore. Every possible measure has been taken to minimise disturbance and these measures have been discussed with the hon. Member and the local parish council. In particular the current circuit pattern from runway 23 has been modified to pass to the north of Stretton. Pilots are frequently and will continue to be reminded of the need to avoid flying directly over Stretton.

RAF Cottesmore

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the progress of his review of compensation or sound insulation for villagers living near RAF Cottesmore.

Mr. Freeman: Grant levels are being reviewed to ensure that they are adequate to cover the cost of sound insulation. I shall write when I know the outcome of this review and when the boundary for the extended scheme has been determined.

Recruitment

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many people have been recruited into each branch of the armed forces in Dundee in each year since 1980; and of the total number of recruits how many were unemployed;

(2) what has been the total number of recruits into the armed forces in each year since 1980; and what number and percentage of recruits were previously unemployed in each year.

Mr. Freeman: With regard to numbers recruited to the armed forces in Dundee, I refer the hon. Member to the answers given to the hon. Member for Dundee, East (Mr. Wilson) on 22 July 1986 at column 163; on 23 July 1985 at column 496; on 23 July 1984 at column 537; on 23 Mareh 1982 at column 401 and on 12 May 1981 at column 264.

Figures for the total numbers of recruits can be found in volume 2, table 4.15, of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1986" (Cmnd. 9763-II).

Information is not kept on the number of recruits to the armed forces who were previously unemployed.

International Military Services Office, Tehran

Miss Maynard asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to close the international military services office in Tehran; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Murders

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) by what percentage the number of murders made known to the police has changed over the past 10 years.

(2) if he will publish a table showing the numbers of murders made known to the police in each of the past 10 years which involved the death of a child under 16 years of age.

Mr. Mellor: In the absence of a court decision it is not always possible to distinguish between offences of murder, manslaughter, and infanticide; they are collectively known as homicide. Information on the offences of homicide recorded by the police, on their outcome and on the ages of the victims is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales"; in tables 4.1, 4.2 and 4.6 respectively of the issue for 1985 (Cmnd 10). Further information on the outcome of offences of homicide involving children aged under 16 is given in the following table. Corresponding information for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Goods Vehicles (Statistics)

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the number of prosecutions for offences of exceeding permitted driving hours by drivers of goods vehicles of all kinds for the latest year for which such figures are available, dividing this figure by police authority and including, if available, non-police prosecutions;

(2) if he will indicate, for the most recent years for which figures are available, the total number and the proportion of vehicles of all kinds found by the police or other authority to be in contravention of loading, safety or other regulations, where transhipment of the load or part of the load has been required, dividing this figure by police authority area;

(3) if he will list the number of prosecutions for offences of exceeding the maximum gross vehicle weight, or axle weight, of goods vehicles of all kinds for the latest year for which such information is available, dividing this figure by police authority and including, if available, non-police prosecutions.

Mr. Mellor: No reliable information is available separately for goods vehicles. The readily available information on total court proceedings for the offences referred to, which includes non-police prosecutions but may be incomplete in respect of them, is published annually in "Offences relating to motor vehicles, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables" (Table 5 of the issue for 1985), copies of which are in the Library. Information by police force area is also given in Table 17 of the same publication but relates to total findings of guilt in the broader categories "work record and employment offences" and "load offences".

Homosexuals

Ms Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many men were imprisoned in the United Kingdom in 1985 for consensual homosexual acts with males between the ages of 16 and 21 years; and what were the maximum minimum and average sentences served by such men.

Mr. Mellor: In England and Wales in 1985, 15 males of, or over, 21 were sentenced to immediate imprisonment for buggery or attempted buggery of a man of, or over 16 but under 21 with his consent. Twenty-two males of, or over the age of 21 were sentenced to immediate imprisonment for an act of gross indencency with a male under the age of 21. The maximum sentence imposed in these cases was five years' imprisonment; the minimum, three months' imprisonment; and the average, 22 months' imprisonment. Similar information is not readily available for Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Durham Prison

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many women in Her Majesty's prison, Durham have been strip searched during the last 12 months; what were the comparable numbers for the previous 12 months; how many times per month each woman is strip searched; whether strip searching takes place on a regular or a random basis; and what are the purposes of the searches;

(2) how many women in Her Majesty's prison, Durham are body searched within the prison; how many times per day; on what occasions; and for what purposes these searches take place.

Mr. Mellor: Establishments are not required to record all strip searches. However, Durham has, exceptionally, begun to keep records of strip searches in respect of category A female inmates. These show that from 1 August to 30 November such prisoners in Durham were strip searched 3·5 times per month on average.

Prisoners are strip searched on reception into a prison and subsequently as the Governor thinks necessary. The occasions on which a prisoner may be strip searched include before and after court appearances, after visits, at the time of cell changes, and during wing and cell searches. The frequency of searches depends upon such factors as the incidence of court appearances and visits, and the security category of the prisoner.

The purpose of strip searching is to detect and deter the concealment of small items (including weapons and drugs) which can be easily concealed about the person and which cannot be detected by other means of searching.

Rub-down searching (or frisking) is also used to detect and deter concealment of unauthorised articles. The occasions on which prisoners in Durham may be given a rub-down search include before and after work and exercise periods, before visits and on return to their wing after attendance at other parts of the prison, such as the hospital. Establishments are not required to record such searches.

Prison Population

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has for the number of places in the prison system which will be without integral sanitation or access to lavatories at night by 1999; and what is his estimate of the projected rise in the prison population by that date.

Mr. Mellor: On the basis of the building schemes at present in progress or planned the number of places lacking access to sanitation will fall from 22,000 now to 15,600 in 1999, that is, a decrease of 6,400. Projections of the prison population are prepared for only nine years into the future. The population is projected to rise to between nearly 53,000 using a demographic model, and nearly 59,000 using a non-demographic model, by 1994, as described in Home Office statistical bulletin 5/86 (projections of long term trends in the prison population to 1994). But of course all projections must be treated with caution because they are based on historical trends and reflect past levels of crime and the decisions of the courts.

Firearms

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has conducted concerning the updating of the Firearms Act 1937 and legislation relating to weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are no plans to amend the Firearms Act 1968 which consolidated the Firearms Act 1937 and other firearms legislation.

Immigration

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many arrivals from India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Nigeria and Ghana from 1 October to the current date have been held at detention or search centres; and for how long.

Mr. Waddington: The information requested is not available centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Trial List (Avon)

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of persons held in custody awaiting trial in the Crown court in Avon on 1 September.

Mr. Mellor: Information is not held centrally in the form requested.

Police Recruitment

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what indication he has received from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis about his views on the attitude of Islington, Haringey and other Labour councils in London in contributing to improvements in the recruitment of people from ethnic minorities into the police force.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that he is very grateful for the help he is having from local authorities, community relations officers and community/police consultative groups in mounting local ethnic minority recruitment campaigns. So far campaigns have been run in Haringey, Lambeth, Hounslow and Islington, and more are planned for Brent, Croydon, Ealing, Lewisham, Newham, Wandsworth and Westminster. He looks forward to receiving similar help in organising campaigns in other boroughs in due course.

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to introduce any changes to the system of police recruit training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Police training at all levels is subject to a continuous process of review and improvement. In recent years particular attention has been given to the need to ensure that the system of police recruit training produces officers who are properly equipped to deal with the difficult and complex problems which they can expect to encounter in policing today's society.

Following the report "Police Probationer Training" (published in July 1983) prepared by its working party, the Police Training Council commissioned, and has now received the report of, a fundamental review of police probationer training in England and Wales conducted by an independent team based at the University of East Anglia (the stage II review). I am arranging for this report to be published shortly, and have meanwhile placed a copy of it in the Library.

A number of improvements were rapidly implemented following the 1983 report, including an increase from 10 to 14 weeks in the length of the initial course at district training centres; longer periods of attachment to experienced tutor constables; and greater emphasis on training in community and race relations. Nevertheless the stage II report criticises certain aspects of the current probationer training arrangements, and makes recommendations aimed at bringing the development of personal and practical policing skills to the fore in the training process. It proposes changes in the curriculum and in instructional methods and an integrated approach to the training and development of recruits throughout the probationary period, involving among other things closer integration between training provided in forces and that at district training centres.

The Police Training Council has given a general welcome, with some qualifications, to the stage II report, and agreed that work should proceed on the detailed development of revised training courses and procedures, having regard to its recommendations. This work is being co-ordinated by the Home Office, central planning and training unit for police training. I look forward to receiving from the Police Training Council details of the changes in the police training arrangements which are agreed to be necessary in the light of the stage II report, with a view to their full implementation by mid-1988. Meanwhile a number of changes in the instructional regime at district training centres have already been made in response to points raised during the stage II review, and improvements to probationer training procedures will continue to be made as and when the need for them is identified.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Additives

Sir Richard Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to which countries have banned the food additive 154 Brown FK; and what criteria were used in deciding that this additive is safe to eat in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Brown FK is used in the United Kingdom primarily for colouring kippers. Of other EC countries I believe only Ireland includes it in its permitted list. Brown FK is not currently included on the permitted lists of other member states because the need for it is obviated by differing dietary habits. Following a positive safety evaluation by the European Commission's Scientific Committee for Food the EC Commission has issued proposals which, if adopted, would require all member states to permit its use on smoked fish.

I am advised on the need for and safety of food additives by the Food Advisory Committee and the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment. The safety of Brown FK has recently been re-evaluated by the expert committees as part of the FAC's review of the colouring matter in food regulation which will be published early next year.

North Sea

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the policy of his Department towards extending knowledge of the North sea by more intensified monitoring and scientific research.

Mr. Gummer: My Ministry undertakes a considerable programme of monitoring and research in the marine environment in support of its statutory responsibilities. The level of resources committed to this programme is kept under regular review and has more than doubled between 1978-79 and 1985-86.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the policy of his Department towards the avoidance of dumping, as well as incineration, at sea of wastes which could be harmful to the North sea.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 25 November at column 182.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if Her Majesty's Government have exchanged their experience with dumping at sea, and other forms of disposal of severely contaminated dredged materials to be disposed of in the North sea, with other nations.

Mr. Gummer: Yes. Such exchanges take place regularly within the framework of the Oslo convention and the London dumping convention, and through bilateral contacts.

Pigs

Mr. Waller asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to the extent of compliance with the Government' code of recommendations for the welfare of pigs, with the speific reference to the use of alternatives to cage and stalls.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The code of recommendations for the welfare of pigs discourages the use of cages and stalls. Whilst caged systems are rarely used, a pig management survey carried out in 1985 by the Meat and Livestock Commission suggested that some 52 per cent. of sows in the larger pig holdings were kept in stalls or on tethers. I believe within the industry there is now a growing interest in alternatives to these systems.

Cereals Co-responsibility Levy

Mr. Lord asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about the cereals co-responsibility levy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I have received representations from many different sources. The Government have already made clear their attitude to this measure, for example in my statement to the Select Committee on Agriculture on 16 July and in the debate in this House on 5 November.

Green Pound

Mr. Deakins asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the effect on prices received by United Kingdom farmers of the recent European Economic Community Commission proposal to devalue the green pound.

Mr. Jopling: Implementation of the Commission's proposal to devalue the green pound by 6 per cent. for beef and 2 per cent. for sheepmeat would increase support prices in the United Kingdom by about 4·9 per cent. for beef and 1·6 per cent. for sheepmeat, and add about £50 million to farm incomes in a full year.

Sheep (Radioactivity)

Mr. Wigley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table showing for England each reading of radioactive caesium found in sheep and lamb which was over 3,000 Bq/kg, giving the precise level of radioactivity in each case, the date of the reading, and the approximate location.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Results of testing of sheepmeat in England have been placed in the Library of the House. Readings of radioactive caesium over 3,000 Bq/kg in sheep and lambs have been found in Cumbria as follows:

Location	Date	Level Bq/kg
Copeland	2 July 1986	3,665
Copeland	2 July 1986	3,572
Copeland	2 July 1986	3,238
Copeland	12 July 1986	3,691
Copeland	13 July 1986	3,324
Copeland	13 July 1986	3,501
Copeland	13 July 1986	3,155
Copeland	12 September 1986	3,831
Copeland	12 September 1986	3,262
Copeland	8 October 1986	3,645
Allerdale	8 October 1986	3,636
Copeland	8 October 1986	3,879
Copeland	10 October 1986	3,339
Copeland	22 October 1986	3,924
Copeland	29 October 1986	3,240

Green Pound

Mr. Eric Deakins asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated cost to the European Economic Commission budget of the recent European Economic Commission proposal for devaluation of the green pound and the green French franc; if Finance Ministers were consulted about this proposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: The Commission estimates that implementation of its proposal to devalue the green pound and the green French franc would cost the EC budget 95 mecu in a full year. The proposal is under discussion in the Council of Agriculture Ministers and subsidiary bodies. Devaluation of the green pound was requested by the British Government.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 106

SESSION 1986–87

24th November—5th December 1986

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speakers rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
